NEW-YORK CITY.

MOVEMENTS OF EX-PRESIDENT PIERCE.—Mr. PIERCE and wife, who arrived in town on Monday afternoon, are during their stay here the guests of Ex-Senator HAMILTON FISH. The Ex President seems to be enjoying good health, but Mrs. PIERCE is still laboring under the effects of illness. Yesterday Mr. PIERCE came down town, among other things, to look at Mr. CHURCH'S painting of Niagara Falls. During the day he was called on by several of his political and personal friends, and in the evening he dined with a select number of guests invited by his host, among whom were Gov. MARCY, GEORGE BANCROFT, President CHARLES KING, DANIEL LORD, Collector REDFIELD, and CHARLES O'CONOR. To-day, in compliance with the invitation of Dr. CHEEVER, he will pay a visit to the Astor Library. Mr. PIERCE will probably leave town on Friday for Concord, N. H., stopping a few days in Boston. It is rumored that he has purchased a farm in the vicinity of Concord, where he intends to devote his time to agricultural pursuits and enjoyments, and has no idea of accepting any Southern plantation at present.

THE CITY TREASURY ON ITS LEGS AGAIN.—All our officials wear smiling faces now, having heard that the tender hearted capitalists of Wall street have taken pity on the beggarly condition of the Treasury, and supplied the Chamberlain with a fair amount of funds, at the ruinously low rate of 7 per cent. per annum. Mr. STRONT has paid off all the warrants hitherto presented, and has a surplus of $300,000 on hand. This includes the amount to the credit of the Sinking Fund. In correction of our statement that Mr. REYNOLDS, the street contractor, had been paid only $4,000, out of the $20,000 due him for work thus far done, Mr STRONT assures us that all warrants drawn by the Comptroller in favor of Mr. REYNOLDS have been paid, and that on presentation as far as he knows to the contrary. At all events, if they had not been, he thinks he should have heard an outcry from that quarter before this.

CONCERT WITH A PURPOSE.—A concert of music will be given at Mr. BEECHER'S Church on Thursday evening, of which the avails are to have a novel disposition. Master BENJ. P MALLATRATT, one of the Sabbath School children—a Brooklyn boy not twelve years old—has shown himself a prodigy in music, particularly in the use of the violin. Mr BEECHER, Mr. BOWEN, Dr. MCNAIL and some others have undertaken to direct the purpose of the Sabbath School children to send this fellow to Europe to enter upon a course of musical studies at the Royal Academy of Music in London. At his benefit on is to perform several violin solos, and will be assisted by several musical celebrities.

A WALKING MYSTERY.—A short, stout man with clenched hands and a desperate air, has been walking up and down every morning up and down Warren-street, and every afternoon up and down Murray-street—from an early hour of the morning till past 9 o'clock of the evening. This he has followed up for the last twelve days without intermission, sole or rain, wind or cold. Who he is, what he is, what his grievance, nobody knows. Questioned, he answers nothing—pumped, he leaks nothing. He was forced gently into a station one day, when some incoherent remarks about "money enough," "swindlers," &c. were all that could be got out of him.

THE CITY ASSESSMENT ROLLS.—The assessment rolls of the different Wards of the City were delivered on Tuesday to the Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments. Yesterday, they were opened at the office of the Commissioners for review and correction, and will remain open for inspection till the 25th of next month, when they will be given into the Comptroller's hands, who sends them to the Board of Supervisors, thence to be transmitted with final amendments to the Tax Collector for collection. The assessment rolls have not been footed up yet, so that it is impossible to give an official statement of the increase in the valuation of property in the City since last year. It is expected that the increase in real and personal estate will not fall much short of twenty per cent. The tax bill calls for a collection of taxes of over $7,000,000.

The TAX COMMISSIONERS, by the law passed April 16, 1857, have some additional duties imposed upon them. The labors heretofore pertaining to the Bureau of Assessments of the Street Department have been thrust upon their shoulders. By this new arrangement, on the 1st of September, the corps of assessors—forty-four in number—will be swept away, and nine Deputy Tax Commissioners take their place. The assessors thus lose suddenly their salaries, which, just before the passage of the law, were raised to $700 a year for each. Another provision of the new law takes away from the Board of Supervisors the correction of assessments.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

LIFE IN THE FOURTH WARD—A PRIZE-FIGHT ON SUNDAY—THE SECONDS QUARREL AND ONE OF THEM IS KILLED.—The inquest upon the body of James O'Donnell, the young man who was killed in Roosevelt-street, last Sunday, by a stab with a knife in the hands of one Michael Hays, was finished yesterday. It appears by the evidence taken yesterday that O'Donnell and Hays had, on Sunday evening, acted as seconds in a prize fight between two young men named Murphy and Courtney, which took place in the house No. 243 Water-street, and that they were returning from the fight when a dispute arose between them as to the pugilistic powers of their respective principals. From this the fight began, which ended in the death of O'Donnell, by Hays, who stabbed him in the abdomen with a knife.

James Boith, a cooper, residing at No 64 Lorrimer street, Williamsburg, was the first witness examined yesterday. He swore that on the night of the fatal affray he was sleeping in a lodging-house in Roosevelt-street, and that he was awakened by a loud noise in the street; he went into the street and saw two men fighting; they were both down; he heard one of the men screaming loudly, that he had been stabbed and saw blood upon him; he then saw the other man who was fighting, run away, and testified said he had been stabbed cried out, "Stop him—he has stabbed me;" witness pursued the man who was running away, and seized upon him, whereupon he (the man that was running away) dropped a knife upon the street, and then tore himself away and got off; witness afterwards assisted in conveying the wounded man to the Hospital, and on returning he informed the Policeman, whom he had assisted in removing the wounded man, that he saw the man who was fighting with O'Donnell throw the knife into the street; he pointed out the place to the officer, who procured a lamp and on looking found the knife in the place designated. Mathew Tour, a policeman of the IVth Ward, testified to finding the knife in the place and manner designated by the previous witness.

Daniel Clifford, residing in Vandewater-street, being duly sworn, said: I was in Roosevelt street Sunday night when the fight took place, but was too drunk to remember what happened.

Lieut. Langdon deposed that he was in charge of the Fourth Ward Station-house on Sunday night last; that about sixen o'clock the brothers Hays, Thomas and Michael, came in and said that there was a fight in Roosevelt street, and that Eugene Sullivan was the cause of it; that they had been attacked or would be attacked, and Mike Hays said he was afraid to go home without protection; Sergeant White was sent out with the brothers, and walked with them, he said, some distance, no one attempting any violence to them. Soon afterwards, word came to the Station-house that James O'Donnell had been stabbed by Michael Hays, (the man who had just claimed the protection of the police,) and an officer was forthwith sent to look for Hays, but he did not find him. Patrick Murphy, a Fourth Ward Policeman, said he understood that O'Donnell and Hays had acted as seconds to the prize fight which took place at the house of Daniel Ludlow, No. 243 Water street, on Sunday evening, and he was sorry to say that it was his own son who fought with Courtney on that occasion.

James Dillon was sworn, and testified to having seen Hays make a thrust at O'Donnell during the fight. No other evidence was taken. The Coroner addressed the Jury, who then retired, and agreed upon the following verdict:—"That James O'Donnell came to his death from a wound in the abdomen, inflicted by a knife in the hands of Michael Hays; and it is the opinion of the Jury that his brother, Thomas Hays, is an accessory before the fact." Thomas Hays was thereupon committed to the Tombs to answer. Michael Hays has not been yet arrested. He has fled the City.

☞ The Long Island Railroad Company is hereafter to run as it did last night every Wednesday. A train of cars leaving Brooklyn at midnight for Jamaica, and intervening stations. This will be appreciated by hundreds of Long Islanders, who enjoy the privilege occasionally of spending an evening in New York and yet sleeping at home.

ARREST OF AN ESCAPED CONVICT.—JOHN CAIN, who was sent to Sing Sing several years ago, for a burglary committed in Brooklyn, escaped from that prison early in April, and was not seen again by the police until Monday night last, when he applied at the Third District Station House, Brooklyn, for lodging. He was at once identified by Assistant Captain MCLANE, who last evening took him back to his old quarters.

BROOKLYN POLICE DIFFICULTIES.—The Mayor and Deputy Superintendent of Police in Brooklyn are very quiet yesterday. They watch each other very closely, however, to prevent any advantage being taken one of the other. The Mayor's soldiers still insist that he shall maintain the position he has assumed, while the Deputy Superintendent is energetic and confident in the discharge of his duties. The rumor of a threatened attack upon the Deputy Superintendent by the Mayor for language used respecting the conduct of the latter, we are assured has no foundation in fact.

BROOKLYN BOARD OF EDUCATION.—An adjourned meeting of this Board was held yesterday afternoon. The special business was to consider the amount necessary for the support of the schools for 1858.

A Special Committee reported in favor of applying for $210,200.

For general purposes	$133,100
Special purposes	77,100
Total	$210,200
Less money from State	65,000
Leaving amt. to be raised by the city	$145,200

The report was under discussion until a late hour, but no final action was taken.

The new Secretary, GEORGE W. A. STEWART, appeared and assumed the duties of his office.

NEW-JERSEY.

THE GALE IN JERSEY CITY.—The storm of Tuesday night was destructive in Jersey City. Branches of trees were twisted off and thrown about in great confusion, and the sidewalks were overflowed in many places—the sewerage of that slow place, like its lighting privileges, being exceedingly defective.

MEETING OF THE JERSEY CITY COMMON COUNCIL.—A regular meeting of the Jersey City Common Council was held at the Lyceum, on Tuesday evening. Ald. WICKWARE, President of the Board, in the chair. The City Treasurer reported $17,135 33 in the City Treasury. The bonds of the various City officers chosen at the last meeting, were received and placed on file. The rates at which licenses for inns and taverns will be granted was fixed at $30 each. The Committee on Public Lands and Buildings were instructed to inquire into the propriety of erecting a Work House in connection with the City Alms-House. The following City officers were elected:

City Treasurer—A. T. Smith, re-elected.
City Weigher and Measurer—E. D. Riley.
Chief of Police—Thomas B. Kissam.
Chief's Aids—A. J. Baum, Benj. Hainer.

WM. H. JELLIFFE was elected a member of the Board of Education from the Second Ward, and M. J. CASE from the Third Ward.

The subject of appointing Constables was postponed until the next meeting of the Board, to obtain the opinion of the Corporation Attorney on the subject. Through the neglect of the late Common Council to authorize the election of constables there are none in the city, and civil and criminal business requiring their services cannot be transacted. After transacting considerable routine business the Board adjourned to meet on Tuesday evening, May 26.

THE COURTS.—In the Hudson County Court of Oyer and Terminer yesterday, Wm. Thompson, one of those arrested for the burglary on the Cunard Dock Warehouse, in which goods to the value of $3 000 were stolen, was tried. The verdict of the Jury was "Not guilty of burglary, but guilty of larceny." His two associates, James Perry and George Marsden pleed guilty to the charge of burglary.

Matthew Donnell, Wm Walsh and James Craig plead guilty to a charge of burglary and larceny.

Alexander McIver plead guilty to a charge of burglary.

Garret Garrison, convicted of passing counterfeit money, was sentenced to the State Prison for one year, and to pay costs of Court.

WEDNESDAY, May 20—P. M.

There is little or no change in Money affairs. The marked ease of supply on the Street continues and demand loans are easily had at 7 ₰ cent. The offering of first-class paper with the Discount Brokers is less than the amount of means seeking employment at 8@9 ₰ cent. Some Railway acceptances, which had been offering at higher rates, are taken this week at 10 to 11 ₰ cent. The Specie movement this week is less than last, on both sides the account. The whole shipment from Boston today is $1,066,000, most of which went from New-York by express yesterday afternoon. There is no mail steamer from this port on Saturday. For the succeeding week we shall have another arrival from California. The operations of the Sub-Treasury are light. Receipts, to-day, $79,328; payments, $104,410; balance, $13,692,768.

There was rather an extraordinary state of things in the Stock Market to-day, though scarcely a surprising one after all that we have had to report of the desperate gambling operations of Wall street, for the past three or four months. Several of the active Stocks fell from 3 to 10 ₰ cent., without apparent cause or even the pretence of reasonable cause for the change beyond the foregone determination of the operators for the fall to overwhelm the market with contracts on time, and with cash stock borrowed for the purpose. These parties having made large differences for several months past, and virtually driven legitimate business from the Street, seized the occasion of the successful negotiation of the New Stock of one of the prominent Railways to manifest their power to retain the market against every influence which ought of right to advance it. It was stated this afternoon that several prominent and wealthy Bears, who aimed to speculate in the Guaranteed Stock of the Southern Michigan, and subscribed for this purpose to the amount of $100,000 or $150,000 each, were desperate and heavy sellers of the common Stock, for the decline, on findiog themselves disappointed in not getting the New Stock. The latter had all been subscribed and to twice the amount by the bona fide stockholders in the Company, and of course nothing was left for the outside speculators. The common Stock was sold down to 57 ₰ cent. at the Second Board, ex privilege, after selling on Monday at 70¼ and yesterday at 67 ₰ cent. with the privilege attached. Some of the same parties were sellers of New York and Erie at 38@37½ ₰ cent. against 41 @40¾ ₰ cent. yesterday. And after gambling unsuccessfully for a corner in Cleveland and Toledo at 69@70 ₰ cent., and disgusting the real friends of the stock, they threw overboard 6,000 or 8,000 shares at 65¼@64@63 ₰ cent., which they were unable to put upon their confederates at a profit! The other Railroads, though weaker than yesterday in the tone of the dealings, were somewhat steady in price. Reading, 79¼@79; New York Central, 86½@86⅛; Pittsburg, 47⅛; Michigan Central, 94½@94; Galena, 98⅝@98; Rock Island, 97@96¾; Illinois Central, 139¾ cash, 137½ seller 60 days.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the New York and Harlem Railroad Company held to-day, the following officers were elected unanimously for the ensuing year: ALLEN CAMPBELL, President; WM. C. WETMORE, Vice-President; WM. A. WHITEHEAD, Treasurer; WM. H. EMERSON, Secretary.

The subscription to the Guaranteed Stock of the Southern Michigan Company closed this afternoon on a total application for $6,645,088 under the proposals for $3,000,000. In order that no inconvenience should grow out of the closing of the transfer of the Common Stock, the Board of Directors met this evening to award the subscriptions to the extent of four shares of new to ten shares of common stock, as the letter stood registered in the names of the applicants at the close of business to-day. These awards amount to over $2,800,000. And as the sum of about $200,000 is necessarily held until the stockholders abroad can be heard from the further distribution of the New Stock to the common stockholders applying in excess of their pro rata of 40 ₰ cent. is rendered unnecessary.

The negotiation has been an exceedingly fortunate one, and the number and high respectability and wealth of the applicants, as well as the unanimity and promptness with which the common stockholders have responded to the recent report and programme of the Board of Directors constitute the very best vindication of the value and integrity of the property, against the assaults which, for nearly six months past, have been continuously and systematically leveled against its credit to serve one of the most unprincipled stock-gambling movements ever inaugurated in Wall-street. We direct especial attention to the list of awards of the New Stock, as confirming our own repeated declarations during this extraordinary warfare, that the public were the steady and steadily increasing bona fide holders of a very large portion—the list, exclusive of Broker's names, shows five-sixths—of the Stock, while ostensibly it was being sold and battered down, on gambling contracts in Wall-street to the extent of 30,000 or 40,000 shares every week. As the finances of the Company are now placed beyond embarrassment, and their credit above the perils which threatened it from defamation, the next good fortune their friends can wish them is that the Stock, old and new, should be immediately withdrawn as far as possible from the use or control of the Street, and that every Director and Officer, old and new, should make it his especial care to preserve and conserve the market as well as intrinsic value of the property placed under their charge. Such has been the course of the managers of the Delaware and Hudson, Michigan Central, Illinois Central and other important concerns, and the consequence is, that to-day the speculators for a fall dare not meddle with their shares, except at the extreme hazard of paying for their temerity. It will be noticed from the card of the Executive Committee that no interference with the regular dividends on the common Stock is contemplated under the new arrangement, beyond a change in the half-yearly dividend terms from August and February to October and April.

☞ At a late hour to-night the list of awards had not been completed, though it is quite certain it will reach the sum of $2,830,000 exclusive of the reservation for the foreign Stockholders.

Circular.

OFFICE OF THE M. S. AND N. I. RAILROAD COMPANY,
No. 18 William-street, NEW YORK, May 20, 1857.

The Directors of the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad Company present herewith a statement of the applications made for the $3,000,000 of its 10 ₰ cent. guaranteed stock, and of the manner in which the same has been awarded.

This subscription was opened on the 7th of the present month, and at the close of the books this day it reached the sum of $6 645,088, embracing 902 different subscriptions. The subscribers represent, in the aggregate, $ of the general stock of the Company, standing in their names on the books. In compliance with the terms of the original proposition, there has been awarded to each subscriber four shares of the guaranteed stock for every ten shares of the general stock held by him, and in the same proportion for a greater or less amount; and these several awards appear in the list herewith.

In announcing this result, the Directors express their gratification at the prompt and liberal manner in which the stockholders have responded to their appeal. They have thus been enabled to realize, without sacrifice, cash means to an amount sufficient to place the finances of the Company in a satisfactory condition. They consider the unsold assets and securities of the Company sufficient to provide for the remainder of its unfunded debt, and that they may be converted as fast as may be necessary for that purpose.

The entire system of roads of this Company, embracing the Goshen Line just opened, and the Detroit Road and Jackson Branch, now nearly finished, will be in operation in July; and the Board deem this a proper occasion to renew the expression of their confident opinion that the earnings of the Company for the future, as for the past, will be sufficient to provide for interest upon its debt, to meet the annual contributions to the sinking fund, and to make to the stockholders regular and liberal dividends upon both classes of the stock. This result is indeed insured by the past earnings of the road, allowing 50 ₰ cent. for expenses, at which it is confidently believed the road may be operated. The new portion of our road, now about to be opened, will, in the opinion of the Board, add largely to our receipts; and it is believed that $3,000,000 per annum will be the minimum of the earnings for the first year after our roads are fully in operation.

The Board expect to accomplish these results, and to that end will endeavor to introduce the utmost efficiency and economy into every department of the management of the road. The Board have adopted the plan of a guaranteed stock, for a limited amount, distributed pro rata amongst the stockholders, because they regarded it as the most economical and equitable method of providing means, but without any idea of interfering with regular dividends upon the remaining stock of the Company. Inasmuch, however, as the dividends on the guaranteed stock of the Company are made payable in June and December, it has been deemed advisable to change the dividend days up

The Board of Supervisors.

The Board of Supervisors met yesterday afternoon, Supervisor Brenan, President, in the Chair. The following preamble and resolution were presented by Supervisor BLUNT:

Whereas, the law passed April 5, 1857, to establish a Metropolitan Police District, and to provide for the government thereof, gives this Board of Supervisors the power to name the number of Police Patrolmen for the City and County of New-York; and

Whereas, this Board, at its last meeting, fixed the whole number of Police Patrolmen for the City and County of New-York to be five, thereby removing all those Police Patrolmen now on duty, and authorizing the appointment of five others by the Police Commissioners, as provided for in the "Metropolitan Police Bill;" be it therefore

Resolved, That this Board authorize the Metropolitan Police Commissioners for the City and County of New-York to appoint the same number of Police Patrolmen as were on duty before this law went into effect.

Mr. ADAMS opposed the reading. He said the Board would hear nothing in relation to the Metropolitan Police.

Mr. BLUNT hoped his resolution would be treated with respect. He thought the minority had rights as well as the majority.

Mr. WHEEDON moved to lay on the table.

Mr. OWENS said he could not vote understandingly unless he could hear the contents of the paper.

Mr. TUCKER declared the whole proceedings an outrage upon the rights of the minority.

The President would not listen to any further remarks, and the motion to lay on the table was put.

When Mr. BLUNT was called on to vote, he wished to explain. He thought the public required information in relation to the meaning of a resolution passed by the Board, concerning the Police force, on Monday evening last.

The resolution was laid on the table, by a vote of 10 to 8.

The following opinion was received from the Corporation Counsel, relative to the powers and duties of the Board of Supervisors, under the new act:

LAW DEPARTMENT OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.
OFFICE OF COUNSEL TO THE CORPORATION,
No. 51 Chambers-street, May 18, 1857.

To Honorable the Board of Supervisors:

I am requested by your resolution of the 11th of May, instant, to give you my "opinion at an early day, relating to the duties of the Board of Supervisors under the act of the Legislature passed April 15, 1857."

I state in reply that the Revised Statutes (part 1, chap. 12, title 2, art. 1) have heretofore declared what are the powers and duties of the Board of Supervisors, and you are, doubtless, familiar with the general provisions of the law upon the subject. The act entitled "An act relating to the Board of Supervisors of the City of New-York," passed at the last session of the Legislature, places restrictions upon the manner in which the Board shall exercise its functions, rather than creates any new power.

So far as this County is concerned the act reorganizes the Board of Supervisors upon an entire new basis. Hitherto the Aldermen and Mayor and Recorder were, by virtue of their offices, Supervisors of the County. By the act under consideration, the last-named officers cease to be members of the board, and on and after the first day of June, 1858, it is to be composed of twelve persons, to be elected by the people at the charter election preceding, to perform the duties of Supervisors, and their office is to be distinct from that of an Alderman.

The votes of a majority of all the persons so to be elected are made necessary to pass any act appropriating money, and the Mayor of the City sustains the same relation to the preceding Board that he does to the legislature of the Common Council, except that a bare majority of the Supervisors may pass any act over his veto, or disapproval. While in the case of Common Council proceedings, it requires the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to each Board to pass a resolution of which the Mayor may have disapproved.

The fifth section of the act is a limitation of the power of the Board to draw moneys: two facts must exist and concur before any funds of the County can be drawn from the Treasury. There must first be an appropriation for the specified purpose to which the funds are to be applied, and no expenses can be incurred whether it shall have been ordered by the Board or not, unless the money so appropriated be at the time of its appropriation actually in the Treasury.

The sixth section provides in detail new checks upon the mode of disbursing public moneys, the particulars of which I need not recite.

The law is a short one, and has been, together with others, passed at the recent session of the Legislature, relating to this City, published in document form by the Board of Aldermen. Its perusal and study will furnish any needed guide to an understanding of the duties it imposes. I have the honor to be

Your ob't serv't, RICHARD BUSTEED,
Counsel to the Corporation.

The Board then adjourned over to June.

The Board of Aldermen.

The Board of Aldermen met, last evening, Alderman CLANCY, President, in the Chair.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. HARRIS:

Resolved, That a Special Committee of five be appointed by the Chair to take into consideration the formation of a municipal day and night watch, which shall be, in all respects, independent of State authority or control, and shall be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Mayor and Commonalty of the City of New-York, and to report an ordinance therefor.

After the loss of a motion to postpone, the resolution was adopted by a vote of 12 to 7.

The following was offered by Alderman OWENS, and seconded by Alderman DRAKE. The Board refused to hear it read, and it was laid on the table:

Whereas, By the refusal of the Board of Aldermen to entertain the application of the Metropolitan Police Board for the use of the present Station-houses and accoutrements of the late Police force; and

Whereas, Such provisions will involve an annual expenditure of at least two hundred thousand dollars; and,

Whereas, The property so applied for is useless for any other purposes.

Therefore, it is

Resolved, That the Board do now proceed to consider and grant the application of the said Commissioners.

The Mayor's nomination of an Inspector of Vessels, Mr. CHARLES FLETCHER, was called up again, and the Board decided not to confirm it.

The report of the Committee on Streets in favor of setting in the curb of gutter stones on the south side of Vesey-street, between Church-street and Broadway, was received and the resolution adopted.

The following was referred to the Committee on Arts and Sciences:

Whereas, It having been the custom of the Common Council to honor their distinguished public servants by placing their portraits in the Governor's Room of the City Hall; and

Whereas, The position of Chief of Police is one of the most important in this City, and has been filled for many years by GEORGE W. MATSELL, he having discharged the duties confided to his care with zeal and ability, devoting the whole of his time in conducting the Police force of the City, to the great benefit of the citizens in protecting their lives and property; therefore, be it

Resolved, If the Board of Councilmen concur, that the Committee on Arts and Sciences be and they are hereby directed to procure the portrait of GEORGE W. MATSELL, Esq., the present Chief of the Police, and place the same in the Governor's Room in the City Hall, and that the sum of $500 be and the same is hereby appropriated to defray the expenses therefor.

The following communication was referred to the Committee on Finance:

OFFICE OF CHIEF ENGINEER FIRE DEPARTMENT,
No. 21 Elizabeth-street,
NEW-YORK, May 20, 1857.

To the Honorable the Board of Aldermen:

GENTLEMEN: In accordance with my duty, as Chief Engineer, I call your attention to the shocking condition of nearly all the hose now used by the firemen, and desire to impress upon your minds the great necessity of furnishing the Fire Department with 75,000 feet of leather hose at once, and without delay. I cannot be responsible for the safety of the City against a large fire, especially in the neighborhoods that are entirely without good hose, unless an adequate supply is furnished forthwith.

Respectfully submitted,
HENRY H. HOWARD,
Chief Engineer Fire Department.

The Board concurred in the resolution to appoint a Committee to examine the books in the Comptroller's office. The Committee are limited to $500 for clerk hire.

The Board then adjourned over to June.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Thursday afternoon, the President, J. N. PHILLIPS, Esq., in the Chair.

A remonstrance was presented against the proposed widening of Grand-street, between Sullivan-street and Broadway, and its extension to Canal street. The document was referred to the Committee on Streets.

Also the same reference was made in the matter of a petition for the extension of Sixth-avenue, so as to connect with West Broadway.

A remonstrance against the removal of the North River and Sound steamers from their present landing places, was referred to the Committee on Wharves and Piers.

The petition of Hose Company No. 38 for the premises now occupied by Hook and Ladder Company No. 3, was referred to the Committee on Fire Department.

Councilman MCCAHILL presented a resolution calling for the appointment "of a Special Committee of five members to examine the system of keeping and rendering the accounts in the following Departments and Bureaus: the Legislative Department, the Street Department, Law Department, Police Department, Almshouse and Croton Aqueduct Departments, the City Inspector's Department, that of Repairs and Supplies, (lately abolished,) and such portion of the Finance Department, not included in a former resolution."

The matter was laid over under the rules.

A resolution, declaring all streets south of Sixty-fifth-street open, was laid over.

Councilman CRANE offered a resolution authorizing the Mayor to offer a reward of $5,000 for the discovery of the perpetrators of the murder of Dr. Burdell. After brief discussion the matter was laid over.

The Mayor forwarded a communication recommending that the City should purchase the present site of the arsenal, included in the limits of the Central Park. The document has been already presented, and reported in the proceedings of the Board of Aldermen last Monday.

The following resolution was presented by Councilman JONES:

Whereas, By the charter recently passed for this City by the Legislature, the franchises, rights, and privileges, secured by the Dongan and Montgomerie charter, have been by express declaration reserved to us, and whereas, said Dongan and Montgomerie charter confers upon the Mayor and commonalty the authority to create a day and night watch for the protection of life and property, and the preservation of the public peace. And whereas, by a recent effort of the Legislature these invaluable rights have been partially destroyed. And whereas the corporate franchises of the City, as founded on the Dongan and Montgomerie charter, are contracts of perpetual application, and no State, says the Constitution of the United States, can pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Therefore,

Resolved, That a Special Committee of five be appointed for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting forthwith to this body such plan or ordinance as the present exigencies may require for the appointment of day and night watchmen, for the public peace and protection.

Upon this there was no debate. It was adopted. After which, the Board adjourned to Monday.

The Police Commission.

The new Police Commissioners commenced business yesterday morning, at their new quarters, No. 383 White-street. This location is a little east of Broadway and near Centre-street. There is a small tin sign on either side of the entrance, with the words "Metropolitan Police Commissioners." The Board met at 10 o'clock A. M., and after formally dismissing Mr. MATSELL from the office of Deputy Superintendent, adjourned until the afternoon. A notice of dismissal was soon thereafter served upon Mr. MATSELL. It read as follows:

In the matter of George W. Matsell, Deputy Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police.

At a meeting of the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police, at their office, No. 3 Tryon-row, on May 20, 1857, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

Present—SIMEON DRAPER, JAMES BOWEN, JACOB CHOLWELL, JAMES NYE, Commissioners.

The Clerk of the Commissioners having caused GEO. W. MATSELL, Deputy Superintendent, to be called, and he not appearing, the Commissioners proceeded to take testimony in the case, when it was satisfactorily proved that the said GEO. W. MATSELL, Deputy Superintendent, as aforesaid, was guilty of insubordination, in refusing to obey the lawful order of the General Superintendent of Police, served upon him on the 14th day of May inst., and by repudiating the authority of the said Commissioners.

It is hereby ordered and adjudged by the Commissioners aforesaid, that the said GEO. W. MATSELL be, and is hereby removed from the office of Deputy Superintendent of Police of the Metropolitan Police District of the State of New-York.

SIMEON DRAPER, President.
JAMES BOWEN.
JACOB CHOLWELL.
JAMES W. NYE.

GEO. W. EMBREE, Chief Clerk, pro tem.

The Commissioners met again at 3 o'clock P. M., and appointed DANIEL CARPENTER, late Captain of the Fifth Ward Police, to the office of Deputy Superintendent, in place of MATSELL, removed for insubordination. Mr. CARPENTER who was present, was at once sworn in, and will to-day receive from Superintendent TALLMADGE, special instructions.

The General Superintendent caused to be served yesterday evening, upon the different Captains or Inspectors in New-York and Brooklyn, the following notice, and the order annexed:

OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE,
No. 88 WHITE-STREET, CITY OF NEW-YORK.
May 21, 1857.

To CAPT. ———.—Sir: The accompanying order was this day received by me from the Commissioners of Police of the Metropolitan District, which you are directed to promulgate among the officers and men under your command:

DANIEL CARPENTER has been appointed a Deputy Superintendent of Police in the place of GEORGE W. MATSELL, removed, to whom the Captains or Inspectors of Police in the City of New-York will make their reports and returns, at his office, No. 88 White-street, in the City of New-York. F. A. TALLMADGE,
General Superintendent of Police.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT OF THE STATE OF N. Y.

To the General Superintendent of Police:

SIR: You are hereby notified that G. W. MATSELL was this day dismissed by the Commissioners of the Metropolitan District of the State of New-York, from the office of Deputy Superintendent of Police, and you will cause forthwith a notice thereof to be served on the several Inspectors or Captains in the District, with instructions to them to promulgate the same among the men under their command.

By order of the Board GEO. W. EMBREE,
NEW-YORK, May —, 1857. Chief Clerk, pro tem.

Mr. CARPENTER will call upon Mr. MATSELL to-day, and request him to surrender his office and all the papers, books, and appurtenances belonging thereto. Mr. MATSELL, not recognizing the authority of the new Commissioners, will, of course, refuse to comply with this request. An order to show cause will thereupon be served upon him, and thus the matter will again come before the Courts in another shape. This is the programme of arrangements decided on by the new Commissioners, who express themselves disposed to act leniently to the different Captains, who appear willing to do their duty and abide by the law, were they only clear as to what is their duty and what is the law. Yet such of the Captains as are favorable to the new Board will, it is thought, express their preference by hereafter sending their returns and reports to Deputy CARPENTER, at No. 88 White-street, instead of to Chief MATSELL, at the City Hall, as they have heretofore done.

There was a great throng about the office of the new Commissioners yesterday, including a large number of men removed from the department within the past six months, applying for places.

The Metropolitan Commissioners appear gratified with the recent resolution of the Board of Supervisors, allowing them five patrolmen. They have been advised by their counsel that this action of the Supervisors gives them five patrolmen in addition to all the patrolmen heretofore allowed.

At all the station-houses matters progress as usual and in quiet. The new Board have not yet appointed an inspector for the Fifth District, and Messrs. HOBBIGON, MARTIN and FILES continue to act as officers, the men obeying such orders as come from the desk. The great majority of the men in this district, however, are in favor of the new Commissioners, and would not hesitate to "take a hand" in their support, in any way that might be deemed requisite.

Lieutenant BRIAN, of the Nineteenth Ward, has not surrendered his star, and will not do so, as he recognizes only such orders as come from the Metropolitan Commission. In the meantime Mr. MCCANN acts as lieutenant in his place by appointment from Messrs. WOOD and RUSSELL.

The old Board of Commissioners did not meet yesterday, but it is asserted that they will do so to-day, to decapitate such captains and others in the Department as may express a preference for the Metropolitan Board, which the Mayor firmly believes is not in accordance with law.

Thus matters stand.

Brooklyn Police Difficulties.

There was no new transaction of importance relative to Police matters in Brooklyn yesterday. Four of the nine Captains of Police are openly obeying the law, and the fifth, Captain MILLER, read the rules and regulations to his men, and is personally in favor of the law, and at first decided to act under it. He is now on the fence, however. The Mayor still holds his negative position.

The Commissioner of Repairs and Supplies (GRAHAM) manifested his preferences in a peculiar way, yesterday, and by it, placed himself in the same unenvible position occupied by the Mayor. Mr. GRAHAM, under the order of the Deputy Superintendent of Police, furnishes the station houses. Yesterday, Mr. FOLK signed an order for coal for the Fourth District Station-house as "Deputy Superintendent." Mr. GRAHAM did not recognize such an office, and accordingly sent the order back. He had his trouble for his pains, for Mr. FOLK returned an answer that it made no difference to him; he could furnish the coal or not, as he pleased. The coal was furnished under the order of the Deputy Superintendent, after the Commissioner brooded over it awhile.

Naval.

The sloop-of-war Cumberland is about to sail for the west coast of Africa, where she is to relieve the present flag-ship of the squadron. The following is a list of her officers:

Rev. CHARLES A. DAVIS, of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, has been appointed a Chaplain in the Navy.

The Naval Board of Examiners have awarded to WM. H. WEBB, of this City, the contract for building the steam revenue cutter, authorized by act of Congress at its last session. There was much competition.

The Troops Moving for Utah—Vacant Judgeships in the Territory—The Governorship, &c.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 21.

It is estimated that the troops now moving in the direction of Utah comprise about 2,000 men.

There are two vacant Federal Judgeships in the Territory which will soon be filled, and probably another Marshal will be appointed as preliminary to enforcing the civil process. In the event of opposition on the part of the Mormons to this, the military will be employed to enforce the laws and protect the citizens of the United States from Mormon oppression. It is supposed, however, that no necessity for extreme measures will arise.

The Governorship is still unsettled. Although several gentlemen are solicitous for the position, the Government is evidently anxious to select one who will combine personal bravery with administrative talent and unquestioned discretion.

The programme of operations for Utah will be consummated with the least possible delay.

Hon. THOMAS CUNNINGHAM, of Pennsylvania, has resigned his Associate Judgeship in Kansas Territory.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, May 20.

In the Navy Appropriation Bill of the last session is a section authorizing the Secretaries of War and the Navy, under the direction of the President, to employ such officers of the Army and Navy as may be necessary for the purpose of making an exploration, and of verifying the surveys already made of a Ship Canal, near the Isthmus of Darien, to connect the waters of the Pacific and Atlantic, by the Atrato and Turvado rivers, provided that the expense shall not exceed twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. KELLY, of New-York, undertook, a few years ago, to explore the Atrato route, and, at great expense, and much labor, made instrumental surveys of the whole region. The great HUMBOLDT, to whom Mr. NEWELL's maps were communicated, previously approved of his project, having had in constant view the construction of a ship canal between the two oceans, and believing the project to be entirely practicable. Mr. KELLY will be in this City in a few days, and will give further information to the Navy Department on the subject of his project. The Government may, thus, deem it advisable to verify his surveys by a scientific exploration, to be conducted by officers of the army and navy, as provided for by Congress.

It was HUMBOLDT who first suggested the idea of an interoceanic Ship Canal without locks, which should be wide and deep enough to permit ships of any burden to pass, without breaking bulk.

The explorations by Dr. CULLEN in 1849, '50 and '51, of the Darien Isthmus, led to an undertaking by an English Company, at the head of which was Sir CHARLES FOX, to make a ship canal between the Gulf of San Miguel and Caledonia Bay, without locks, and of 150 feet in breadth and 30 feet in depth, at low tide, so as to permit ships of large burden to pass each other, from ocean to ocean, or through a Strait.

GISBORNE and FORD, civil engineers, were sent to test the accuracy of Dr. CULLEN's observations. Their report, made in 1853, was extremely favorable. It is hardly possible to conceive that Mr. GISBORNE would present, as a report, an imaginary exploration. He explored, personally, both ends of the route, from the Atlantic side south, and then from the Pacific side, and left only an interval of five or six miles of an open level plain unexplored, for the reason that he had seen it from both ends of his line of survey. He reported that there was no high land to overcome, except a very narrow ridge, only 150 feet above tide-water which he hardly took into account in his general estimate of the expense of the necessary excavations for the contemplated canal. He states the distance between the navigable waters, on either end of the coast route, to be only thirty miles.

This Government, in 1853, dispatched Lieutenant STRAIN, of the Navy, with a party of 27 men, to explore GISBORNE's route, at the request of the English Company concerned, and with a view to be first with other nations in a guarantee of the security and neutrality of the Canal, should it be found practicable and should it ever be made. Lt. STRAIN's report, as will be remembered, was entirely contradictory of all the principal facts stated by Dr. CULLEN and by Mr GISBORNE, and completely quashed the project.

The other day a new phase was put upon the matter, by the report of the voluntary exploration of Dr CALDWELL, Assistant Surgeon of the U. S. Frigate Independence, a notice of which first appeared in your paper, and was subsequently corroborated by official dispatches to the Navy Department.

Dr. CALDWELL's report corresponds, with remarkable accuracy, with the statement made by Mr. GISBORNE, of his exploration from the Gulf of San Miguel to a point distant only six or eight miles from Caledonia Bay.

Now, if both Mr. GISBORNE and Dr. CALDWELL are not given to romance, the long desired route for a ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien is found. At the Navy Department it is believed that Dr. CALDWELL's report is correct, notwithstanding Lieutenant STRAIN's previous report, contradicting similar statements from GISBORNE. It remains for our Government to pursue the subject.

It was the report of our officer, Lieutenant STRAIN, which nipped in the bud the grand project formed in England of constructing the Darien ship-canal. Dr CALDWELL's report will revive the project, and it becomes our Government now to reconcile the contradictory statements of our officers, or put them to the test of another and more complete exploration.

Meanwhile, as I mentioned above, Mr. KELLY's Atrato canal route is not to be lost sight of, and there is no doubt that the Government will proceed, without delay, to send out an exploring party to verify Mr. KELLY's surveys. X. Y. Z.

Discussion between Frederick Douglass and Charles Lenox Remond.

SECOND EVENING.

The discussion between FREDERICK DOUGLASS and CHARLES LENOX REMOND was continued last night at the Stiloh Presbyterian Church. The building was crowded with auditors, colored and white. Rev. H. H. GARNET presided, as on the previous night; the presidents occupied their places, and the time for commencing the proceedings arrived, when the President announced that Mr. REMOND was sick and unable to attend. As Mr. DOUGLASS was present, it would be for the audience to say what should be done. [Cries of a "Speech from DOUGLASS."] The President asked if such was the pleasure of the audience—if not, would they say what was? Should Mr. DOUGLASS proceed with his reply to Mr. REMOND? [Cries of "Aye," "Aye."]

Mr. FREDERICK DOUGLASS accordingly came forward. He felt somewhat embarrassed, he said, at the position which he occupied. He came there in expectation of replying to his eloquent friend, REMOND, and he was not without hope yet that they would see him there.

Those who took upon themselves to call the American Constitution a Slaveholding document, undertook to brand the framers of that Constitution in the vilest possible manner. To say that the Constitution was intended to uphold Slavery was to assume that the framers of the Constitution were the most flagitious knaves ever known, that they were liars and poltroons, keeping the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the heart. This should not be said without the strongest proofs, and he did not believe such proofs existed. There was not a sentence, nor a syllable in a sentence, of the Constitution, that would lead any one to suppose there was any deceptive intent about it. If that Constitution had dropped down to us from the blue, over-hanging sky, and we had read its contents, there was not a man who could reasonably suppose it was intended to sanction and support the Slave system, but, on the contrary, that everything in it was intended to support justice and equality between man and man. It had been affirmed on the previous evening, by Mr. REMOND, that the Constitution must be Pro Slavery, for the reason that those who supported the Constitution were not only slaveholders, but continued to be so. But what was the fact? A majority of the old thirteen States which adopted the Constitution went home and abolished Slavery themselves. [Applause.] At the time of the adoption of the Constitution, moreover, throughout all the Slave States, there were Anti-Slavery men and women, and, in most States, Anti-Slavery Societies. There were Anti Slavery Societies in Virginia, in Georgia, in North Carolina, in Maryland, and among the members of those societies were the Fathers of the Republic. There were enrolled the names of WASHINGTON, of JEFFERSON, of JAY, of FRANKLIN, men who were brains, heart and soul to the Republic. Abolition was so popular then that if a man uttered Anti-Slavery opinions, in any State, he did not subject himself to discredit.

Mr. DOUGLASS proceeded to consider the provision of the Constitution for the abolition of the Slave-trade in twenty years, and maintained, in opposition to Mr. REMOND, that that provision was really Anti-Slavery in its tendencies. He had Chancellor KENT's authority for it, that at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, it was expected that the abolition of the Slave-trade would be the abolition of Slavery. Cut off the trade from Africa, and the sustenance of blood and pollution at home would be struck, as it were, by dry rot. All the leading Abolitionists of England had the same idea. The venerable THOMAS CLARKSON told him (the speaker) that seventy years ago he thought that the end of the Slave-trade would be the end of Slavery. GRANVILLE SHARP, however, insisted otherwise, and maintained that the Abolitionists had begun at the wrong end, and that to abolish Slavery, it was necessary to abolish the market for Slavery.

At this point Mr. REMOND entered the meeting, and was received with loud applause.

Mr. DOUGLASS proceeded. His opponent argued that the subject of Slavery was discussed by the framers of the Constitution. Undoubtedly it was, and as a result of that discussion it was driven out of the Constitution of the United States. And if the language of any part of the Constitution could be tortured into a doubt whether Slavery were favored or not, we had a right to take advantage of that dubious language, and construe it on the virtuous side.

Mr. DOUGLASS made pleasant reference to the Connecticut negroes, who, when the law forbade them to go out after 9 o'clock at night, without a lantern, carried their lanterns without candles in them, and, when the phraseology of the law was altered, and candles were enforced, carried lanterns and candles, but did not light the candles. The judge that decided that, as this candle-and-lantern law was against liberty, it was to be strictly construed, and that, as nothing was said about lighting the candles, the negroes did not violate the law, only said what everybody admitted—that a law against liberty must be literally construed; whereas a document like the Constitution, in favor of liberty generally, must not be supposed because of some uncertainty of language to favor Slavery. If Christians, who believe the Bible, commit injustice, shall we charge that injustice on the Bible? If Americans, pledged to the Constitution, commit injustice, shall we charge that injustice on the Constitution? Any school-boy could riddle such an argument. Those who argued otherwise, as his opponent did, and all the Garrisonian Abolitionists, were like buzzards, those dirty birds which pass by everything fair and pleasant, and pounce only upon putrid flesh. These men pass by everything in the Constitution which is noble—all its beautiful, liberty-loving provisions, and say, "Oh, they are nothing, nothing!" and if there is anything that may possibly admit of two interpretations, they alight upon that, like the buzzard upon putrid flesh, and seek to extract from it only that which is foul and noisome. For his part, he would say that the American people were a law-abiding people. They loved order. They loved truth and justice, and it was an awful responsibility for any one to accuse them of abiding by a Constitution which was only framed to sanction and support wrong.

Rev. C. L. REMOND then rose to take his turn, Mr. DOUGLASS' time having expired. He did not know that his voice or strength were equal to the task of addressing them. He did not mean to reflect personally on Mr. DOUGLASS, but he was of opinion that DOUGLASS did either himself or the speaker great injustice, in the manner and spirit in which he had discussed the question before them. He had hoped that a manly, magnanimous course would have been pursued; but he was mistaken. For his own part he could not trifle with American Slavery. If ever he felt inclined to do so, he hoped the power to do so would have deserted him. He held the present to be the most important crisis in the history of Slavery.

He saw and felt in everything around him that there was a crisis coming upon us, and he was astonished that colored men should feel so slight an interest in the subject, as to applaud a jest which proved nothing, and give the truths of history the go-by. He charged the Constitution of the United States that it had guarded the hellish institution of Slavery with a watchfulness and zeal greater than was ever done for any other institution in the world. It has guarded Slavery as the apple of its eye. It was absurd to talk of the purpose of the framers of the Constitution to abolish the slave-trade in twenty years, when the fact was that the slave-trade was not yet abolished, for who did not know that the star-spangled banner was now the greatest protector of the slave-trade? When a slaver could not escape with a British or a Portuguese or Algerine hunting at its head, the stars and stripes would secure it. Why was not his opponent—he wished he could call him his friend, but he could not—why was he not manly enough to admit that there was more capital and enterprise enlisted in the prosecution of the slave-trade, and in the maintenance of Slavery, than in any city of the Union? He had been likened to a dirty buzzard bird, because he would not recognize the American Constitution, or acknowledge Americans to be gentlemen, when the fact was that Americans were the greatest liars, rogues and villians that the world had ever seen.

He asserted that Gen. WASHINGTON was the first one who attempted a practical enforcement of the fugitive slave law, by sending a constable to the town of Concord, N. H., to chase his female slave, who had escaped from his service; and only gave up his purpose, and resigned his slave, on the ground that it would create disturbance to recapture her.

If he should visit the city of Washington, he was liable under the very eaves of the capitol of his country to be arrested and imprisoned on suspicion of being a slave, and if he could not prove his title to freedom, would be sold to the rice swamp or cotton plantation to pay his jail fees. The fact that WASHINGTON emancipated his slaves on his death bed, was not necessarily an act of virtue. He knew there was one old servant who worked for him, and fought with him through the war of the Revolution who did not receive his freedom until upon his dying bed. There was not in this whole country a mountain so high, or a valley so deep that could shelter the fugitive. The case of SIMS, BURNS, and and many others were cited.

The immunity of the Slavery propagandists in Kansas was in perfect keeping with all the previous history of the Government. The colored man had never exercised the right of citizenship or of manhood except by sufferance. He was indignant that Mr. DOUGLASS had attempted to associate him with Judge TANEY; and retorted that Mr. DOUGLASS had walked arm in arm with BENNETT, of the Herald, in the last Presidential campaign.

The colored man had to obtain a property qualification in order to go to the ballot-box in this State. This did not prove their equality or manhood. When the colored man was eligible to a seat in the State Assembly, and was found in the jury-box, his equality would be recognized, and not before.

Mr. DOUGLASS said the onus probandi rested upon his friend to do away with the positive statements he had cited as to the anti-slavery features of the Constitution he had named; he adhered to the literal meaning of the document. The prosecution of the Slave-Trade under the protection of the American flag had nothing to do with the question at issue. Crime of every shade and hue stalked abroad in the City of New-York, but it would be absurd on that account to say there were no laws against murder. Omnibuses were a great institution in this City. He got into one, the other day, in Broadway; the cushions were soft, the mirrors were splendid, the company excellent; but he had scarcely got seated, when the driver pulled up his horses, stuck his head down the hole, and sang out: "Hallo, there! you nigger, what are you doing in there? Get out of this omnibus!" This polite invitation was repeated until the voice of John got stifled with rage and exhaustion, when DOUGLASS bawled out, "Drive on! I won't to go to Twenty-third-street." And he did drive on, though at one time matters looked as if there would be a set to, and DOUGLASS regretted he hadn't on his working clothes. Rev. Mr. PENNINGTON and other colored persons had been dragged out of the omnibuses, and they could get no redress. What then? Should they raise the cry, "No union with omnibuses—down with omnibuses," and go to cutting up the cushions and staving up the coaches? Certainly not; but they should change the drivers; they should turn out the miserable pack who now administered the Government, and gave the abominable decisions in the Courts, and place honest, freedom-loving people in their place. He condemned the advice to insurrection as ill-advised, and as certain to result in the extermination of the colored race.

The dissolution of the Union was the worst step that could be taken. Because his house was infested with rats, should he cry out, "No Union with rats," and desert his house, or should he poke 'em out? He had no idea of surrendering so easily. He used to sing, with his Methodist brethren:

"Oh, we have been wid ye,
And we still is wid ye,
And we will go wid ye to the end."

He meant to stick to the omnibus.

Mr. D. went on in this strain, exciting great merriment in the audience, until time was called, and Mr. REMOND rose to reply.

The remarks of Mr. REMOND were a recital of the main points on which he relied to establish the Pro-Slavery intent of the Constitution, and were well and forcibly put, carrying the audience with him, and securing their applause.

Mr. DOUGLASS followed, occupying his ten minutes in recapitulating the points of his argument in disclaiming any offensive personalities, and in complimenting his opponent for his learning, eloquence, &c. Mr. REMOND waived his right to occupy any further time. The speakers had signified their willingness to leave the question without a vote, so after a few notices had been read, the audience adjourned by invitation to the basement, where, over ice-cream and confectionary, the disputants held a soirée.

Marine Matters.

Mr. J. W. WALKER, wrecker, who saved the schooner Wide Awake, attempted to row out of Lewes Creek this morning, to assist and take off the crew from the schooner *D. C. Mr. WALKER, and one other young man, were taken home senseless, but are likely to recover. The bodies of the two white men are not yet recovered. This latter remark is not one of those on seeing which the Grand Duke Constantine asked was it intended to pluck more chestnuts out of the fire with French fingers for English use. Whether his imperial highness will favor us with any pleasantries at French expense is still doubtful, for the death of our Queen's relative, the Duchess of Gloucester, affords an excuse for not giving him a very pressing invitation thither, and without it one can hardly expect he will come, particularly as the total failure of the Russian railway scheme on our Money Market will not have sweetened his sentiments towards us.

One other paragraph in the speech announces simply that the treaty has not been ratified relative to Honduras, and not a word of remark has that paragraph created either in the press or in Parliament, although one would have imagined that the state of affairs in respect to Panama would have imparted to it some significance. Concerning the latter subject, perhaps the accompanying view as to the rationale of the matter will amuse, if it do not instruct, you. It is taken from the ministerial print of this evening, under its Parisian correspondence:

"The intelligence from the United States relative to the dispute between that country and New Granada, has created much sensation in Paris, where the real state of matters in Central America are better known than in England. The attitude adopted by the petty republic, he attributed to the influence of the Roman Catholic party, which longs to bring into action the convention signed in Washington in December last, by the representatives of the Republics of New Granada, Ecuador, Salvador, Mexico, Peru, Costa Rica, Venezuela, and Ecuador, in which these States bound themselves to unite in opposing the attack of a foreign State, or any individual member of the contracting Powers. This Convention was brought about by the secret influence of the priesthood, acting on orders from Rome, rather than by any intelligent, patriotic inspiration on the part of the collective Governments. The hold of Rome on the once all submissive population of Southern and Central America is rapidly evaporating, and a grand stroke of policy can alone rescue it from utter extinction. The present aim of the Court of Rome is to labor to the utmost in removing the petty jealousies which divide the meriodonal Republics in question; to endeavor to form a federation of the States, which might at a later period be transformed into a great Catholic Monarchy, headed by one of those obedient and beloved lambs of the flock—a Prince of the House of Bourbon.

Something much more deserving of your consideration will be found in the remarkable article from yesterday's Times on this subject, which is regarded here as being attributable to certain "manifest destiny" inspiration, analogous to that exhibited by Mr. Oliphant in Blackwood, as referred to in a preceding communication.

One other topic not altogether of indifference to you, touched upon in the Queen's speech, is that in reference to the satisfactory (governmental) settlement of the Sound Dues, in connection with which it may be observed here that the Danish Ministry remains incomplete, M. M. Botow and Moltke, as a telegraphic dispatch received last night states, having refused to enter the Cabinet, and left Copenhagen. Danish matters are destined to come under the notice of Parliament in more forms than one this session, for public attention is being again called to the question of what are called the Danish claims, which properly are the claims of British merchants for compensation for the seizure of their property by Denmark as retaliation for the bombardment of Copenhagen and seizure of the Danish fleet, without a previous declaration of war, in 1807. The seizure of British property was only provisional, until the sudden confiscation of Danish property by Great Britain provoked the Danes to condemn it. The violation of every principle of justice and of international law on the part of the British Government has led the highest authorities to declare the claims of the British merchants for compensation to be perfectly good; and, not only did Mr. Perceval, in 1810, declare that the proceeds of the confiscated Danish property had been invested for that express purpose, but the House of Commons, in 1835, voted £190,000 for the liquidation of a portion of them. The amount of the claims is about £1,000,000, while the sum realised by the British Government out of the transaction was upwards of £3,000,000. While, therefore, there are, or should be, ample funds for the purpose, the claimants contend that all the losses resulted from the same decree, and, consequently, rest upon the same grounds.

It was expected that something would be said in the royal speech relative to some of the British Colonies, particularly Australia, and more especially as it is known that an organic change is about to be introduced in the machinery of our Colonial office; but not a word was uttered either in the speech or in the course of the brief debate upon it. There are materials, however, at hand that prompt a paragraph here of a somewhat American character.

The annual blue-book of the British Colonies has been issued this week, and, except only as regards the West Indies, exhibits a state of prosperity and content unsurpassed in any former year. From the West India Islands, however, and more especially from Jamaica and Grenada, the oft-repeated story of abandoned estates, ruined planters, and idle negroes, is again repeated, and probably will be until the present generation of proprietors has passed away. How much credit is to be given to these reports, in the majority of cases, is apparent from the fact of wages being but 9d. per day, and from the answer of the Lieutenant-Governor of Tobago to a question of Mr. Hincks, late Prime Minister of Canada, and now Governor of the Windward Islands. He states that the colored inhabitants have acquired a considerable amount of property, many having raised themselves to the position of lessees of sugar estates. Many offers have been made to proprietors by negroes to rent estates, and to repair the works at their own cost; indeed, in one instance, three negroes took the lease of an abandoned sugar estate, and repaired both the mill and the boiling house. Several other instances, of equal enterprise, we are told, might be adduced. "The negro, when working for himself," says Mr. Shoatland, "and taking the average of the year, performs a considerable quantity of work. When working for hire, he gives his employer the smallest quantity he finds will be submitted to." The dispatch of the Governor-General of Canada, Sir E. Head, displays a picture of prosperity and contentment among all classes which is far more satisfactory than the fruitless wails from the tropics. The working of the Reciprocity Treaty is shown in a statement of the exports and imports in 1853 and since—the value of the whole trade with the United States having increased from fifteen millions of dollars to forty four millions. Sir E. Head states that when he met Mr. Myron Clark, Governor of the State of New York, in December last, at Toronto, that gentleman assured him that the working of the treaty was as beneficial to the United States as it has been to the Canadians. The Lieutenant-Governor of New-Brunswick also bears testimony to the benefits derived by the colonists from this treaty. Much of the produce of that Province, both lumber and fish, which, if such a period of commercial depression as 1855 had occurred previous to the treaty, would have been of little value, if not absolutely unsaleable, found a ready market in the United States. Even as regards Newfoundland, where it was not adopted without considerable opposition, the results of the treaty have been highly advantageous. The export of codfish from St. John's to the United States in 1854 was but 14,363 quintals, and in the following year it rose to 60,257 quintals, while the total exports for the year ended June 30, 1856, amounted in value to £92,209, against £77,810 for the previous year. The enhanced price of both seal and cod-liver oil in the United States markets, however, should be taken into consideration as affecting, to no small extent, this aggregate augmentation in value of the exports of Newfoundland.

You will perceive that there is not the most distant allusion to reform in the royal speech. This led Roebuck to give notice of a motion for the amendment of the representation, but he withdrew it on the assurance of Palmerston that Government would in the course of the week following upon the present session devise a measure to be introduced next session that would probably meet all reasonable requirements. This is taken to be so perfectly conclusive that the whole subject of reform, root and branch, may be regarded as completely hurled for the present. Indeed Palmerston in the most defiant tone, said that if the House didn't like this proposition, the malcontents had better say so at once, and bring the point to an issue, which nobody who is anybody seems in the least inclined to try. There are some few notices of motions on the books of a minor reformatory kind, but not of a character that will in any way affect the paralysis that has now befallen the matter for the remainder of 1857. Neither Tory, nor Feelite, nor ambiguous Whig said a word in the debate; and the address was voted with unanimity after but an hour that both Houses of Parliament had adjourned ere the debate on almost any other occasion of a like kind within living memory could be considered to have well begun. A revolution has evidently been brought in, "ye manners and ye customes of ye Englishe" in a senatorial sense, and what it may portend nobody ventures to conjecture.

Palmerston is by no means without his perplexities, arising from the extraordinary distribution of capacities in the cabinet, great and small. Both the Peers, Mr Roebuck as well as his brother Fred[illegible], are now out of office, and in all likelihood will ever remain so, for though one had great industry and the other greater audacity and self reliance, each has been a signal failure, the one pitiable, the other ridiculous. Sir Roebuck has been removed, or has removed himself, from the Admiralty, in probable apprehension of the visit of Constantine, whom he so flagrantly insulted in his late speeches; while the humiliation thus brought about is trebly galling by the proffered command of Devonport to Admiral Sir C. Napier, who was so undeservedly lampooned for proceedings in the Baltic that he could not have obviated. He has enhanced his well known credit for disinterestedness by declining the post offered to him, though it is one of the retiring prizes of his profession, and would in many respects have been very grateful to him.

The social, moral and educational condition of England continues to provoke daily increasing discussion of a pressingly important nature, especially in regard to what Miss Martineau calls the great sin of great cities, but which city and country have alike resolved to shut their eyes and ears to while ringing their hands over it. The most extraordinary of the May meetings this year will certainly be that convoked by Mr. Robert Owen, especially if all the people he has invited to attend should happen to be present in St. Martin's Hall next Thursday. The invitations which that remarkable character has published in the columns of a paper conducted by his oldest disciple, Mr. G. J. Holyoake, is so comprehensive and cosmopolitan that, could it be realised, it would throw the singular procession of Anacharsis Cloots (friend of the human race) far into the shade, and rival, if it did not surpass, the motley gathering which Nishnei-Novgorod witnesses every June. The principles upon which the venerable Harmonist proposes to reconstruct society and regenerate mankind, are so well known that his programme calls for little comment. His announcement of the Millennium only differs from those he has been making for the last fifty years in the change of phraseology consequent by his conversion from the materialism which pervaded his former teaching, to that advanced Spiritualism which embraces table rapping and its kindred phenomena.

Owenism, however, notwithstanding this change in the opinion of its founder, is still announced as "the only true universal practical religion," with the promulgation of which his advertisement vaguely connects "the new spiritual manifestations," which served the leading journal on Wednesday for the text of a whole column of loaded type.

The publicity of its pages had previously been refused to Mr. Owen's announcement, and hence its appearance in the Reasoner, to whose weekly four pages the numerous organs of unbelief and the various theories of social reform which existed a dozen years ago have gradually dwindled. It is believed by some that all those protests against the institutions of the present which have taken the various forms of Deism, Materialism, Socialism, and Chartism, have died out, but it is only necessary to look a little below the surface to perceive that they still exist, are as widely diffused as ever, and, though now almost dormant, only require some event to disturb the existing quietude, in order to rear their hydra-like forms once more. Mr. Holyoake, who is now a truer representative of the first phase of Owenism than Mr. Owen himself, still has disciples enough to support a paper; and lectures are still delivered on Sunday evenings, to considerable audiences of working men, on such topics as Christ and Crishna, the Moral Disadvantages of Christianity, and the Philosophy of the Bible. The existence of such opinions, side by side with belief in spirit-rapping, table-turning, and witchcraft, (some extraordinary stories of which have lately gone the rounds,) afford matter for deep study. Probably each extreme works for good, by acting as the counterpoise and antidote to the other, and will continue to do so until ignorance is finally expelled from the world, should such era of light ever dawn upon it.

AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

Grand Review in Honor of Duke Constantine —The Imperial Cortege—Immense Assemblage—Speech from the Russian Prince—Mr. Sumner's Refusal to Accept a Public Dinner—Miscellaneous News and Gossip of Paris.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

Paris, Thursday, May 7, 1857.

The Grand Review yesterday, in honor of the Russian Prince, embraced sixty thousand men. In this number the Imperial Guard figured for twenty thousand men, and the first military division, the garrison of Paris, for the balance. The National Guard of Paris, (citizen soldiery,) which numbers sixty thousand men, was not represented.

The Emperor, in the uniform of a General of Division, and wearing the grand cordon of the Order of St. Anne of Russia, had at his right the Grand Duke Constantine, in the uniform of a Grand Admiral, and wearing the grand cordon of the Legion of Honor, presented to him two days before by his Majesty; on his left, the Prince Napoleon and the young Prince of Nassau, (candidate for the Viceroyalty of the United Danubian Principalities.)

In the numerous and brilliant suite of his Majesty, the names of the Crimean heroes known to the world, the enemies of yesterday, were strangely intermingled, thus: Marshal Pelissier and Gen. Gortschakoff, brother of the Gortschakoffs; Generals Todleben and Niel, the two opposing engineers at Sebastopol; Gen. Lunars and Marshals Canrobert and Bosquet; Generals d'Allonville and Dannenberg; Admirals Hamelin and Berkens, Captain of frigate, Prince de Bostoff, Prince Espere Ochtomski, and the Baron Boyer; Marshals Vaillant, Magnan, Baraguay d'Hilliers, Generals Mellinet, Morbie, and Generals Lipkandi and Manzuawy; Generals Count Kisselsff and Count Cheptonitch, and a large number of other French and Russian. Prussian, English, Sardinian, Wurtembergian and other officers, in all, perhaps, two hundred. It was a suite of rare distinction, and one which would have done honor to a sovereign much less parvenu than Louis Napoleon.

Immediately in front of His Majesty marched abreast eleven Generals, aids-de-camp; further on the platoon of His Majesty's ordonnance officers; still further on the Majesty's Masters of the Horse, and at the head of the cortege a squad of the Cent Gardes. The balance of the corps of the Cent-Gardes closed up the cortege.

The cortege was followed to the Champ de Mars by the carriage of the Empress, who was accompanied by the Emperor's aunt, the Grand Duchess Stephanie, of Baden, and by carriages in which were seated the Princess Mathilde, the Prince and Princess Murat, and other members of the Imperial family. The Empress followed the suite through a part of the review, and, when the defile commenced, drove up to the Ecole Militaire, and took her seat on the balcony, in the midst of her maids of honor and the ladies of the Ministers.

The crowd that witnessed this grand review was immense. Since the distribution of the eagles on the 10th of May, 1852, no such crowd has been seen in the neighborhood of the Champ de Mars. The coup d'oeil was magnificent. The spectators, arranged on the sloping borders of the field and in the tribunes, formed the frame; the army of 60,000 men, standing motionless in eight lines a mile long, with the Emperor and his suite moving up and down, formed the picture. Even the Russians, accustomed as they are to large bodies of armed men, must have been struck with this sight.

Constantine made a speech at the Count Kisseleff's dinner. First the Count Kisseleff drank to the health of the Emperor of France, then Marshal Vaillant drank to the health of the Emperor of Russia. The Duke of Malakoff then rose and toasted the Russian Army, a toast that was loudly cheered by the Frenchmen present. The Grand Duke Constantine responded as follows: "To the French Army, which, far from degenerating, has grown in the esteem and the admiration of the world! To the brave French soldiers, whom one is proud to meet as adversaries on the field of battle! Whom one is more happy still to meet as friends, in the midst of the prosperities of a fruitful peace! I thank God, gentlemen, who gives me the occasion to proclaim openly my thought before the chiefs who represent the flower of this valiant army! I drink to the French Army!"

The Prince likes Paris so well that, in all probability, he will prolong his stay beyond the time indicated in the programme.

A few days ago the Poles present in Paris were united at a grand dinner at the Trois Frères, given in honor of one of their national fêtes. The young Prince Charles Ryska, who presided, returned from a visit to Germany expressly to preside on the occasion. It was not observed, until at the moment when the toasts were to commence, that the flag of Russia, in honor of the Grand Duke, was floating from the windows of the establishment. Great excitement prevailed for a moment, and all proceedings ceased until the proprietor had apologized and removed the offensive flag.

The Duke de Rovigo, in an article on the death of the poet Alfred de Musset, commences with the following bit, apropos of the visit of the Grand Duke Constantine: "Alfred de Musset died on Friday last. He was wrong; at the epoch in which we live, the thing is to live, if it were only for curiosity, only to see defiling on our boulevards the descendants of the Kings of 1815."

I believe I have already told you that preparations were making for a dinner to Mr. Sumner in this city. Mr. Sumner has very properly refused the tendered honor in a letter which was published in French in the Journal des Débats, and afterwards in English in Galignani's Messenger. You will see by this letter that Mr. Sumner refused the compliment ostensibly on the ground of his health, but I have reason to believe that he placed his refusal upon less personal grounds; and in this light the refusal does him more honor than would the dinner. He no doubt thought that the American name had suffered enough disgrace by the desecration of its Senate floor, without displaying the affair here before foreigners. I believe it was Napoleon who said that "dirty linen ought always to be washed at home." There was an evident impropriety in seeking to bring up before foreigners, and on foreign soil, a quarrel so peculiarly domestic as that which has aroused so much sympathy for the Massachusetts Senator; and certainly we, who are living abroad for the moment, have suffered enough criticism and enough humiliation on this very subject without seeking so directly to provoke a renewal of the attacks.

In this view of the case, however much I may sympathize with the motives of the gentleman who placed the letters in the hands of the newspaper editors for publication, I cannot but condemn that act. Since the dinner did not take place, this bringing the subject before the French public in the columns of the leading French paper, was entirely gratuitous, and not only useless but mischievous.

You will see by Mr. Sumner's letter, that the letter of the Committee must have been ambiguous, since Mr. S. makes use of the phrase, that "he may be permitted to believe that the intended compliment was in response to his public services," etc. The Committee, indeed, may have thought of the impropriety of mentioning on foreign ground the events of last year, connected with Mr. Sumner's name, and sought by the phraseology of their letter to avoid this construction; but it would be impossible now to mention Mr. Sumner's name without associating it in the mind with the scene of the Senate Chamber. Besides two Ex Presidents, several Ministers, and many distinguished members of both the Senate and the House, have been here within the last few years, and no one proposed giving them a dinner. So that but one conclusion is rational, and if the Committee thought to avoid this conclusion by the phraseology of their letter of invitation, the means adopted were singularly inadequate to the end aimed at.

The name of Bustead has been "consecrated" in France and passed into the state of an adage. They speak now of "Busteads of the law," "Busteads of justice," as they do of Don Quixottes of chivalry, Iagos of honor, &c. He stands for the representative of the sans culotte lawyer of the criminal courts. The name Bustead has made its entry into the French language as an adjective of significant and extended application.

The disease of Alfred de Musset was hypertrophy of the heart. His sickness was of but short duration. It manifested itself in the form of fainting paroxysms, in the final one of which he announced himself that it would be his last. In the fifth or sixth paroxysm, after having suffered a great deal, he fell into a deep sleep of stupor, and thus passed off without apparent transition into death. His was the seventh fauteuil of the Academy, and he was its eleventh occupant.

Fourteen prisoners were yesterday brought before the Police Correctionnelle under the charge of being members of a secret political Society, of carrying prohibited arms, and of the detention of munitions of war. These were the individuals who attempted on the 24th of February last, the anniversary of the Revolution of 1848, to hold a meeting in commemoration of that event on the Place de la Bastille. The trial has been adjourned a week.

M. Gaillardet, former editor of the Courrier des Etats Unis, the author in name of "La Tour de Nesle," lately made application to M. Buloz, proprietor of La Revue des Deux Mondes, to purchase that journal. M. Buloz, who holds to his journal with the tenacity of a miser, demanded of your former confrère if he knew that he asked a million and a half of francs for his journal? M. Gaillardet replied that he was prepared for that answer, and thus M. Buloz was obliged to ask for time to consider. M. Gaillardet, it is said, was acting principally for his friend, M. Emile de Girardin, who is already tired of his retreat.

The bill for the purchase of Longwood, on the island of St. Helena, has been presented to the Corps Legislatif. The sum destined for this acquisition is 180,000 francs. The bill informs us that Longwood has been turned into a farm; the chamber where Napoleon drew his last breath is now a stable! The ground where he was buried has also suffered a deplorable profanation. The Americans, it is said, with a view to a speculation, disputed the possession of Longwood with the French. But thanks to the alliance, France was advised of these movements by England, and was given the preference in the purchase.

The "Lisette" of Beranger, the faithful friend with whom he has lived almost since his youth, Madame Judith, has just died, preceding to the grave the one to whom she had devoted her life. A friend and great admirer of Beranger, who wished to make him a handsome life pension, but who knew that the poet would not receive it if he knew it, settled on Madame Judith a handsome sum during her life, knowing well to what use it would be applied. But now this resource is suddenly removed from the aged poet, and he will be thrown upon the meagre income paid him by M. Perrotin for the right of publication of his works. This sum, I believe, is 1200 francs. He obstinately refuses all offers of gifts or pensions which his great genius has gained for him. M. Jules Lecomte is responsible for these statements.

Not only have we at this moment a large number of Russian Generals, Admirals, and Princes within our walls, but the editors of the principal journals of St. Petersburg and Moscow are also here, sending home, no doubt, long reports of the honors paid their favorite Prince and their talented generals.

A trial which is moving the Church in France is now going on at Grenoble, and had its origin in the muzzle of Notre Dame de Salette. The trial is exceedingly curious in some of its details, and the public are in the expectation of some wonderful disclosures.

A young medical man, Dr. Sales, practicing at Chalons, performed lately the operation of tracheotomy (opening the windpipe) on a child that had croup and malignant sore throat. Blood escaped into the windpipe from the wound, and in order to save the child's life, the Doctor immediately applied his mouth and sucked the blood out. Next day alarming symptoms declared themselves in the region of the lungs, his respiration became difficult, and in forty-eight hours from the time of the operation Dr. Sales breathed his last.

You state that Home, the spiritualist, is at Springfield, Mass. A Madrid journal states that he has just arrived in that City, that he refuses to give sittings, and that he intends soon to resume his journey towards the South, whither he is traveling for his health. Which is the "real old Dr. Jacob," or has Home the power of ubiquitous re-production?

MALAKOFF.

The New British Parliament.

LORD PALMERSTON'S SPEECH ON THE ADDRESS.

The address in the House of Commons, in answer to the Queen's speech, was moved by Mr. Dodson and seconded by Mr. Buchanan. The House was not disposed to hear a debate, but before the vote was taken,

Lord Palmerston said: The House, Sir, seems so little disposed to go into any discussion upon the various subjects to which the Speech relates that I certainly shall not take upon myself to do so; but reference has been made to one or two points upon which I feel it is necessary for me to say a few words on the part of the Government. I would first allude to the topic mentioned by the honorable member for Dumfries. An address was moved and agreed to last session with respect to the establishment of a Department of Justice. The question was brought forward by the right honorable gentleman, the member for Dublin University. We stated at the time that it was a subject full of difficulty as regards the mode in which the proposition should be carried into execution, and in that opinion I am sure the right honorable gentleman himself will concur. I can only say, therefore, that we have under our consideration the best means of accomplishing the object which the right honorable gentleman and the House had in view, and I trust we shall be able to propose to the House some arrangement which shall effect the purpose contemplated in the address. [Hear, hear.] The next point with the noble lord the member for Middlesex is that, considering the shortness of the period during which Parliament can sit in the present session—[hear, hear]—considering also the great importance of the many practical measures of improvement which we have indicated in the Speech, and which will be proposed to the House, it would be highly inexpedient to engage in discussions upon the large and sweeping question of a change in the representation of the people in Parliament, because such discussions could not by any possibility lead to any conclusive result in the present session. [hear, hear,] while it is quite obvious that discussions begun in one session and continued to another could only unsettle the minds of men, and give rise to anticipations which would embarrass those who on a future occasion might have to propose measures to the House. [Hear, hear.] But, Sir, Her Majesty's Government quite admit that it will be their duty during the period that will intervene between the conclusion of the present session and the beginning of the next to take the subject into their fullest and most deliberate consideration. [Hear, hear.] It would be unsuitable in me, at a moment when the Government have not had an opportunity of giving to the question the consideration which is due, to say anything with respect to the details of measures to be proposed in a future session, which would imply anticipatory conclusions, which, by fixing the Government upon one point or another, might lead afterwards to embarrassment if the result should not coincide with the expectations excited, and which, at all events, would interfere with the freedom of our deliberations in the meantime. [Hear.] It will be, however, I believe, the duty of the Government in the ensuing recess to give that matter their most serious and anxious consideration, and I hope—indeed I am confident—that at the beginning of the next session we shall be able to propose to Parliament some measure which will be calculated to satisfy the just expectations of any parties, and to correct any defects which may exist in the present Reform Act, as well as to admit to the franchise those classes of persons who at present are excluded from it. [Hear, hear.] More than this I trust the House will not expect me to say at present. [Hear, hear.] If this House has confidence in the present Government, they ought to show it by exercising forbearance, and by not pressing in this session for any declaration upon particular points in reference to representative reform. If this House has not sufficient confidence in us to wait until the next session for the production of measures upon a subject requiring the gravest consideration, then it had better say so, and at once place the administration of the affairs of the country in other hands. ["Hear, hear," and a laugh.] I am glad to be able to congratulate the House, as Her Majesty, in her gracious speech has done, upon the prospect which the condition of European affairs at present holds out of a continuance of peace. I trust that the animosities engendered by the great conflict in which a part of Europe was engaged for two years, will give way to the more peaceful relations and intercourse which have succeeded that war, and that the great Powers who were engaged in that contest, feeling that their interests are identified with the maintenance of good relations with one another, will cast into oblivion all those sentiments of hostility which the conflict for a time may have created, and permit them to be replaced by feelings of good will and friendship, as more beneficial to all countries. I trust, too, that all the great Powers of Europe will discover that freedom of commercial intercourse, and a development of the national resources, form not only the best system of policy for the interests of their particular countries, but that they also create a link of union with other countries which otherwise might occupy an adverse position. The more a Government developes the resources of a country, while with one hand it increases its powers of self defence, on the other it creates a daily increasing bond of interest, which is so connected with the maintenance of peace as to dissuade any Government from the prosecution of an unjust or unnecessary war. [Hear, hear.] There was one other subject to which my noble friend alluded upon which I must say a word. I refer to the question of church-rates. [Hear hear.] That, also, is a subject, as the House is aware, which abounds with practical difficulties. However, the subject is now under the consideration of her Majesty's Government, and I hope we may be able to propose some measure which will get rid of the difficulties at present existing. I hope, however, the House will not expect us to introduce any measure until we have made up our minds upon the matter, but I can assure them the subject is under consideration, with an anxious desire to frame a measure which may be satisfactory to all parties. I am not aware that there is anything further with which I have to trouble the House at present.

Mr. Roebuck—I congratulate the House that we have now a distinct pledge from the noble lord that he intends next year to bring forward a measure of Parliamentary reform. There is no mistake as to his intentions. The noble lord tells us that in the present state of the representation there are great anomalies—that various classes are not now represented in this House who deserve to be represented, and that it will be the duty of Her Majesty's Government during the recess, to frame such a measure as will confer the representation upon these classes. Accepting these statements accordingly as I have described them, I can only say I am not one of those who might be inclined to interrupt the course of business in the present session. [Hear, hear.] Having a clear and distinct statement from the noble lord that it is his intention to deal with the question of Parliamentary reform, I shall not interfere with his efforts by throwing any obstacle in his way. Such being the interpretation which I have placed upon the words of the noble lord, I thought it only right to state to this House, in plain and simple language, my view of the pledge which I believe he has given us to-night. [Hear, hear.]

The Address was then agreed to.

THE REFORM QUESTION.

From the London Times, May 8.

The new House may not be disposed to hasten its own premature destruction, but of course such a fund of political capital as is furnished by the Reform question will not be neglected by a certain class of politicians. We shall probably have no actual full-grown Reform Bills during the present Session, after the declaration of Lord Palmerston yesterday. The Ministry has resolved to devote the short period of this year which remains for legislation to the passing of practical measures which are likely to meet with no obstacle, except such as may arise from the complexity of their details and the natural inertness of the assemblies which are to sanction them. During the recess they promise to devote themselves to Parliamentary Reform. The details of their measure will be known in February, 1858, and not earlier. Lord Palmerston will give no sign of his intentions, and he is wise; for, whatever might be the scope of his Reform Bill, he would be at once under a double fire. The allied but diverse hosts of the Opposition would attack him from different quarters. Government would be denounced as revolutionary by one party, and retrograde by another. It would be a fine thing for the Conservatives to exhort an indiscreet pledge against a large Reform by inveighing against any proposed measure, while the ultra Liberals rouse their respective localities against the Minister who held out no hope of the Ballot or the Lodging Suffrage. So Lord Palmerston will say nothing. Sufficient unto the session is the labor thereof. He says what has been done, and what it is intended to do. The Treaty of Paris has been executed, the Neufchatel business is coming to a close, the settlement of the Persian difference has been completed, the redemption of the Sound Dues has been carried into effect. On the other hand, there are negotiations respecting Central America, and there is work to be done on the Chinese coast; then there are the Budget and the Law Reforms. Attend to these, he says in effect, and you will not find the time too long for the labor. We shall be much surprised if next August we can congratulate him upon the complete fulfillment of even the modest programme with which he has opened the first session of his new Parliament.

The United States and New-Granada.

From the London Post (Ministerial).

We learn from intelligence just received from America, that the United States Commissioner has broken off negotiations with New-Granada, and that an American squadron is about to be sent to the coasts of the Isthmus for the purpose of exacting that redress which diplomacy has hitherto failed in obtaining. The American version of the difficulty is this: That in April, 1856, a number of American citizens were massacred on the line of the Panama Railroad—that the authorities of New Granada are perfectly unable to provide protection for life along that most important inter oceanic communication, and that they pertinaciously refuse to afford satisfaction for the past and security for the future. On the other hand, the Government of New Granada insists that the quarrel which ended in bloodshed and murder was provoked by the overbearing insolence and lawless conduct of hordes of Americans, whose indistinct notions of respect for authority may be inferred from the fact that many of them are Californian adventurers or filibusters en route to join General Walker. The Cabinet at Washington in this instance has not followed the Greytown precedent. It sent a Commissioner to Bogota to negotiate, and its ultimatum having been rejected, the Resident Minister and the Commissioner have ceased to hold any diplomatic relations with New-Granada, and a naval force, as we have stated, is about to be employed to bring that refractory Republic to a sense of reason and justice. The course which the Government of the United States has pursued is not open to any charge of haste or violence. It has been conciliatory and temperate; and an injury having been committed for which atonement is denied, it is difficult to see what other proceeding (upon the failure of negotiations) could now be taken short of the employment of actual force. It is said that New Granada is a weak State, unable to enforce even its own laws. This weakness cannot be pleaded as a justification of wrong, for in reality it is a strong argument why the Government of the United States should take with a strong hand means to establish that security for life and property which at present, from some cause or other, does not exist.

The Government of the United States having, it would seem, a clear and indisputable right to compel redress, the next point to be considered is the amount and extent of that redress. If we are to adopt the opinions expressed by several of our Transatlantic contemporaries, the permanent acquisition of the Isthmus is the object which American policy, availing itself of the existing difficulty, now proposes to accomplish. We are informed that "the American fleet on both coasts will be concentrated off the Isthmus, and if the temper of the Granadians shall be persisted in, we may realize a repetition of the formula with Mexico in the last war. In the same manner in which we first conquered that country, and then purchased as much of it as we desired, on the present movement may end in the seizure of the Isthmus of Panama by our fleet, and then its formal purchase for our use." This mixed rule of conquest and purchase is not very honorable in itself, nor very intelligible to European nations, but it is only one of those processes of annexation which the United States adopt whenever they have an opportunity of giving practical effect to the Monroe doctrine. But whilst England can have no pretence for interfering in this Central American affair, so far as any claim for redress is concerned, except as a pacificator, it is hardly to be expected that she can view without some anxiety a proceeding which may end in the permanent acquisition of the Isthmus of Panama by the United States. The position of this strip of territory—commanding the most important commercial and military communication in the world, and now occupied by weak and disorganized States—has long engaged the attention of English diplomacy. The Bulwer Clayton Convention of July, 1850—if it has still survived recent negotiations—provides for the neutrality of the great ship canal which was then proposed to be constructed through the State of Nicaragua. All the nations of Europe have a common interest in obtaining free and secure transit for their commerce across the Isthmus, and therefore its permanent occupation by the United States would be a measure not only in violation of the spirit of the Bulwer-Clayton Convention, but would give to one nation the virtual and exclusive control of the entire North American Continent, with the power of depriving England and other States of that ready access to Australia and to the South Seas which a ship canal would afford. Permanent occupation, without some sufficient guarantee of neutrality similar to that contemplated by the Bulwer-Clayton Convention, would exceed any amount of redress which the United States have a right to claim. Moreover, it would be a measure of territorial aggrandisement which would provoke the jealousy of all the commercial nations of the world, and in that respect would be dearly purchased, even if a strong Government should take the place of the misrule and weakness which now so generally mark the administration of affairs in Central America.

Important Treaty Between Russia and Japan.

The Journal of the Senate, of Russia, publishes the text of the Treaty of Commerce concluded on the 26th of January, 1855, between the Russian Vice-Admiral, Poutiatine, and the King of Japan. The following is the text of the Treaty:

Article I. There shall be in future peace and sincere friendship between Russia and Japan. The Russians and the Japanese shall enjoy in the possession of the two States every protection and assistance, as well for their personal safety as also respecting the inviolability of their property.

Art. 2. The frontier line between Russia and Japan shall in future pass between the islands Itourroup and Ouroup. The island Itouroup belongs entirely to Japan, and the island Ouroup, as also the other Kourile Island situate to the north of that island, belong to Russia. As regards the island Krafto (Sakhaline or Saghallen) it remains, as hitherto, joint property of Russia and Japan.

Art. 3. The Government of Japan opens three ports to Russian vessels, viz.: Simoda, in the principality of Idzou, Hakodadi, in the province of Hakodadi, and Nagasaki, in the principality of Khizen. In these three ports Russian vessels can repair damages, procure water, wood for burning, provisions, and other necessary articles, even coal, should it be found there; they are to pay for such articles in gold or silver coin, or in default of specie, in merchandise of their cargo.

With the exception of the said ports, Russian vessels shall not visit any other port unless under absolute necessity, when it shall be impossible for them to continue their journey. The expenses incurred in such case shall be paid in one of the ports thrown open to Russian vessels.

Art. 3. Every assistance shall be given in the two States to shipwrecked vessels and their crews; the latter shall be forwarded to one of the open ports. During the whole of their sojourn on the foreign soil they shall enjoy their freedom, acquiescing with the equitable laws of the country.

Art. 5. The Russians are at liberty, in the two first open ports (Simoda and Hakodadi) to traffic the merchandize and money they may have brought with them against such merchandise and articles as they may wish to purchase.

Art. 6. The Russian Government will appoint, when it thinks fit to do so, a consul in one of the two above-named ports.

Art. 7. Whenever a dispute or question shall have to be decided it shall be done so scrupulously by the Government of Japan.

Art. 8. Every Russian at Japan and every Japanese in Russia shall always enjoy perfect liberty, and not be subject to any annoyance. Any individual who may have committed a crime can be arrested, but he can only be adjudged according to the laws of his own country.

Art. 9. In consideration of the vicinity of the two States, Russian subjects shall participate fully in all rights and privileges which the Government of Japan has already granted or may grant to subjects of other nations."

The treaty to be signed within ten months of the day it was signed at Simoda (26th January, 1855).

An annex to the treaty is added and signed:

Addition to Art. 3. (a.) In the two first ports named in the treaty the Russians are to be allowed to move about freely—in the town of Simoda and its neighborhood, within a circle of seven Japanese miles, starting from the Island Inoubasairi: at Hakodadi within a circle of five Japanese miles. They are to be allowed to visit the shops and temples, and to rest themselves in the house provisionally designated for that purpose, until special refreshment houses shall have been constructed. They can only enter private houses when invited to do so by the owners.

At Nagasaki they are to comply with the regulations in force for other nations.

(b.) As regards burial of the dead, a plot of ground will be set aside in each of the ports for the purpose; that plot of ground shall be kept inviolably sacred.

Addition to Art. 5. The merchandise shall be sent in a vessel specially designated by the Government. The merchandise and gold and silver coin brought by the Russians shall be deposited in it. The Russians, having selected in the shops the merchandise and articles that suit them, and having agreed upon the price, shall make such payment or exchange of merchandise at the said entrepôt, through the medium of Japanese officials.

Addition to Art. 6 (a.) The Russian Consuls shall be appointed in 1856.

(b.) The buildings and ground necessary for the establishment of the Consulate shall be designated by the Japanese Government. The Russians will live thereon according to their own laws and customs.

Addition to Art. 9. All rights and privileges granted to other nations, whatsoever their nature, are equally granted to Russian subjects, as laid down in Art. 9, without any new negotiations being required.

The above explanatory articles have the same force as the treaty, and are equally binding for both contracting parties. In faith of which they have been signed by the Plenipotentiaries of the two Powers whose seals have been affixed."

(Here follow the ratifications exchanged at Simoda on the 25th November, (7th December,) 1856, or on the 21st day Ghinoietats, of the 11th month of the third year Ansey.]

LONDON MONEY MARKET.

From the London Post.

City, Thursday Evening.

The market for public securities to-day has been thrown into confusion by a very unexpected measure of restriction, adopted by the Bank of England—viz., the refusal to make advances upon stock, and the calling in of loans previously made. From the satisfactory change which has taken place in the movements of the precious metals during the past week, it was not thought at all probable that any increase would be made in the difficulties of obtaining money by the Bank of England, and the market for public securities opened with great firmness nearly ¼ per cent. higher than at the close of business last night. Soon, however, some three or four brokers, who are known to receive earlier information of the probable movements of the Bank authorities than the rest of the world, were observed to be placing large amounts of stock in all directions, and it is believed that their operations to-day have fallen little short of half a million. The market therefore became dull, but still no general apprehension was felt as to the result of the deliberations of the directors of the Bank of England. Great was the astonishment when it transpired that not only were the directors determined to suspend all accommodation in the shape of further advances upon the deposit of stock, but also to recall those loans that were already out; and then ensued a scene of excitement in the Stock Exchange which approached very nearly to a panic.

With regard to the probable effect of the measure but little need be said, as it has been rumored that it is not likely to be very permanent; and the prevalence of such a rumor has restored confidence to some extent, and the markets closed with a degree of firmness which could scarcely have been looked for an hour or two earlier in the day. Consols for money have been sold at 93⅝@⅞@93⅞ @93⅝, @⅞, thus showing a range of about ⅜ per cent. In the fluctuations. For the new account, which commenced to-day, and will terminate on the 4th June, the dealings have been at 94⅛@93⅝@93¾; the final prices being 93@ 93¼ for money, and 93⅜@¾ for the June account.

There has been an active demand for money to-day, and it has been aggravated by the requirements of the Stock Exchange, which have been brought to a competition with the legitimate demand for commercial purposes to a larger extent. Towards the close of the day more ease was observable in the Stock Exchange, some very considerable amounts having been lent both by the various joint-stock banks, and by individual capitalists upon stock at 7⅛@8 ₰ cent.; but the pressure has been severe, and productive of much difficulty both in the Stock Exchange and out of doors.

NEW-YORK CITY.

The Association of Superintendents of Insane Asylums.

This Association continued in session on Wednesday at the Metropolitan Hotel.

In addition to the members present on Tuesday, the following gentlemen appeared and took their seats: Dr. W. MOWRY, Hamilton County Lunatic Asylum, Cincinnati; Dr. H. W. BUEL, late resident Physician, "Sanford Hall;" Dr. S. DOUGLAS, Quebec Lunatic Asylum, Quebec; Dr. LANSING, Kings County Lunatic Asylum, Brooklyn.

Dr. HOPKINS read a letter from Rev. JAS. SHAW, Chaplain of the Northern Ohio Lunatic Asylum, in respect to the importance of the preparation of a uniform collection of appropriate sacred hymns for use in institutions for the insane, in which all hymns of a doctrinal and denunciatory character should be excluded, and those calculated to exert a mild, hopeful or consolatory influence be retained. The object was regarded to be an important one, and the new members of the Association were referred to a collection of the kind made some years ago by the late Dr. WOODWARD, for use in the Hospital at Worcester, Mass., which was thought to be a good one for the purpose.

Dr. KIRKBRIDE presented for the inspection of the members of the Association a daguerreotype of four generations of the Take family of York, England, to which mankind is so largely indebted for the leading part they have taken for half a century in effecting a progressive amelioration of the treatment of the insane. Dr. KIRKBRIDE also brought forward the plans of the new Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane, now in process of construction, and entered into a full and instructive exposition of the plans of heating, ventilation, drainage and exercise rooms for violent patients. It is intended to occupy the new edifice exclusively with males, and the present building with females—which will be the first experiment of their entire separation made in this country.

Dr. GRAY presented a plan of an institution for insane convicts, and entered into a narrative of the steps taken towards a provision for this class of insane, in the State of New-York. In 1854 a law was passed directing the removal of insane convicts from the asylum at Utica, and of those convicts found insane in the prisons to a separate building, in connection with one of the prisons. In 1857 a law was passed authorizing the Prison Inspectors to proceed in the erection of a proper building, and appropriating $30,000 for the purpose. The plans presented have been accepted, and the building will be commenced on the 1st of June next.

Dr. JARVIS made some remarks in reference to the importance of seeding reports of institutions for the insane to the various public libraries, including those of colleges, historical and antiquarian societies. The care of this subject was intrusted to Dr. JARVIS, with instructions to publish the list in the American Journal of Insanity.

Dr. MCFARLAND read a very interesting narrative of the circumstances attending the inhumation of four miners, near the River Muskingum, Ohio, and their recovery after two weeks, with the mental condition of the survivors.

Dr. GRAY read a personal history of JOHN WESLEY LAYMAN, a homicide, who killed CORNELIUS CARMAN in 1856, near Fort Hamilton, L. I. This individual was regarded by the writer, and other members, as one of a class of insane persons who are generally considered harmless, but whose liberty always exposes to danger the lives of every person with whom they may accidentally come in contact.

Dr. KANNEY, appointed last year to report upon the medical treatment of insanity, read a paper upon that subject, which elicited a general and protracted comparison of views, calculated to promote uniform and enlightened practice in the medical treatment of the insane.

Dr. MCFARLAND, on behalf of the Committee to recommend time and place of the next annual meeting of the Association, reported in favor of holding it at Quebec, on the third Tuesday in July, 1858, which report, on motion of Dr. KIRKBRIDE, was laid upon the table.

Dr. RAY read a paper on the Prognosis of Insanity. Copies of the report of the trial of HUNTINGDON were prescribed to the members of the Association, by his counsel, to whom thanks were duly returned.

The Association then resolved that the next meeting should be held at Quebec, on the second Tuesday of June, 1858, at 10 A. M.

They then adjourned to Thursday morning, when the members visited the Asylume of Blackwell's Island and Flushing, experiencing pleasant hospitalities at each place.

Board of Education.

The Board of Education held a regular meeting on Wednesday evening, ANDREW H. GREEN, Esq., President, in the Chair.

After the usual preliminaries, a number of applications from the local Boards for appropriations were received and referred to appropriate Committees.

A communication from the City Superintendent was submitted and ordered printed. The following are the leading statements in the CITY SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

A report was received from the City Superintendent, specifying in general terms the progress and results of the annual examinations of the several Schools, just completed. These examinations were commenced early in October last, and have been steadily prosecuted from that time to the present, under the charge of the City Superintendent, Mr. RANDALL, and his Assistants. Messrs. KIDDLE, JONES and SATON. The general result has been highly satisfactory, and the several Schools were found in good condition and making commendable progress. Detailed statistics of the examinations have been prepared, and such reports will hereafter be reported to the Board monthly, during the progress of the examinations.

The Superintendent calls the attention of the Board to the importance of a revision of the course of studies prescribed for the several schools, and of the text books in use, to the expediency and propriety of opening the schools during the Summer months at 8 o'clock A. M., and closing them at 1 P. M., and to the importance of a more systematic and efficient course of physical training and exercise in the several schools, as conducive to the health as well as intellectual improvement of the pupils.

The communication was ordered to be printed, and so much of it as relates to a change of hours of opening and closing the schools, referred to the Committee on By-Laws.

A communication was received from THOMAS B. STILLMAN, Chairman of the Commission to examine into the condition of our City school system, and on motion of the Secretary a Select Committee of five, consisting of Messrs. Waterbury, Tweed, Boolinen, Boase and Hooper, was appointed to consider and report the proper action on the part of the Board of Education in relation to the communication of the Commission.

A communication was received from Mr. ROBERT S. HART, Financial Clerk of the Board, tendering his resignation of the place he has held for the past five years, on account of continued ill health.

A very large number of reports was submitted by the Finance Committee, Judge WATERBURY Chairman, and finally disposed of.

The Committee on Supplies reported their awards for supplying fuel for the use of the schools, a synopsis of which was published some days since in the TIMES.

The President submitted two reports at the close of the sitting, one in relation to the Free Academy for Girls from the Special Committee, and one in relation to the President's remarks in his annual address, concerning the non-attendance of poor children. Both were ordered printed, as was a minority report of Mr. NEILSON on the Free Academy for Girls.

The Board turned off a great amount of old business and made omends for much time heretofore wasted on Buncomb speeches.

Mr. BENEDICT'S report was made the special order for the second Wednesday in June next, and the Board adjourned to its regular meeting on the first Wednesday in June.

THE NEW CODE COMMISSIONERS.—DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, WILLIAM CURTIS NOYES and ALEXANDER W. BRADFORD, who were appointed, at the last session of the Legislature, Commissioners "to reduce into a written and systematic code the whole body of the law of this State, or so much and such parts thereof as shall seem to them practicable and expedient," have held several meetings as such Commissioners, they all having duly qualified for that office. The law provides that the work shall be divided into three portions, one containing the political, another the civil, and another the penal code. Of these divisions, Mr. FIELD has undertaken the first, which is to include the laws respecting the government of the State, its civil polity, the functions of its public officers, and the political rights and duties of its citizens. It is the intention to make this an entirely separate part of the work, making a volume by itself. Mr. FIELD is also to make a "general analysis" of the three codes. Mr. NOYES undertakes the penal code, which is to define all the crimes for which persons can be punished, and the punishment for the same. Mr. BRADFORD will attend to the civil code, which is to embrace the laws of personal rights, and relations of property, and of obligations. Under the first of these divisions will come the laws relating to executors and administrators to intestates, the domestic relations, &c. The act provides that no portion of either of said codes shall embrace the courts of justice, the functions or duties of judicial officers, nor any provisions concerning actions or special proceedings, civil or criminal, or the law of evidence, all three being already treated of in the code of practice and procedure.

☞ The Commissioners are to hold office for five years, and are to receive no compensation whatever. Not even provision for the necessary clerk hire is made by the act. The Commissioners are to report to the Legislature, at its next session, a general analysis of the codes projected by them, (which analysis will be prepared by Mr. FIELD,) and the progress made by them therein. This latter they are to do at every subsequent session. The act also provides that when ever the Commissioners shall have prepared the codes, or any portion of them, they shall enter into a contract with the printers for the State Departments for the printing of the same, and cause the same to be distributed among the Judges and other competent persons for examination; after which the Commissioners shall reexamine their work, and consider such suggestions as may have been made to them. They shall then cause the codes, as finally agreed upon by them, to be reprinted under the contract aforesaid, and to be distributed to all the Judges of the Court of Appeals, Supreme Court, Superior Court and Common Pleas of the City of New-York, and to all the County Judges, Surrogates and County Clerks, six months before being presented to the Legislature, and the penal code to be distributed in like manner to the District Attorneys of the several counties of this State.

It so happens that the three distinguished jurists who compose the Commission are Republicans. The bill naming them was, however, introduced by Senator BEEBE, and was passed unanimously by the Senate, and nearly so by the Assembly, being there only opposed by Judge FOOT.

Cleaning the Streets—Size of Dirt Carts.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: I see that the last new obstacle to the cleaning of the streets is the want of a sufficient number of carts to carry off the dirt. Couldn't they make a tea spoon? It would be almost as effectual as those little tuppenny carts used, which usually spill what little they have taken aboard, and thus distribute it again before they reach the dumping place. Isn't it complimentary to somebody (I suppose nobody in particular is responsible) that those miserable, contemptible pretences of carts have been in use so long, and are still in use, for this purpose? And isn't the economy of their use admirable? A man and a horse taking up their little peck of dirt and marching off with it a mile or two, as if they were doing something? These carts would seem to be specially designed upon the plan of doing as little as possible. And it may be safely said that whoever undertakes a contract of cleaning the streets, and continues the use of these wheelbarrow carts, does not intend to fulfill his contract further than to get his pay and give his receipts. The whole thing is a transparent humbug.

Let me say one thing more: We have frequent committees of our Common Council visiting Boston and other cities, to see their institutions, and what improvements of police and other they can incorporate into our own, (though what they ever brought back I have not been able to discover,) and I have sometimes wondered that from Boston, which, whatever else may be said of it, keeps itself tolerably clean—(and we might permit ourselves to take a useful hint in this matter even from a provincial city)—that they have never brought back at least a copy or a working draught of their improved carts in use for this purpose. But really, Mr. Editor, and seriously, is it not time that the shameful imbecility of New-York in this matter should be ended? Not wishing to make too long a communication at this time, I will, with your leave, return to the subject in a few days.

Your most obedient servant,
ANTI-HUMBUG.

THE LAST CROP OF ICE.—This indispensable luxury will be abundantly supplied during the coming Summer, and of an unusually fine quality, but at a much higher cost than last season. The Ice Companies have adopted the following scale of prices for family use, which we compare with that of the previous year:

1857.	1856.
12 pounde	14 pounde daily	6 cents
20 pounds	22 to 25 pounds, daily	9 cents
30 pounds	35 pounds daily	12 cents
50 pounds	65 pounde daily	20 cents
100 pounds	100 pounds daily	38 cents

Last Winter's "catch" of ice was remarkably fine, and the Kickerbocker and New-York (the only Companies now) have filled every foot in their storing houses. The ice varies from 10 to 22 inches in thickness, averaging 14; and half of it measuring 18 inches. In view of these facts it would seem that the price ought to have been reduced rather than increased; but the icemen say that experience shows that they lose too much by breakage and melting to leave a margin for a profit at the old prices, at least where it is sold in small quantities. Another reason for the rise is the fact that a monopoly supplies us.

ALLEGED MURDER ON THE HIGH SEAS.—A letter was received yesterday by the U. S. District Attorney from Mr. A. F. SALT, U. S. Consul at Antwerp, announcing the examination before himself of SIMON ELBRICHT, first mate of the Benjamin M. Aymar, upon a charge of having murdered FRANK STOWELL and GEORGE BARRETTE, two of the crew of the vessel. The murder was stated to have been committed during the voyage of the Benjamin M. Aymar from New-York to Antwerp. The accused was placed in irons on board the Troy, which vessel arrived yesterday at this port. ELBRICHT was handed over to the U. S. Marshal, and immediately committed to Eldridge-street Jail to await trial. Captain SAWYER and the crew of the Benjamin M. Aymar, who will appear as witnesses against ELBRICHT, are daily expected to arrive in their vessel, which left Antwerp shortly after the Troy. Both the sailors said to have been murdered belong to this City, and have families living here.

SLAVERS.—By the official announcement of the United States Marshal, parties claiming the alleged Slavers, Merchant and Ellen, were to have filed their claims prior to this day or the Judge of the United States District Court would to-day announce their forfeiture to the Government. So yesterday parties, claiming to be owners of each of the vessels named, filed their claims. They were THOMAS COSLIN for the Merchant, and J. P. WEEKS for the Ellen. Mr. WEEKS it will be remembered, was lately tried and acquitted on a charge of getting out the Slaver Porchatta.

The Angeline, mentioned in the TIMES a few days since as suspected of being a Slaver, has been sold. Her former cargo was taken out, and she has gone on a legitimate voyage to the West Indies. The District-Attorney compelled the owners of the vessel to make the sale, under the threat of seizing her if there were any hesitation.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A BUSHEL?—The Corn Exchange is disturbed by the recent State legislation. It has been customary to allow 56 pounds of corn to the bushel, and sellers generally refuse to give more. However, by an act passed during the late session of the State Legislature, and which was to have taken effect on the 16th ult., it was decreed that 58 pounds of Corn should thencoforward constitute a bushel. Most buyers contend for this amount. Between the conflicting views, there is, at present, no approach towards a compromise, while the maintenance of the dispute completely interrupts operations.

☞ We should think stage-owners might afford to keep their vehicles in water-tight condition. Some of them leak like a riddle reminding one of old somebody's definition of a sponge—"a bundle of holes." Is there not an implied warranty in the contract between stage-owners and their passengers that the stages shall be tenantable and in decent repair? At present many of them would better serve the purpose of traveling baptizing machines or contrivances for sponging coats than anything else. We appeal to the owners whom the late bad weather has probably put in a good humor to vent a little of it in repairing their stages.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—MAY 21.

Before Judge Ingersoll.

Francis Swift, mate of the ship Andrew Foster, was put on trial to day under two Indictments, one for cruel and unusual punishment, and one for assault with a dangerous weapon. There were three witnesses for the prosecution, and four for the defence, and the Jury, without leaving their seats, found a verdict of not guilty.

Judge Beebe appeared for the defendant.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—MAY 21.

Before Judge Betts.

At the opening of Court this morning, the suits brought by the United States to forfeit the schooner Merchant and the brig Ellen, for being engaged in the slave trade, were called, and Mr. Donohue, on behalf of the claimants, pressed for an immediate trial, as the vessels were in custody of the Marshal, at large expense.

The District-Attorney, however, was not ready, and a somewhat sharp discussion ensued. Judge BETTS finally postponed the trial till Thursday next.

The Quarantine Injunction.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM—MAY 21.

Before Hon. Justice Clerke.

ARGUMENT AGAINST THE INJUNCTION—RIGHTS OF TAXPAYERS.

David Van Namee vs. Obadiah Bowne, et al., Commissioners, &c.—It will be remembered that a few days since we published an account of a temporary injunction which was granted by Judge CLERKE, restraining the defendants from erecting any buildings, &c., at Seguine's Point. The hearing of the motion to grant a perpetual injunction was had yesterday.

Mr. Geo. White, for the plaintiff, opened by reading the Quarantine act and the complaint, (which was published in the TIMES on May 18,) and then rested.

Mr. Noyes said that he appeared for the Attorney General, in opposition to the motion, and proceeded to read the following affidavits:

AFFIDAVITS OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

State of New-York, City and County of New-York, ss.—Obadiah Bowne, being duly sworn, doth depose and say that he is a resident of Clifton, in the county of Richmond and State aforesaid, and one of the commissioners appointed under and in pursuance of the provisions of an act of the Legislature of this State, entitled "An Act for the Removal of the Quarantine Station," passed March 6, 1857; that he is well acquainted with the value of lands in the county of Richmond and especially of those whereon the present Quarantine buildings are now located; that such last-mentioned lands, in the judgment of this deponent, are worth at least the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars over and above any existing incumbrances thereon. And deponent further says that the preservation of the public health hoperatively demands that the present Quarantine should be removed to some point more remote from the large and populous cities of New-York and Brooklyn, and that such removal should be effected at the earliest moment, not extending beyond the fifteenth day of June next. And further deponent says not.

OBADIAH BOWNE.

Sworn before me this 19th day of May, 1857.
EDMUND ELMENDORF, Jr.,
Commissioner of Deeds.

State of New York, City and County of New-York, ss.—Egbert Benson and George Hall, being severally duly sworn, do severally depose and say, that they are respectively Quarantine Commissioners and exercising the duties of the office as such; that they have read the affidavit of Obadiah Bowne, another of the said Commissioners, hereunto annexed, and verily believe the same to be true, and that in their opinion, from a personal knowledge of the property therein mentioned, the same is worth more than the sum of money therein stated; that during the last Summer, the Yellow Fever raged at and near the present Quarantine station, and on the opposite coast of Long Island, and in Brooklyn, some three or four miles to extent and that the same was communicated to those places from vessels lying at Quarantine, or by other means; and that a repetition of such occurrences is likely to take place during the ensuing Summer, greatly to the injury of the health and lives of the inhabitants of those localities, unless the Quarantine station shall be removed or other stringent means be taken to prevent it; that the Commissioners of Quarantine did not advertise for proposals during one month for the erection of temporary accommodations, authorized to be erected by the 21st section of the act under which they are acting, first because in their discretion they did not believe that the same could safely and properly be done, having regard to the short time they had for making the said temporary accommodation, and to the emergency of the case, and secority because they did not understand or believe that the requirements of the 6th section of the said act, even if they were positive, applied to the said 21st section, and because, in their discretion, they deemed the time given with notice set out in the complaint in this action sufficiently reasonable all who wished to make offers to do so, and to compete for the said work with any other person or persons who should offer to perform the same; that the injunction in this action is productive of great injury to the public interests committed to their charge, as they verily believe, and highly detrimental to the public interests, and further they say not.

FORBERT BENSON,
GEORGE HALL.

Sworn before me, this 21st day of May, 1857.
WM. H. DUERNEBERY, Com. of Deeds.

Mr NOYES offered the certificate of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor and Comptroller, directing the Commissioners to proceed with the erection of the temporary buildings

Mr. LET C. CLARK, for the plaintiff, stated that he had received no copy of these affidavits, and had not seen the certificate of the Governor. He demanded time to put in counter affidavits.

Mr. NOYES denied the plaintiff's right to put in counter affidavits.

The Court thought that the plaintiff had no right to put in such counter affidavits, unless new matter was set up in the affidavits of the defendants. Mr. CLARK claimed that the defence did set up new matter. He offered to prepare counter affidavits that evening or this morning; or if the defendants would withdraw their new matter and confine themselves to a denial of the facts, he would proceed immediately.

Mr. NOYES thought that according to the well-settled practice, they had no right to introduce counter affidavits, as he had set up no new matter.

His Honor remarked that he had frequently allowed new affidavits to be put in, and he thought that this liberty was, in a great manner, discretionary with the Court. But in this case he considered it not necessary, and as it was a case of great importance, and time was of value, he should deny the motion.

Mr. Clark concluded to waive his claim, and proceed with his argument.

By the Quarantine act, said he, the Commissioners are under obligations to put out the contracts at public auction to the lowest bidder, except so far as that general provision may be controlled by the clause "so far as that may be safely and properly done." Does this throw the matter entirely open to their discretion? Certainly not. It would nullify the whole intent of the provisions requiring every contract to be given to the lowest bidder at public auction.

The complaint is filed by the plaintiff, who is a taxpayer, on behalf of himself and all other tax payers, asking an injunction against the defendants, who are Commissioners appointed for the removal of the Quarantine, to restrain them from making contracts for the erection of hospitals, fences and docks, without advertising and selling them at public sale, as required by the sixth section of the act under which they are appointed. The plaintiff alleges that the defendants, in violation of said sixth section, are proceeding to put out such contracts by private agreements, without first advertising, and without putting them up at public auction. The sixth section of said act is as follows:

"The contracts for the erection of each and all of the wharves, buildings, offices hospitals and warehouses, and the furnishing of the hospitals for the same, contemplated by this act, and also of the fixtures for the same so far as it can safely and properly be done, shall be let at public auction to the lowest bidder, after having been duly advertised for one month in three daily papers in the City of New-York, in one daily paper in the County of Kings, and in one weekly paper in the County of Richmond."

We therefore claim:

First—That the language of the act is plain and explicit, requiring the contracts to "be let at public auction to the lowest bidder." The Commissioners get their authority from this act, and are to pursue it strictly. The words "so far as it can safely and properly be done," gives them a discretion only as to the details and mode of conducting the auction, but do not authorize them wholly to disregard the spirit of the section. Such a construction would be to leave the whole matter open to their discretion, and would render the section an absurdity.

Second—In construing this statute, the object should be to ascertain the intention of the Legislature. It evidently was to secure a fair competition for the contracts after due public notice, and to prevent the Commissioners from giving them to favorites, or speculating in them as they otherwise might do. A similar provision is found in the charter of the City of New-York, and its object was to close the door against favoritism, fraud and private speculation, and thus to secure the public rights.

Third—If this construction of the sixth section be correct, then the Commissioners are proceeding in palpable violation of its provisions, to put out the contracts without the requisite notice or auction, and should be restrained. No injury can accrue from requiring a strict compliance with the statute, but much harm may arise from the loose course they have adopted.

Fourth—The Commissioners are also violating the twenty-first section of the act, which requires them to "provide temporary accommodations upon or near Sandy Hook." They are not authorized to provide such accommodations elsewhere, yet they propose, and unless restrained will, make their contracts for such accommodations at Seguino's Point, which is about two miles from Sandy Hook.

This is a statute creating new officers and conferring special powers, and should be construed strictly.

Fifth—It is the well settled law in this district, that any tax payer may commence an action on behalf of himself and all other tax payers, to restrain public officers from committing an act which will work mischief to himself and those for whom he prosecutes. Adriance vs. The Mayor, &c., 1 Barb. 19; Christopher, &c., vs. The Mayor, &c., 13 Barb. 567; Milhan vs. Sharpe, 15 Barb. 193; De Baun & Taistle vs. Mayor, &c., 16 Barb. 592; Stuyvesant vs. Pearsall, 15 Barb. 244; Roosevelt vs. Varnum, 12 How. P. R., 469; Shepard vs. Wood, 18 How. P. R., 50; Wood vs. Draper and others. Justice Davies' opinion.

In any aspect of this case, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded, and the defendants should be restrained during the pendency of this action.

Mr. Noyes presented the certificate from the Governor, and continued as follows:

The first question is whether a general tax payer of the State at large, can maintain an action against the officers appointed by the Executive, to restrain them, by injunction, from performing their assigned duties. A tax payer of a municipal corporation may, in cases where the property of the city is in danger, under numerous decisions of this district, procure an injunction; but further than this no court has allowed a tax payer to proceed, though we were in the midst of a rain of injunctions. There are, however, remedies provided;—the officer may be indicted and removed for malfeasance. The consequence of allowing such a rule would be to allow any State tax-payer who contributed the sum of ten cents to the State Treasury, to interfere with every performance of the State officers which did not meet his opinion of being properly conducted.

Judge Clarke—What is the principle of the case cited? Is it not that the complainant has an interest in the pecuniary affairs of that body to which he pays taxes?

Mr. Noyes—No, Sir. A tax payer in a city is a member of what may be called a quasi private corporation with limited powers. State officers, however, form the executive arm of the government. While exercising executive powers how can they be restrained in private suits, in a civil Court, when they can be proceeded against in the name of the People, without leading to the nullification of every statute and eventually to anarchy? Nor does this relief demanded fall under the sections of the Code applicable to injunctions.

Here followed some rather humorous conversation, which can hardly be dignified by the name of argument, whether the location on Seguine's Point, being within ten miles of Sandy Hook, was within the bounds prescribed by the act, the words there being "at or near Sandy Hook."

Mr. Noyes proceeded to speak upon the other questions presented. All the provisions down to section 21 refer to a permanent Quarantine, and are pertinent to that alone. The eighth section, however, shows that much discretion is left with the Commissioners. The time spent in advertising, making the contracts, &c., would have occupied so much time that the building could not have been prepared before the evil, which it was attempted to arrest, would have been upon us. It was for this reason that the 21st section was introduced, giving the commissioners discretionary powers in regard to the temporary buildings.

Mr. Clark followed in reply, but urged no new points. He considered the direction to advertise as obligatory, and binding on all the contracts, whether for the permanent or the temporary buildings.

His Honor took the papers and will render his decision at the earliest possible moment.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.—MAY 21.

Before Hon. Justice Woodruff.

THE BOWEN AND MCNAMEE LIBEL SUIT—MOTION TO DISMISS THE COMPLAINT.

R. G. Fowles vs. Henry C. Bowen, of the firm of Bowen & McNamee.—This case was continued yesterday morning. The evidence was mostly documentary and has been before published.

Mr. Sanford was called to prove that a Mr. Nicholas Carter is now in Europe

After some discussion Mr. O'Conor read the deposition of Mr. Carter, by which it appeared that Mr. Carter became acquainted with the plaintiff through a letter from Cork, Ireland, and that he (Carter) introduced him to Messrs Stewart, in whose employ he remained for about a year and a half, and then went to the employ of Bowen & McNamee. He remained there some time, and Carter called on the firm to ascertain if he would be warranted in giving Fowles letters of recommendation to his friends in Cincinnati. Bowen & McNamee both stated that he, Carter, would be justified in giving such letters, as the conduct of Fowles had been perfectly satisfactory while he was in their employ.

David M. Mellis was called to prove that Henry L. Stone was a member of the firm of Bowen & McNamee in 1851, but he did not know his handwriting, or that of Mr. Bowen.

When the plaintiff rested, Mr. Everts moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that sufficient evidence had not been produced to sustain the charge. He spoke at some length, commenting upon the evidence, and attempting to show that whatever was said by Mr. Bowen, was merely what, as an honorable business man, he was bound to say, and that unless special malice were shown, could not be considered libelous. This he denied had been done, and, therefore, the plaintiff had failed to sustain his case.

Mr. O'Conor replied, also at length, claiming that the language was prima facie libelous, and of the most intense kind; that the evidence was sufficient to infer malice, at least to warrant it going to the Jury. They had a right to infer malice from the fact that Mr. Bowen did not believe the statement made in regard to the plaintiff, as was proved by his giving a letter of recommendation to the plaintiff.

Mr. Everts replied, claiming that the just inference was that the first letter was given in good nature or carelessness, and that when the defendant found mischief was likely to grow out of it, he stated the real facts of the case, as in honor he was bound to do.

His Honor remarked that it was no part of his purpose, nor would it be suitable for him to say whether the words, with the precise acts of the defendants, were libelous. That was to be left for the Jury. He was simply to say whether the case was such as would make it his duty to submit the facts to the Jury—leaving the counsel to give their views, and the Jury to decide, on those facts. He would only speak of the words as actionable in themselves, and say that he was of the opinion that there were questions of fact which would render it best to submit the whole case to the Jury. He should assume that the communication was a privileged communication. But this communication was inconsistent with the previous action of the defendant, and it was for the Jury to reconcile the two. It was, therefore, impossible for the Court to say that there was nothing for the Jury to decide upon, and he must, therefore, deny the motion.

Upon this announcement there was an attempt made by one or two among the audience to start some applause, but it was not very generally followed. Judge WOODRUFF, in noticing this, remarked that he sat there to deal justice without fear or favor, and could he at any time discover any person attempting to applaud, he should exercise his power in punishing for contempt. That he knew of no greater insult which could be offered to the Court, than such demonstrations. The Court then adjourned until this morning at 11 o'clock.

The Worth-street Murder—Dorsey Convicted.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before the City Judge.

The trial of Dorsey, the negro charged with killing the girl Hopkins, in Worth street on the 10th March last, was resumed yesterday morning. A murder trial is surcharged with interest for half the idle people of the City. Consequently the Court-room was so closely packed with anxious spectators, that ingress or egress was next to an impossibility.

The prisoner was directed to put on the blue coat found in his room. The Jury examined it, and found on the shirt traces of blood. Mr. Woodruff, the junior counsel for the prisoner, addressed the Jury, objecting principally to circumstantial evidence. Mr. Busteed followed. He argued that the deceased might have committed suicide, or that the other colored man, Wilson, whose room adjoined that occupied by Dorsey, might have been the murderer. Or, if the prisoner could be shown, beyond all doubt, to be the murderer, still it was proved that he was intoxicated at the time, and was not fully omenable to justice for the heinous crime of murder. If the Jury should so conclude, they might find him guilty of manslaughter.

The District-Attorney addressed the Jury on behalf of the people, reviewing the evidence of the witnesses, seriatim. At the close of Mr. Hall's speech, Mr. Busteed requested the Court to charge the Jury on the following points:

1. Wilson was a bad man, as the officers of the Ward had often arrested him on suspicion of various crimes.

2. That in a case depending on circumstantial evidence, all the circumstances of the case, constituting links in the chain necessary to convict, must be as fully proved as though each circumstance were the sole issue in the case.

3. The whole of the circumstances, when put together, must establish beyond all doubt the guilt of the prisoner.

4. It is not enough that the circumstances are consistent with guilt; they must be inconsistent with innocence and exclude every other hypothesis than that of guilt.

5. That while intoxication may be under circumstances no excuse for a criminal act, yet if the Jury believe, as the public prosecutor insists, that the prisoner was intoxicated at the time of going to bed on the night of the homicide, they have the right to consider the circumstance as repelling or disproving the idea of cunning or ingenuity on his part in shaking off evidences or concealing the traces of his guilt.

6. That if the Jury believe, as the public prosecutor insists, that the prisoner was intoxicated on going to bed on the night in question, they have the right, and are bound to consider whether that circumstance would not enable the author of the crime to surround the prisoner with suspicious facts or appearances of guilt, and put upon or about the prisoner indications of guilt, which if the prisoner had been perfectly sober could not have been done. In other words, if the real author of the murder may not have taken advantage of the prisoner's intoxication to draw off suspicion from himself and fasten it on the prisoner.

7. That it is for the Jury to say how far the prisoner's intoxication, if it existed, would have rendered it impossible for him to have committed the murder without detection in the act of leaving traces behind him, bringing home guilt to him.

The Judge then charged the Jury. He bade them remember that on their verdict depended the life or death of the prisoner. There could be no compromise for the minor offence of manslaughter, and it therefore behooved them to scrutinize the evidence most carefully. In order to arrive at a conviction of his guilt, they must be satisfied that the testimony altogether excluded the idea of his innocence.

The Judge then reviewed in detail the evidence of the police officers. It was very strong against the prisoner, but still left room for doubt. But what were the corroborating circumstances? There was the testimony of the colored women Dixon and Groose, which in every instance corroborated the officers. The counsel for defence had urged that Wilson stood in a more guilty light than Dorsey,—but such was not the fact. Dorsey's own paramour testified that Wilson was at home by twelve o'clock that night, whereas Dorsey did not come in till about one hour after. In regard to Dorsey's intoxication, Wilson proved that he was sober enough to enter his (Wilson's) room, get into a conversation and leave directions as to having the light put out. He also saw Dorsey with a black-handed razor, two weeks before the murder, and the blade had "nicks" in it towards the point, exactly like those in the blade of the razor shown in Court. And the prisoner's paramour testified to his having threatened revenge on a woman.

It was not necessary to go into the question of motive. The motive was inferred from the act. Though the evidence was only circumstantial, it was as strong a case of circumstantial evidence as was ever pronounced in a Court of Justice.

Another theory of the defence was, that the woman had committed suicide. If she had, then, after cutting her throat in two places, either wound being sufficient to produce death, she must have thrown the blade of the razor on the roof of the house, beneath Dorsay's window, have placed the case, marked with blood, in his overcoat pocket, and have lain down to die. If the Jury thought that the testimony was in favor of the supposition that she had committed suicide, they would acquit the prisoner; if they thought that the testimony bore more strongly against Wilson than against Dorsay, they would acquit the latter; but if they had no doubt of the guilt of Dorsay, it was their duty to convict him.

Mr. Busteed excepted to that portion of the charge which stated that the motive of the accused was not to be taken into consideration.

The Jury retired, and were absent half an hour. On returning into Court, they found the prisoner Guilty.

On application of his counsel, his sentence was postponed till Saturday. The Court then adjourned.

THE COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Before Justices Osborn and Flandreau.

There was a large attendance in this Court yesterday. During the morning thirty-eight persons were arraigned upon charges of misdemeanor. Many of the assault and battery cases were disposed of by the magistrates finding the defendants guilty and suspending sentences. The following were punished for their offences by incarceration in the City Prison and confinement in the penal institution at Blackwell's Island:

John Cooper, for stealing a pair of boots worth seven dollars, from Jacob McLean, No. 142 Varick-street, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for six months. John is said to be an old offender, and received the full penalty for his crime.

Maurice Delaney, for stealing a pound of sugar worth eleven cents, from the possession of Roderick Bennett, of the Schooner Joseph W. Webster, lying at Pier No. 7 East River, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for two months.

Ellen Adams, for stealing wearing apparel, worth $3 50, from Anna Connor and Ellen Fritz, of No. 73 Dunne-street, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for two months.

Catherine E. Bloom, for stealing a $2 bank note from Susan Steinberg, of No. 4 Jefferson-street, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for four months.

Luke Lahey, for striking John Burns in the face with a scone, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for three months.

Jeremiah Eldridge was found guilty of assault and battery on Carson Bloomer, clerk in a grocery and liquor store, corner of Greenwich and Robinson streets, on the night of the 13th inst. He quarreled with Bloomer, who refused him liquor. He then went into the street, picked up a stone, and threw it at Bloomer, striking him in the head, and knocking him senseless to the floor. Eldridge was remanded to the City Prison for the present.

Conrad Gladden was fined five dollars for assaulting and beating his wife, Elizabeth Gladden, and committed to the City Prison in default of payment.

John Sweany, a boy, was found guilty of stealing a decanter of brandy, and bank notes and silver coin, all of the value of five dollars, from James Dowling, No. 206 Eighth-avenue. He was sentenced to the House of Refuge.

James Kelly, for stealing three mantillas, of the value of $7 50, from Joanna Nagbaur, of No. 49 Catharine-street, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for six months.

John Bowden was sentenced twenty days to the City Prison for beating James Johnston, of No. 207 Nineteenth-street. He was also convicted of petit larceny, for stealing a plank worth eighteen cents from Mather P. Read, of No. 159 East Fourteenth-street. For this offence

New-York Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, FRIDAY, MAY 22, 1857.

Five Thousand Dollars Reward!

The PROPRIETORS of the NEW-YORK TIMES hereby offer a reward of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS to any person or persons who will furnish them information which shall lead to the detection and conviction of the murderer or murderers of Dr. HARVEY BURDELL.

The Proprietors of the TIMES are prompted to this course by a profound conviction that the regular authorities of the City and State cannot be relied on, for such action as the interests of the people demand at their hands, and that the PUBLIC PRESS will in this instance, as in many others, be found the truest representative and most faithful guardian of the Public welfare. The action thus far taken by the officers of the law has signally revealed their utter incompetency and inability to prosecute such an inquiry as it should be carried on. The parties indicted for the crime have been acquitted by a Jury, and all further efforts to trace it to its author seem to have been abandoned. The Mayor of the City alleges that he has no power to offer a reward for the discovery of the murderer. The Police and other municipal authorities seem to be too much engrossed in disgraceful struggles for power and patronage, to be able to give the requisite degree of attention to the protection of the lives of our citizens; and the Governor of the State has thus far given no indication of a purpose to exercise the power with which he is clothed to promote the ends of justice in this particular instance.

Under these circumstances, unless some action is taken by our citizens, this most horrible and atrocious crime is likely to pass unpunished;—our City must bear the reproach of permitting the most horrible atrocities to be perpetrated with entire impunity; the hundreds and thousands of abandoned ruffians who abound in all large cities are to learn, that any citizen may be assassinated in the most open manner, in his own room, surrounded by the inmates of his own house, in a street every foot of which is occupied by dwellings, at an hour when the utmost silence prevails, and when any unusual noise would be the most likely to attract attention;—and that in spite of all these circumstances the assassin may continue to mingle with the mass of the community, and escape all suspicion of his atrocious guilt. It is the duty of all good citizens, who set a proper value upon the security of life and of property, and who feel any interest in the execution of justice and the prevention of crime, as well as any concern for the honor and reputation of the City, to do everything in their power to prevent such results.

The Proprietors of the TIMES are disposed, in the absence of proper efforts in other quarters, to take the lead in such a movement; and they accordingly offer the above reward of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS for such information, to be communicated to them in writing, as shall lead to the development of this mystery, and the detection, conviction, and punishment of the parties guilty of this murder. If any doubt shall arise as to the rightful claimant, the money will be paid upon the written award of a majority of the Justices of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District.

The Proprietors of the TIMES reserve the right of withdrawing this offer whenever the authorities of the City or State shall take proper action calculated to accomplish the same result; and upon so doing they will, if requested by the parties, hand over to the said authorities whatever information may be elicited by this notice.

If any parties who may communicate information on this subject, desire that the fact of their having done so should be kept secret, their names will not be disclosed, without their consent. All communications in response to this offer, should be addressed, in sealed envelopes, marked "Private and Confidential," to the "EDITOR OF THE NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Niagara's mails from Boston reached this City last evening. Our London and Paris correspondence will be found to contain much additional news of interest. The dispute between this country and New-Granada is attracting great attention in Europe, and our position in the controversy is regarded by the French and English press as eminently just and proper, though opinions differ as to the means which should be adopted to obtain redress. We have received some more definite and circumstantial details respecting the French Mission to China. The appointment of Baron GROS as Extraordinary Commissioner, is officially announced. He is to demand a fresh treaty of commerce and reparation for the murder of the Abbe CHAPDELAINE. In the debate in the House of Commons on the address, in answer to the speech from the throne, Lord PALMERSTON made an exposition of his future policy. His speech, which we publish elsewhere, will be read with interest as it alludes to the leading political questions of the day. It is again reported, and with some show of authority, that the Spanish-Mexican difficulty is in a fair way of arrangement.

The Metropolitan Police Commissioners met yesterday at their new office, No. 88 White-street, and dismissed Mr. MATSELL for insubordination, and appointed DANIEL CARPENTER, ex-Captain of the Fifth District, Deputy Superintendent in his stead. Mr. MATSELL will be called upon today to surrender the books, papers, and other appurtenances of his office to Mr. CARPENTER. This, he will, of course, refuse to do, and then the matter will be brought before the Courts in a new shape.

The Excise Commissioners have prepared a large number of printed blank applications for licensee. Yesterday they were being actively distributed among liquor dealers, for their filling up.

In the Board of Supervisors, a bill authorizing the Police Commissioners to appoint the same number of police patrolmen as were on duty before the new law went into effect, was laid on the table. The Board would not hear it read. A communication was received from the Corporation Council, relative to the duties and powers of the Board of Supervisors under the new act.

There was a resolution adopted in the Board of Aldermen, last evening, to appoint a Committee of five to consider the propriety of forming a Municipal Day and Night Watch, independent of the State authority and control, and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Mayor and Commonality of the City. A preamble and resolution proposing to give the Metropolitan Police Commissioners control of the station-houses and appurtenances, was presented by Alderman OWENS, but the Board refused to hear them read. A resolution directing the Committee on Arts and Sciences to procure a portrait of GEORGE W. MATSELL, to be hung up in the Governor's Room, was referred to that Committee. A communication was received from the Chief Engineer, asking for seventy-five thousand feet of hose.

In the Board of Councilmen, last evening, Councilman MCCAHILL offered a resolution to investigate into the accounts of various Departments of the City Government. It was laid over. The Board adopted a resolution of inquiry into the propriety of establishing a night and day watch, in accordance with the Dougan and Montgomerie Charter. Nothing else of importance was done.

The Committee of the Board of Councilmen on Cleaning Streets met yesterday. They directed the City Inspector to proceed to the cleaning of the streets forthwith, which report will, doubtless, be adopted at next meeting of the Board.

The General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church met yesterday in the Jane-street church. The principal business transacted was the reception of reports from the various Presbyteries relative to the proposed bases of union with the Associate Presbyterian Church. Eight Presbyteries were in favor of adopting the bases without amendment, six suggested amendments which would make them more acceptable, while seven others would accept them only on condition that certain specified sections should be amended. There is a full attendance of delegates and the probability is that their sessions will last over Sunday next.

The committee of twenty-three appointed from the Tammany Hall General Committee at their last meeting, to arrange a new plan of organization of the committee, was to have met last evening, at Tammany Hall, to agree upon their plan of government and line of future procedure. Only two members appeared. A sub-committee was to have made an important report at this meeting, but not one of the committee showed himself. What has happened, or what is going to happen?

The Eleventh Anniversary of the Society for the Relief of Destitute Children of Seamen, was held on Wednesday at their Asylum on Staten Island. The Treasurer's report gives the receipts of the Society for the past year as $6,350 23, and disbursements $5,137 82, leaving a balance in the Treasury of $1,215 41. There are at the present time, 128 children in the Institution. During the past year 53 children have been admitted and 31 removed.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States met at Cleveland, Ohio, yesterday and transacted some preliminary business.

A meeting of ship-owners and agents, called by a Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, resolved yesterday against several of the laws of the late Legislature, and to coöperate with the Mayor in resisting them.

In the Supreme Court, yesterday, the argument was heard in the case of the injunction against the Quarantine Commissioners, restraining them from erecting any buildings at Seguine's Point. The motive for asking the injunction is that the Commissioners did not advertise for contracts for the building, as the plaintiff claims is required by the act. No decision is as yet rendered.

In the Superior Court, the case of FOWLES vs. BOWEN, of the firm of BOWEN & MCNAMEE, is still in progress. The plaintiff rested, and the defendant moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the plaintiff did not prove sufficient facts to establish his case. The motion, however, was denied, and the case will go to the Jury.

The Habeas Corpus case of SARAH JANE PAULDING, which was to have been tried yesterday, was adjourned until to-day.

The Jury yesterday, in the case of the negro DORSAY, charged in the Court of General Sessions with the murder of the girl in Worth-street, returned a verdict of guilty. He will be sentenced for execution on Saturday.

The Police War.

The new Police Commissioners yesterday removed Mr. MATSELL from the office of Deputy, to which they had before appointed him, and appointed Captain CARPENTER in his place. To-day, we are informed, the new Deputy will wait upon the old one, and demand the surrender of all the books, papers, &c., appertaining to his office; and if they are not delivered up, application will be forthwith made to some proper Judicial officer for such action to compel a surrender, as is provided for in the sections which on Monday last we quoted from the Revised Statutes. There will undoubtedly be room in this case, as there is in every case, for legal quibbles, and such an exercise of professional ingenuity as may delay somewhat even the completion of so summary a process as this was designed to be. But we hope some Judge may be found who will consult the necessities of the City, and the exigency of the public good, as far at least as the technicalities of the law-books will permit. The case, however, will be relieved of some difficulties which have stood in the way of applying the same remedy to the higher class of offending officers. It might be doubted whether Mr. DRAPER is the legal "successor" of Mayor WOOD, as the President of the Board of Police Commissioners, inasmuch as the latter held office under one law, and the former under another, so that the office, it might be urged, was not the same. But Mr. MATSELL was appointed Deputy Superintendent, and Mr. CARPENTER is now appointed his successor, under the same law; and if there is any force whatever in the provisions of the Revised Statutes for compelling the surrender of books and papers in such cases, it ought to become apparent here.

We trust that some judicial decision may be promptly reached by this process, not only because the public good requires it, but because the course likely to be otherwise pursued, falls with undue and unjust hardship upon the subordinate members of the Police Department. They are not in a position to know anything whatever of the legal merits of the controversy, which they are, nevertheless, called on virtually to decide. They are told by Mayor WOOD that the new law is null and void, and that they must continue to obey his orders on penalty of immediate dismissal. On the other hand they are told by the new Board that the law is valid, and that they must not obey Mayor WOOD's orders hereafter, under penalty of instant removal. All that they can know about the matter is, that whatever course they may decide to take is quite certain to involve their dismissal:—and as they and their families are entirely dependent upon their salaries for support, they may be excused for hesitating somewhat as to the choice they may be driven to make. It is not just or right, that they should be placed in such a position. The question of authority is one which should be settled by, or for, their Superiors in office: and until it is so settled the rank and file of the Department should not be required to take part in the controversy.

We have already expressed our own conviction,—and we believe it is that of the public also,—that the conduct of Mayor WOOD in this whole matter is utterly and inexcusably wrong. He is acting in open defiance of every dictate of law and of common sense, and is setting an example which, if generally followed, would overturn all legal restraints and plunge our Society into a condition of permanent and remediless anarchy. He claims the right to disregard and resist by force a plain and unmistakable law of the State which he finds upon the Statute Book,—upon the ground that he thinks it will hereafter be decided to be unconstitutional. If he may resist this law, he may resist any other law upon the same ground. And if he may do it, every other citizen may do it, in this and in every other case. Upon such a theory there can be no such thing as valid and binding law, until all the Courts of the State shall have passed upon the validity and constitutionality of each separate enactment. And as no case can possibly arise for the Courts to act upon until after some act, or attempted act, under each enactment, we must of necessity have, in the case of each and every law, an indefinite period of time, between the date of its enactment and the final decision of the Courts concerning it, during which there is no law whatever! This is a manifest absurdity,—contradicting common sense and the plain letter of the Constitution. That instrument declares that every law shall take effect at the date specified in its terms, or in default of such specification, twenty days after the date of its approval by the Governor. Mayor WOOD's doctrine is that it does not take effect until the final decision of the Court of Appeals upon its validity. The Courts of law can undoubtedly correct erroneous legislation. They can arrest and annul the effect of unconstitutional enactments. But they do not give effect to those enactments, nor have they any right, or any chance, to interpose, until the actual operation and execution of those enactments shall have commenced. The State laws, one and all, are to be deemed valid and to be obeyed until deprived of their force by Judicial decisions. Any other theory deprives the laws of all validity except such as the Courts of law may confer upon them.

Nobody in this country has ever held the doctrine now openly announced by Mayor WOOD, except the ultra and extreme nullifiers of the Fugitive Slave Law,—and even they base their resistance to law upon infinitely higher grounds than Mayor WOOD. They claim the right to resist the law only when it comes in conflict with their conscientious convictions of duty. He asserts the right of resisting and annulling each and every law which he, or any body else, does not happen to approve. It was his duty, as a citizen, and especially as a high executive officer, to yield a prompt and unhesitating obedience to this law, and then take such steps as he might see fit to contest its constitutionality and validity. He would have acted thus if his conduct had been governed by regard for the public good.

What is to be the issue of this controversy it is not easy to see. But unless we are mistaken the course for the new Board to pursue is reasonably plain. The Board is authorized by law to appoint a general superintendent, two deputy superintendents and five surgeons of police, and for the City of New-York so many captains, not to exceed 40, so many sergeants, not to exceed 150, and so many police patrolmen as may be determined upon by the Board of Supervisors of the County of New-York;—and they cannot appoint any more. Now the Board of Supervisors has determined upon the number of patrolmen who are to act "under the jurisdiction" of the new Board; and in so doing it has distinctly recognized, as we show in another article, the validity of the new law, and the legality of the new Board. In so doing it has of necessity recognized the exclusive jurisdiction of the new Board,—for the law under which the Supervisors themselves acted, and which they must of course regard as valid, declares that the power and authority of the Mayor, Recorder and City Judge as Police Commissioners "shall wholly cease and vest in the new Board" from the date of its first meeting. By the action of the Supervisors themselves, therefore, there is now no Police authority in this City except that of the new Board and the five patrolmen whom they have assigned to it. The new Board is bound to accept this action of the Supervisors, so far as we can see, and to act accordingly. It has no right to claim authority over the old force, or to appoint any more than five patrolmen, unless it goes beyond the letter of the law under which it acts. And on the other hand, neither Mayor WOOD, nor a single member of the old Police, has a shadow of right to exercise police authority or to draw a shilling's pay for police services. The action of the Supervisors, while it has paralyzed the new Board so far as practical efficiency is concerned, has actually taken from the Mayor the last vestige of authority for the course he is pursuing.

As things stand now, Mayor WOOD is at the head of an organized force in rebellion against the laws of the State. He is setting an example of lawlessness and of reckless hostility to the peace and order of the community, which cannot fail of its legitimate and mischievous effect upon the worst class of our population. If the courts of law have any power whatever to arrest this direct and rapid tendency towards anarchy, we hope it will be exerted. If they have not, and if Mayor WOOD persists in heading an open and forcible resistance to the authority of the State, we see no other alternative but to call upon the Governor to perform the duty enjoined upon him by the Constitution, as the Chief Executive Officer of the State, and "take care that the laws are faithfully executed."

The Contest in Utah.

The public are rejoiced to hear that the Administration of Mr. BUCHANAN has determined to meet the issue tendered the Federal Government by BRIGHAM YOUNG and his deluded followers. A large force—we are advised from Washington—is ordered to Utah. We trust the announcement is correct, but would like some more definite information as to the contemplated movement. How large a force is ordered to the Plains? From whence is it to be drawn, and when will it march? If the movement is a fixed fact, and if it is intended to be executed this season, there should be some official promulgation of the purpose in Army orders. A week ago, we have reason to believe, no such movement was contemplated at present. At that date all the available troops were, by recent orders, disposed for other service during the ensuing Summer. Have these orders been countermanded? This Utah question is an earnest one; the necessity for prompt action by the Government is imminent, and public sentiment will not and ought not to sleep until something is done, and not merely promised.

Three weeks valuable time have been wasted in the effort to induce Major MCCULLOCH to take the Governorship of Utah after he had signified his unwillingness to accept the place by declining it. And now the President waits again the decision of some mysterious individual in Indiana—whose name is not to be told—as to whether he will undertake to govern the Saints. Surely there can be no difficulty in obtaining a competent man to fill this place if a military force is to accompany him, however much objection the place-hunters might have to essaying a contest with BRIGHAM YOUNG unsupported by such auxiliaries. It is sincerely to be hoped that some one may be selected immediately who is expected to accept, and that we may thus receive practical evidence that Mormon treason is to be punished and repressed. The cold Spring weather, fortunately for this occasion, has kept the grass upon the plains back at least a fortnight, so as to make the movement of troops across them practicable, that much later than usual.

Evidences are not wanting to show that YOUNG contemplates an attempt to make good his oft-repeated declaration that he would maintain his rule in Utah, despite the General Government. He has long required every man of his flock to be provided with arms, and during the last few months has taken special pains to enroll the militia and subject them to the thorough drill necessary to fit them for actual service. Against whom is all this preparation? Certainly not a foreign enemy, for against such the mountains and the desert afford him the surest protection: and the Indians of the Plains never attack a settlement one-hundredth part so strong as the Mormon City. And what means the recent calling into Salt Lake City of the faithful from San Bernardino, and all the other Mormon settlements, some of them hundreds of miles distant? Our judgment is greatly at fault if the sequel does not show that these movements look to an armed resistance of the Federal authority, in which BRIGHAM YOUNG is even now attempting to secure the aid of savage allies during his "pleasure trip" into the Indian Country. The fact that these rebels have become so bold in their treason, makes it doubly important that the issue with them should be met without further delay.

Salt Lake City, proper, does not contain probably more than ten or twelve thousand inhabitants, the larger portion of the "Saints" being scattered over the plain in a chain of small settlements, extending for hundreds of miles in either direction. The City itself covers an area of about six miles square, being divided into Wards, each occupying an isolated position, as though it were a separate and distinct town. Each of these sub-divisions is built in the form of a hollow square, on the outer edge of which are ranged the dwellings of the settlers. This plan of construction was adopted when the community of "Saints" was feeble in numbers, the better to resist attacks of hostile tribes of Indians; and being found well adapted to the peculiarities of the people and their religious and social life, no change is made now in the days of their prosperity. It will be seen from this statement that the city is peculiarly exposed to organized attack by a strong body of disciplined troops, should it be found necessary to proceed to extremities.

Street Splendors.

The Journal of Commerce, yesterday, published an account of many of the public and private edifices now in process of erection in various parts of the City, among which are churches, warehouses, stores, banking-houses, insurance offices, and private dwellings; they are in every conceivable, and some, of inconceivable styles,—Gothic, Greek, Roman, Lombardic, Elizabethan and Saracenic,—and composed of every conceivable material,—brick marble, iron, free-stone and granite. Among them are edifices of the very first class, of great cost and unequaled elegance. Although the Journal's catalogue does not include all the City improvements now going forward, yet the estimated cost of those it enumerated, amounts to the very large sum of six millions of dollars. But, to this enormous private expenditure for City improvements might be added the two millions of dollars to be expended upon the new City Hall, and the annual outlay of one hundred thousand dollars a year in improving the Central Park; and the cost of the new Croton reservoir. There will still be a wide margin left for other City improvements, such as new docks and piers, and an immense number of small buildings for the accommodation of the growing commerce of the port, so that the prospective annual expenditure for building purposes cannot fall much short of ten millions of dollars in this metropolis alone.

The Journal questions whether we are not building beyond our means, and fears that we are running ahead rather too fast. But there is very little cause for apprehension of ill consequences from our extravagancies in building. These are not the kind of splendors which bring ruin and commercial disaster upon a community. The greater part of the material used in erecting new buildings is of home production, and all the money expended for labor, which is a very considerable portion of the cost in all architectural undertakings, remains at home and increases the general prosperity. All the marble, free-stone, and the granite, come out of our own quarries, the bricks are made of our own clay, the greater part of the iron comes from our own mines, the timber comes out of our own forests, and the glass and the paints which are used in decorating these buildings are of our own manufacture; while they give employment to our own mechanics and artists, and lead to the development of the inventive genius of our people. There is no form of public or private extravagance that is so little to be deprecated as that which exhibits itself in building. The individual may be ruined by building beyond his means, but the community is not injured by his extravagance. For the ten millions of dollars spent in the erection of splendid buildings we shall have something to show for generations to come. The churches, stores, and private dwellings will be permanent conveniences for centuries, and remain as monuments of the intelligence and enterprise of the age. But the millions that we expend yearly for foreign frippery add nothing whatever to the national wealth. A tithe of what we pay for French finery, for laces, embroideries, and tinsel ornaments, which have no substantial value, would more than defray the cost of all of our public buildings, and convert our Metropolis into a City of palaces. Although there appears to be a recklessness of extravagance in the present style of architecture in both private and public buildings, we do not think there is any danger of a commercial revulsion being caused by excesses in this direction.

Nearly all the buildings now in process of erection are of an imposing character and highly ornamental in their appearance. On the front of one [illegible] alone there will be more ornamental [illegible] than could have been found in the whole City thirty years ago, and, if placed together in one street, or arranged so that they could be viewed together, they would, by themselves, form a magnificent spectacle of architectural embellishment. These splendid additions to our streets will greatly increase the beauty and attractiveness of our City, and render it more than ever entitled to its appellation of the Empire City. Broadway is rapidly becoming [illegible]eized, and it will not be many years before the entire extent of that great thoroughfare, from Union-square to the Battery, will present a succession of superb façades of marble and free-stone.

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS ENDORSING THE NEW POLICE LAW.—It is worthy of notice that the Board of Supervisors has distinctly and practically recognized the validity of the law creating the Metropolitan Police Commission. At its last Monday's meeting the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, By the sixth section of the act passed April 15, 1857, entitled an act to establish a Metropolitan Police District, and to provide for the Government thereof, the Board of Supervisors are authorized to increase or decrease the number of patrolmen for this County, who are to act under the jurisdiction of the Board of Commissioners thereby created; and whereas, the constitutionality of this law is in the course of being decided by the Courts; and whereas, the peace and good government of this City demand that no patrol force shall be organized by the Commissioners appointed under the said act of April 15, 1857, until a final decision is obtained as to their legal and constitutional rights to act as such; therefore, be it

Resolved, That until the further action of the Board of Supervisors, the quota of patrolmen for this County allowed to the Board of Commissioners of the Metropolitan District shall be five men, and no more.

Here the Supervisors, in the clearest and most explicit language, "allow to the Board of Commissioners of the Metropolitan District" a certain number of patrolmen for this County. Where do they obtain their authority for so doing? There is but one law on the Statute Book which gives them the slightest power or right to take any such action:—and that is the law creating this new Board. Indeed their own preamble cites this law, and bases upon its authority the action which they take. They declare that, inasmuch as this law authorizes them to fix the number of patrolmen who shall act under the jurisdiction of the new Board, they accordingly fix it at five. They thus acknowledge the validity of the law by exercising power which it confers; and they recognize the new Board of Police Commissioners, as having a legal existence, by placing a certain number of men "under their jurisdiction." What that number may be, is a matter of not the slightest importance at this stage of the controversy. The "allowance" of five is just as thorough and as complete a recognition of the new law as would be the allowance of five thousand.

It is true the Supervisors at the same time declared:

"That nothing in these resolutions shall be construed to interfere with the municipal police as organized and existing under laws passed previous to the year 1857."

But this amounts to nothing whatever. It may possibly stand as a protest against the law recognized,—but it cannot vitiate that recognition, nor in the least impair the effect and operation of the law under which their previous action was taken. It is that law which "interferes with the municipal police" by repealing the "laws passed previous to the year 1857;" and as the Supervisors have performed the duties which it enjoins upon them in connection with the new police, they have nothing further to do with the law in any shape. Their opinions, or protests, are of not the slightest consequence. The law imposed certain duties upon them, and these they have performed. There their agency in the matter ends.

THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.—The first Russian Monarch that paid England the compliment of a personal visit went there to learn the unkingly art of ship-building, and it is quite natural that the descendant of that imperial mechanic, who, in spite of his low tastes, happens to be the only one of the race to whom the term Great has been applied, should regard England as the most eligible place to gain an insight into the mysteries of naval architecture. It is quite natural, too, that Englishmen should themselves imagine when a descendant of PETER the the Great visits them, that he comes with the purpose of looking at the Dock Yards, rather than to visit the Queen at Windsor. We are not surprised, therefore, that the London Times should throw out the hint that the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE's intended visit was for the sole purpose of making a surreptitious survey of the ship-yards and arsenals of England. The Grand Duke is the high Admiral of the Russian Navy, and is said to be something of a sailor, though he certainly let slip the finest opportunity that Russia has ever enjoyed of trying the strength of her navy, since she possessed one; and it will be of little use for him to learn the art of building men-of-war if the only use they are to be put to is to sink them to prevent the enemy from coming into port and destroying them.

If Russia is still determined to nurse the chimera of a navy, she knows where ships can be obtained ready built at her hands, and Admiral CONSTANTINE knows, too, that some of the finest vessels in the Imperial Navy were constructed in New-York, where he might learn all that he can desire to know of the art, and be heartily welcome; and save himself from the trouble of ceremonious visits to the English dock yards. Fortunately for him, he will arrive in London about the same time that our noble steam frigate Niagara arrives in the Thames, and as there are on board of her two officers of the Russian Navy they will doubtless direct the attention of their Imperial master to her superior model. If he has half the energy of his great ancestor, and has a real design of placing the marine of Russia on a par with that of England and France, he will extend his journey Westward, and take a look at our method of creating a navy.

AN ELDER'S TESTIMONY.—Lest any should think the accounts of Mormon outrage detailed by our Salt Lake Correspondent exaggerated, we refer to the following extract of a sermon delivered on the 11th March by Elder ORSON HYDE, and published in the Deseret News:

"No man or woman among us, not of our faith, that behaves himself and violates not our laws and regulations, has any occasion to fear molestation. But if he or she do violate them and will not desist, I cannot vouch for his safety, member of our church or not; neither can I insure his house to stand."

Here evidently is the justification for the [illegible] tailed by our correspondents; and the attempt to justify necessarily involves admission of the facts. If the sojourner at Salt Lake "violates our laws and regulations," he must expect to have his house burned, or suffer some severe penalty. What "laws and regulations" pray?—and whence derived? The irresponsible edicts of a despot Priesthood, having no warrant whatever here but [illegible] in their own depraved [illegible] will. And how is it proposed to enforce these laws? By the Courts? They have been suppressed by armed ruffians in open day, to bring whom to justice for so flagrant an outrage not an effort is made: the penalties of which Elder HYDE speaks, are to be exacted by mob violence or secret assassination. His language is capable of no other construction, and the facts give vivid illustration of this interpretation. We have only to add in this connection, that the failure to receive by the mail train recently arrived at Independence, confirmation of the reports of violence, in no degree impairs confidence in them,—for it must be remembered that the mail contract is now in the hands of the Mormons, who are not likely to give publicity to anything calculated to excite prejudice here against their people.

DISCOURAGING FOR SUGAR-CONSUMERS.—In addition to the alarming intelligence of short crops from the sugar-producing Islands, and the monopolizing operations of sugar speculators in all parts of the globe where sugar is to be found, we have the still further discouraging news that the French Crédit Mobilier is about to purchase up all the best sugar-estates in the Island of Cuba. If that mammoth Company should succeed in getting possession of the sugar-plantations of the "Queen of the Antilles," we may as well give up all hope of ever again returning to the days of cheap sugar, and it would be as well for every housekeeper to see where a teaspoonful of sweetening can be dispensed with. We must eat less cake, fewer preserves, give our children fewer candies, take our pills without sugar-coats, eat our strawberries au natural, and drink our tea, as the Chinese do, without sweetening. It would require a very moderate degree of economy in the use of sugar by our housekeepers to bring down the price of the article in spite of short crops, speculators, and the Credit Mobilier. And we are not sure that the general health of our people would not be improved by the change. We are, beyond question, the greatest sugar-consumers in the world, and many of our diseases may be attributed to too free a use of sweet food. Let there be an attempt made to bring about a moderate reformation in this respect. It will be certain to have a good financial effect if none other.

DUKES AND DEMOCRATS.—The great exhibition of works of art in Manchester, which is now the most prominent topic of comment in the English papers, is composed of the finest specimens of art culled from all the great private collections in the Kingdom. Among the contributors to the exhibition we notice the names of five Dukes, and a great number of Marquises, Earls, Viscounts, Lords, Baronets, and so on. Many of these works that have been so liberally loaned for the benefit of the people are beyond price; many of them are heir-looms and family portraits which money could not purchase. In this country collections of pictures are very rare, and there are but few which artists would consider worth studying. But there is in this City an exceedingly valuable collection of paintings of modern European artists, belonging to a gentleman who will not permit any one but the members of his own family to look at them. Young artists who have never been abroad and who have a strong desire to study some of the works of the great modern masters, have made frequent appeals to the owner of this collection of art treasures for the privilege of viewing them, in vain; they are shut out from all the world except their wealthy owner. Every man has a right to do what he likes with his own property, and, if the possessor of a large fortune chooses to pay an enormous sum for one of TURNER's finest landscapes, and then put in his grate, or shut it up in a darkened parlor, who shall say him nay? Every man's house is his castle, and he has just as good a right to keep amateurs and artists from looking at his pictures as he has to keep out impertinent intruders of any kind. We do not desire that the domestic privacy of any man shall be invaded, on any pretext; but, in reading the list of the names of noble Dukes who had freely sent their art treasures to the Manchester Exhibition, we could not help thinking of the different spirit manifested by them from that shown by our own Democratic owner of similar works.

TWO WAYS OF LOOKING AT THE SAME SUBJECT.—The Louisville Journal, in alluding to the offer of a reward for the discovery of the murder of Doctor BURDELL, by the DAILY TIMES, concludes that "it is a first-rate advertisement;" but the Louisville Courier looks upon the matter in a rather different light, and winds up a most commendable article on the recent outrage by the mob of Louisville with the following remarks:

"The Press is the conservator of the rights of the people, and must not shrink from its duties. These duties should be discharged fully and faithfully, with the direct object of promoting the welfare of the State and of the city. We are ready to do our part in these solemn responsibilities. The public Press should everywhere feel its important bearing upon society. A few months since the London Times set a notable example of the watchful care that should attend the suffering British troops upon a foreign soil, and by its deeds roused the Government to imitate the good example. And now, while we write, the NEW-YORK TIMES, after vainly struggling day after day to get the City and State authorities to offer a reward for the detection of the murderer of a citizen in his own dwelling, have themselves stepped forward and offered five thousand dollars reward for any information that may lead to the detection and conviction of the murderer. The press of Louisville has equally as grave responsibilities thrown upon its shoulders. We hope and believe that all its members will prove true to the trust and faithful to duty."

We alluded yesterday to the conservative tone of the Journal in reference to the murder of the four negroes by the mob at Louisville, but we are very happy to find that all the papers of that city speak in the same earnest tone of condemnation of the outrage.

AN EDITORIAL CHANGE.—THOMAS DARCY MAGEE, Esq., the brilliant and zealous Editor of the American Celt, has left that paper and accepted the Editorship of a new secular journal to be published in Montreal. In his closing address he reviews at considerable length his past political career, confessing his mistakes with frankness and showing an evident determination to profit by experience. While he ardently sympathized with the cause and claims of Ireland, he now regards the Irish rebellion of 1848 as a masterpiece of absurdity, and only wishes he had been able to see it in the same light eight years ago. He is satisfied also that he committed a grave mistake in permitting himself to be drawn into a controversy with the superiors of his Church upon the subject. He has done something to disabuse the public mind of its prevalent delusions concerning the Anglo-Saxon race, and since the Know-Nothing paroxysm he rejoices that he has never become an American citizen. This country, he says, is not the place for

Irish Catholics which they fondly thought it was, and hence his earnest desire that as many as possible of his countrymen who are now living in the Eastern States should make new homes and a new society for themselves in the West. "Revising carefully," he says, "the experience I have just related, considering the existing obstacles to any Irishman's success in public life in these States, but especially to my success; considering how painful it is to be the occasion, however innocently, of exciting an influential opposition towards beneficent projects; recollecting that I had my foot almost on the keystone of Life's arch, and that years were beginning to count; seeing the excellent spirit in which our most influential countrymen in Canada had invited me to go to them, I have resolved, after full consideration, and after taking the advice of many friends, to accept the invitation and go to Canada."

CONTINUATION OF WET WEATHER.—There was a slight streak of red in the West yesterday at sunset, which was the first promising indication of dry weather we have had in a fortnight; but as Quaker meeting commences next week, and as the coming to town of our drab-coated friends from the rural districts was never to be productive of anything but heavy showers, we cannot reasonably hope for a dry spell under a week at the shortest.

Musical.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—Mr. MORELLI is on his legs again, and bravely announces another performance. He snaps his fingers at the inflexible BEIGNOLI, and brings forth a new tenor to-night in the person of Mlle. ALDINI. The opera selected for the interesting occasion is "La Figlia del Regimento," in which Miss ALDINI will sing the tenor part. This is a novelty that cannot fail to attract a large and curious audience. Mad. WILHORST appears as the Child of the Regiment, and Mr. MORELLI as the Sergeant. Between the acts, the Liberty Duet from "I Puritani," will be given by Signore GAETARONI and MORELLI.

CONCERT.—Madame WILHORST gave her second concert last evening at Niblo's Saloon, to a moderately large and perfectly contented audience. The programme was made up of thoroughly familiar pieces from popular operas, and was spiced with two compositions (a duo and trio) by Mr. MILLET. The latter introduced Mr. RIVARDE and Miss GELLIE to the audience—the latter an amateur of fine voice (contralto) and pleasing abilities. Mr. RIVARDE possesses a high baritone voice, and uses it with great discretion. He is a valuable acquisition to our Concert forces.

Madame WILHORST sails for Europe on the 30th. She will there perfect herself in the profession she has adopted, and with very little labor return to us a highly accomplished prima donna.

Personal.

HAZARD, the Boston defaulter, was, as has been already stated, a striking instance of the pernicious influence of the lottery system. It appears that he has drawn in the Maryland lotteries, within a few months, the whole of $25,000—the whole of $14,000, and the whole of $6,000, besides minor prizes. The aggregate of prizes paid to HAZARD is stated to have reached the extraordinary sum of $60,000, over and above the cost of the tickets. These tickets were purchased by him through the vendors in Baltimore.

A letter from St. Louis, speaking of the effect of Mr. EVERETT'S address, at the inauguration of the Missouri University, says: "During the day of inauguration, one gentleman, who had before given $19,000, added $20,000, and another, who had given us $60,000, added $37,000 to our endowment. When Mr. EVERETT closed, a St. Louis millionaire, who had listened entranced, declared that he must be permitted to build an Observatory for us, and asked to do it at his own expense, without aid, as he was resolved to set apart $100,000 to the work."

The usual quiet of the city of Charleston, Mass., has been greatly disturbed in consequence of the sudden disappearance of Alderman EDWARD WARD. He carried on the lumber business in company with THOMAS GREENLEAF. It is thought that he has taken from $15,000 to $20,000 with him, of money belonging to the firm and others, which will fall heavily on his partner. Before leaving he converted his dwelling house on Main-street, and other things into cash, leaving nothing which his creditors can get hold of.

A year or two since the hemp market, in consequence of the Russian war, was considerably excited, and a speculative movement was the consequence. One merchant in Boston, who operated extensively, found himself a loser of $50,000. The same merchant recently embarked in the sugar business, the price of which, in consequence of short crops, combinations, &c., has nearly doubled in a year, and he now finds himself a gainer of $50,000—exactly the sum he lost in the hemp speculation.

HENRY STOLL, for twenty-five years a clerk with WIGGAND & SNOWDEN, in Philadelphia, was detected on Tuesday in the embezzlement of property belonging to the firm. He was caught taking goods out of the store, and the theft of some thousands of dollars' worth is traced to him.

A Philadelphia paper tells the story of a family, the mother of which was found dead, from intemperance and starvation, in Twenty-Third-street, near Callowhill, and, when the Coroner entered the house he found the father beastly drunk, while a lad of 14 lay on the floor, sick of intermittent fever.

Prof. CHARLES A. DAVIES, (brother of Judge DAVIES,) formerly a member of the Faculty of West Point Military Academy, has received the appointment of Professor of Mathematics in Columbia College. The appointment of Professor of History has not been announced.

The Lowell News says that Mr. AVERY, whose connection with the murder of MARIA CORNELL made such a stir years ago, is residing in Berkshire County, where he has quietly cultivated his farm for twenty years past. He seldom goes beyond the adjacent post office.

JAMES H. HACKETT, the actor, has purchased a farm of 1,900 acres in Clinton County, Illinois, on which he proposes to spend the remainder of his days. On the farm is a remarkable Indian mound, and Mr. HACKETT has named his place "Hackett's Mound."

Prof. JAMES HALL, of this State, has visited Madison, (Wis.,) accompanied by I. A. LAPHAM, of Milwaukee, to make arrangements for the Geological Survey of the State, and to make a proper distribution of the labor.

A citizen of Detroit, the other day, went out and found asleep upon a young-hill, in the rear of his barn, two boys and two girls, of from 10 to 12 years of age. They had probably slept there all night in the open air.

It is reported that a member of Rev. Dr. PHILLIPS' Church, New-York, has contributed $30,000 to endow a professorship in the College of New-Jersey, at Princeton.

JOHN B. GOUGH has been tendered a complimentary testimonial by citizens of Philadelphia, to be given at the Academy of Music.

Hon. HAMILTON FISH and family propose to visit Europe during the approaching Summer.

The body of a woman was found in the Mississippi, near St. Louis, last week, and in a pocket of her dress a letter, addressed "W. T. M., Sacramento City, Ca'.," in which occurred the following:

"MY DEAR WILLIAM: I now write to you for the last time. When you read this I will be no more. You have driven me to death by your last unkind and unfeeling letter. You believed the lying tongues of slandar, and the false oath that was taken. One that loves you and only worships you—they have lied about me. If I was not true and devoted to you, who on this earth is? I have been a faithful and true wife, and now you have driven me on to this cold world, without any money and but few friends, and you say for me to lead the life of a fancy woman, for such was my life whilst living with you. But that I pronounce a lie, and those mean, low-life women who told you so have sworn to a lie."

Obituary.

Musical readers will remember the Misses SHAW, who some years since were favorite vocalists. MARY, one of them, died recently in St. Louis of an affection of the heart; the other sisters are Mrs. CHARLES HOWARD and Mrs. HOEY, both well-known in the theatrical profession. The deceased always retained her maiden name on the stage, though twice married.

Boston papers announce the death of Mr. HENRY S. MCKEAN, a civil engineer by profession, connected with the Boston Water Works several years. He has since served as Assistant City Engineer, to general acceptance.

Mrs. SHEWELL, attached to the Walnut-street Theatre, in Philadelphia, died on Friday night of puerperal fever. She was a daughter of Mr. BENJAMIN WILKES, the equestrian, and was married last Summer.

THOMAS J. PERKINS, Esq., a well known and highly-esteemed citizen of Philadelphia, and for several years a member of Councils, died in that city on Tuesday, aged 67.

Dr. WM. L. BALFOUR, Vice-President of the National Convention at Cincinnati last year, died at Natchez, Miss., last week.

The George Law Detained.

Wednesday was the regular day for the sailing of the steamer George Law. Some six hundred California passengers were on board, there being an unprecedented number of ladies and children among them, which the return of Spring has tempted to undertake a California voyage to join their husbands and fathers; but the severe easterly storm, which had not abated up to the hour fixed for departure, induced the agents to delay her sailing until to-day at noon; accordingly notice was posted at the door of the office, and at the pier gate to that effect. The passengers were, however, provided with comfortable meals on board, and a large majority preferred to spend the night on the steamer to going ashore. Upon passing through the crowded saloons our reporter had the curiosity to take a partial census of the women and children. The first 21 women he came across had, in the aggregate, 32 children; two having only one, two having two, four having three, one four, one five, and one six; 81 women had a total of one hundred and five babies, little and big, from the flaxen-haired urchin of a few months, to the blossom of fifteen Summers, all mixed up in a kind of pot-pourri, tumbling about among the trunks and bandboxes, waddling in and out of the state rooms, and playing hide-and-go-seek among the standees; one munching an orange, another nibbling at a fist-full of gingerbread; some laughing, some crying—all alive, like a meadow full of grasshoppers. Not more than half had found their berth or state-room, and the rest were either hunting for their baggage or their children. Some were contemplating the pleasures of spending the night without the needful blankets, which had been stowed away in their trunks, whilst others were reletiog their adventures in pursuit of a California passage-ticket under difficulties. Of this class the following persons gave our reporter a statement of their grievances, which, for the twentieth time, is now published for the benefit of travelers, who have the sense to read the newspapers:

TICKET SWINDLERS STILL ALIVE AND KICKING.

Mrs. ——— with her father and mother, from New-Brunswick, arrived here from Boston, on Saturday last, with her father and mother, three children, and servant, bound to California; the lady to join her husband, and the old folks to make a home with her. The same day the lady went to No. 177 West-st., (she knew the way, having been here before,) and purchased tickets for herself, three children and servant, securing state-room 12, in which one berth was to be reserved for her mother until Monday. On that day, her father went out to find the office, but strayed into the wrong place, where an inferior berth was palmed off upon him for the one he wanted, at some $35 advance. After discovering the swindle, the lady again visited Mr. RAYMOND'S office, where, by paying the additional $75, she obtained the desired berth. Subsequently, by threats of prosecution, the swindler was made to disgorge $25 of the amount extorted from her father.

Mr. SHWEED, father, mother, and two brothers, arrived from Cincinnati on Saturday at noon, and went to the Shakespeare Hotel. Having told the Clerk they were going to California, he offered to send a man to show him the ticket-office, that there might be no mistake, and on Sunday morning they went together down Warren-street, found a smooth-faced young man in an office, with California Ticket Office over the door, and purchased of him four tickets—two whole and two half tickets—for $600. He found the next day he had made a bad Sunday's job, having been cheated about $100, besides the wear and tear of conscience and his Sunday clothes.

Mrs. HOTHERSALL arrived from Worcester in the Commonwealth, yesterday noon, accompanied by her brother-in-law, Mr. CROSS, who came to see her safely on board the George Law. Mrs. H. being on her way to join her husband in California. They were met on the dock by a runner, who conducted Mr. CROSS to a bogus office, where $195 was extorted for a steerage berth. Her brother-in-law having left for home, supposing that all was right, the swindler then tried every means to induce the defenceless lady to leave the steamer and go to a hotel which he would show her and spend the night; but she very properly dismissed the vagabond and remained on board, making the best of her disappointment and her hard fare.

These are only a few of some fifty cases of swindling by the George Law.

The George Law left yesterday at 12, according to announcement, with about six hundred passengers, of which there were 179 ladies, of all classes and 125 children—there were under six years 75, and under 12 50. Col. WASHINGTON, the new Collector of San Francisco; S. B. WELLER, the new Post-Master and Mr. MCCORKLE, ex M. C., and Mr. B. F. GRIFFIN ex M. C. with his family, were among the passengers. Four persons who had not been sufficiently careful to note the advertised time of the sailing of the steamer were left behind, very much to their disappointment. Among these were H. P. HOLMES, of Bentonville, Ark., GEORGE MACOMBER, and JAMES JOHNSON an old lady also, from Iowa, was too late to get on board.

Convention of the General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church.

The General Synod commenced its annual session on Wednesday evening at the Jane-street Church. There were over a hundred and twenty delegates present, who represent a constituency which extends from Massachusette to Missouri. The exercises of the evening were merely a formal organization of the body. A sermon was delivered by Rev. Prof. FINDLEY, of Westminster College, Western Pennsylvania, from the text in the 5th chapter of Ephesians, 25th, 26th and 27th verses, and the Synod adjourned to nine o'clock yesterday morning.

MORNING SESSION.

Rev. Dr. DAVID R. KERR, of Pittsburg, Penn., was chosen Moderator.

Reports were received from the Presbyteries represented—the majority being in favor of the union with the Associate Presbyterian Church, on the bases of union recommended by the Committee appointed by the Associate Reformed Synods at their meeting in Allegheny, Penn., in May, 1856. The reports were referred to a special committee to report upon as soon as possible.

An interesting letter was received from the General Assembly of Ireland.

A memorial was read in favor of a Mission to Northern India, and it, with a report on existing Foreign Missions, were laid over for discussion in the evening.

This evening was appointed for hearing a sermon Advent of Christ," and Monday evening Rev. Dr. FORSYTH, of Newburg, N. Y., was to discourse on "The History of Presbyterianism since the Reformation by Rev. R. D. HARPER, of Xenia, Ohio, on "The Second tion."

A letter was submitted, accompanied by a draft of the Covenant of Faith, from the Reformed Presbyterian (New School) Church, which the Moderator stated was virtually an overture of union from that body.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

After the devotional exercises, the roll was called, and it was found that several delegates had forgotten their credentials. They were, however, admitted to seats by a unanimous vote of the Synod. The Clerk read five additional reports from Presbyteries which had not been heard from at the morning session.

The Second Presbytery of Illinois were 29 against the proposed bases of union, and 4 in favor of them. They suggested a number of amendments.

The Presbytery of Mansfield would approve of them with certain amendments, but not without.

The Presbytery of Boston could not indorse the bases without amendments.

The Presbytery of Michigan rejected them unanimously, and suggested alterations.

The First Prosbytery of Ohio approved them unanimously.

Rev. J. G. BROWNE moved that the sermon on the Second Advent of Christ, which in the morning session had been appointed to be delivered by Rev. Mr. HARPER, this evening, be postponed, in consequence of Mr. HARPER'S laborious work as Clerk of the Committee on Missions, to Sunday evening. This occasioned a lengthy and somewhat warm discussion, and was eventually withdrawn by the mover to save the time of the Synod. A half hour subsequent, Mr. HARPER, who had been absent and was not aware that the matter had been before the house, asked the courtesy himself. Not many at first were willing to grant it, and discussion ran high among both the clerical and lay members. Amendments and substitutes without number were offered, till at length Mr. HARPER, who said he would not have mentioned the subject had he anticipated such a commotion, asked to be excused from preaching the sermon at all, and the matter was tabled.

The Moderator (by permission of the Synod, which suspended the rules for the purpose) made the following appointments of Committees:

On Overtures.—Rev. Wm. Findley, John D. Gibson, Matthew McKinstry; Elders A. C. Nevin, James Robb.

On Correspondence.—J. B. Scouller, R. A. Brown, Robert Ross; Elders S. C. Hircy, Robert Reed.

On the State of Religion.—Alex. Young, S. C. Baldridge, Alex. Clements; Elders Robert Operston, Samuel Johnston.

On Education.—Dr. Ekin, C. Irvine, Samuel Miller; Elders T. M. Nevin, Thomas Carlisle.

On Accounts.—J. B. Scouller, Wm. M. Graham, A. C. Jenkins; Elders Thomas McCagua, Wm. Young.

On Revision.—David Currie, J. N. Dick; Elders J. L. Craig, S. C. Purvis.

The Chairman stated that a book-seller of the City had tendered a copy of the Life of Dr John Mason to each of the clerical members of the Synod, and moved a vote of thanks therefor. Carried.

The unfinished report of the Committee on Home Missions was read by Rev. R. D. HARPER. It recommends additional efforts to be put forth in the work of home missions, and advises that missions be established in Kansas and Nebraska. It set apart various clergymen to labor in those fields alternately—their places while so employed to be filled by the Presbyteries to which they severally belong. That portion of the report elicited much discussion. Rev. R. D. HARPER, of Xenia, Ohio, was nominated as the pioneer for the post, to be relieved in two months by Rev ROBT. A. BROWN.

Mr. BROWN, however, declined to serve; and, after after a spirited debate as to the advisability of sending missionaries there at present, the portion that referred to Kansas and Nebraska was recommitted.

The report also advised that $7,000 be raised for the support of the Home Missions for the ensuing year.

Elder HOEY, of Philadelphia, thought that the amount should be increased at least 50 per cent.

Rev. Mr. SCOULLER, of Washington Presbytery, N. Y., hoped that the suggestion would not be acted on, as $7,000 was more than sufficient to pay all the laborers in the mission cause that they had.

Elder CARLISLE thought that more than $7,000 should be assessed, and in reply Mr. SCOULLER stated that the reason that laborers were scarce was that they were not sufficiently remunerated pecuniarly.

Other remarks followed and the resolution was finally tabled.

Mr. T. M. NEVIN moved that during the session of the Synod the first half-hour of the morning session should be occupied with devotional exercises. Adopted.

The Committee to whom was referred the Reports of the different Presbyteries on the bases of Union now in overture before the churches, stated to the Synod that they had examined such reports, and that six Presbyteries are opposed to the consummation of the union on the present bases. Eight Presbyteries are willing to unite upon the bases as they are; seven would adopt the bases with certain amendments; and six Presbyteries specify certain amendments that would render the bases more acceptable to them.

The Committee, however, regarding the union of the churches as of great importance, would recommend the adoption of the bases as they are, rather than fail in the accomplishment of an object of so much interest to the Church.

After remarks had been made by many members, the report was re-committed with instructions to report the numerical votes of the several Presbyteries.

The meeting adjourned after Prayer by Rev. ALEX. YOUNG.

EVENING SESSION.

An interesting Session was held in the evening, when addresses were made by Rev. Messrs. PRESTLY, KARR, BROWN, MCCAGUE and others, giving their views on the subject of existing Foreign Missions, and the memorial in favor of a mission to Northern India was also discussed. The Synod meet again this morning at 9 o'clock.

Resisting Laws on the Allegation of their Unconstitutionality.

ALBANY, Thursday, May 14, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: In one of your editorials, a few days since, I saw repeated an assertion, made over and over again by many of your countrymen, that Frenchmen and other foreign nations were unable to understand American laws and institutions.

It is not my intention to question the truth of this assertion; on the contrary, it is in the conviction of its justness that I take up my pen to address you, for, individually speaking, I must confess that American laws and institutions are as great puzzles to me as those of Sphinx of old were to the enlightened inhabitants of Thebes.

More than ever, I have become conscious of my utter ignorance in this respect by the action of some of your municipal officers in relation to certain laws passed by the Legislature in its recent session.

The representatives of the people, assembled according to the requirements of the Constitution, after due deliberation, have passed, in the name of the people, a law creating a Board of Police Commissioners.

In my ignorance (being rather slow of conception, in common with most of my countrymen, lager-bier drinking, ever-smoking Germans or Dutchmen, if you like it better) I supposed that such a law was a law, at least till repealed or declared unconstitutional by the proper judicial tribunal. But no!

It seems that there are still higher authorities, not mentioned in the Constitution, than your Assemblies, Senates and Governors, among whom may be found Mayor WOOD, little GEORGY MATSELL, a portion of the Aldermen, Councilmen, &c., all of whom seem to have the power to defy the law and to make impossible its proper execution under the allegation of its being unconstitutional.

In old-fashioned Europe, common sense would require a law to be regarded as valid and constitutional till declared otherwise by the proper tribunal, and the Executive would be responsible for its execution; but enlightened America don't know such nonsense, you know, and I presume it would be a crime against popular sovereignty to enforce a law if anybody does not fancy it.

If I am not correct in my understanding of the word "Popular Sovereignty," please correct me, to the enlightenment of not a few of those "furriners" who inhabit your glorious country, so much ahead in everything of all the "old nations," and the rest of the world, especially as most of them may not be in possession of Webster, among whom may be numbered your obedient servant, who on that score, begs pardon for his indifferent English. DUTCHMAN.

☞ Bermuda is coming to be our hot-house. The Hamilton Bermudian, of the 6th inst., shows that the exports this Spring amounted to 158,450 bbls. onions, 3,698 bbls. potatoes and 3,059 boxes tomatoes. Six vessels cleared for New-York during the period mentioned, taking in the aggregate, 2,259 bbls. potatoes, 2,309 boxes of tomatoes and 450 bbls. onions. These productions ripened several weeks earlier than usual. Onions were exported the 20th of April. The potato has yielded bountifully, and almost wholly free from disease. One planter's crop yielded at the rate of twenty-four barrels for every barrel planted.

THE CITY SCHOOL COMMISSION.—Governor KING having, in accordance with the act of the Legislature creating a Commission to examine the school system of this City, appointed Messrs. Charles Tracy, Thomas B. Stillman, Robert A. Adams, William H. Neilson and Charles C. Nott, as the members of such Commission, the Commissioners met at the office of Mr. NEILSON yesterday, and organized by the election, on motion of Mr. NEILSON, of THOMAS B. STILLMAN, Esq., as Chairman.

☞ EUGENE GRELET, one of the parties arrested for participation in the great Carpentier French Railway fraud, died suddenly, yesterday, in Eldridge-street Jail. He was only 21 years old. An inquest will be held on his remains this morning.

Reward for the Murderer of Dr. Burdell—Newspaper Enterprise.

From the Albany Express.

The publishers of the NEW-YORK MORNING TIMES, yesterday morning offered a reward of $5,000 to any person or persons who will furnish them information which shall lead to the detection and conviction of the murderer or murderers of Dr. HARVEY BURDELL.

The Proprietors of the TIMES reserve the right of withdrawing this offer whenever the authorities of the City or state shall take proper action calculated to accomplish the same result; and, upon so doing they will, if requested by the parties, hand over to the said authorities whatever information may be elicited by this notice.

If any parties who may communicate information on this subject, desire that the fact of their having done so should be kept secret, their names will not be disclosed, without their consent. All communications in response to this offer, should be addressed, in sealed envelopes, marked "Private and Confidential," "To the EDITOR OF THE NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES."

This is an evidence of newspaper enterprise that will not pass unnoticed by the public. The authorities of New-York it appears cannot be relied on for such action as the interests of the people demand at their hands, and the Public Press, will, in this instance, as in many others, be found the truest representative and most faithful guardian of the public welfare. All honor to the men who have thus assumed to discharge a great public duty.

Letter from Gov. R. J. Walker to Dr. Webster.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, May 14, 1857.

President Horace Webster, New-York Free Academy.—DEAR SIR: I have lately made the interesting acquaintance of many accomplished young students under your faithful charge, principally those of a debating society, which has honored me with a membership. It was my intention, before my departure, to visit the Academy in acknowledgment of courtesies from you and them, but imperative duties call me away immediately. What I have witnessed of the system of public instruction here, of which you are the distinguished head, the lovely and orderly children in the Primary Department, and upward, through the Grammar School into the Free Academy, impress me most favorably, and I shall receive in Kansas, with great pleasure, through my young friend REMD HARPER, any documents of which I can avail myself, in endeavoring to introduce the system into that new Territory, soon to become one of the sovereign States of the Union.

Most respectfully, your friend,

R. J. WALKER.

From Kansas.

ACTION OF THE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY IN THE TREASON CASES.

Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.

LECOMPTON, K. T., Tuesday, May 12, 1857.

Upon the opening of Judge CATO'S Court this afternoon, the U. S. District Attorney WEBB moved for a nolle prosequi to be entered in all the treason trials now pending before that Court in which the United States is the prosecutor.

In making this motion, Mr. WEBB remarked that he did so by advice of the Secretary of State and acting Governor of Kansas, Hon. FREDERICK P. STANTON, and in accordance with his own belief that the General Government would approve his course, as an act calculated to restore present peace and preserve future harmony in the Territory.

Judge SMITH, of Lawrence, a member of the Kansas bar and a party interested, desired to know whether this nolle prosequi would include prosecutions for usurpation of office?

The District-Attorney replied that he presumed it would, but that these cases could not be thus determined until the right of prosecutorship between himself (as District-Attorney for the United States) and Mr. NEWSOM, the Territorial District-Attorney, (which is to be argued this week,) should be decided.

This will probably be settled in a few days.

PURSUIT AND SUMMARY SHOOTING OF HORSE-THIEVES.

You will remember that we informed you of the taking away of some four horses, with saddles and bridles, from the livery-stable at this place on Tuesday night last. These horses are now back again in Lecompton, though sadly the worse for wear, and the thieves, in mountain phrase, have "gone under."

We left Lecompton on Thursday, at an early hour, to give chase. We first struck the trail of the thieves about four miles from this place, upon the road leading to Topeka. There were certain peculiarities in the hoof-prints, made by one of the stolen animals, which enabled us to keep upon their track. After some distance, we lost traces of these, but recovered them again at Smith's Ferry, a crossing of the Kansas, some six miles above Topeka. Here we learned certain particulars from the ferryman, whose suspicions had been excited by the thieves having no baggage.

We gained constantly until we came in sight of the thieves, some eight miles this side of the Nebraska line, and about one hundred and fifty from this place. Upon perceiving us the rascals hauled off to the side of the road to discover if we were following them; upon being satisfied of which, they put their horses under the whip, and ran them hither and thither, sometimes on the road and sometimes off of it, in the vain attempt to escape. We had a hard chase, and the animals on both sides were greatly exhausted, but we finally came so near them when about four miles inside of the Nebraska line, that they came to the conclusion that further flight would be useless, and formed a line across the road side by side, with their revolvers all ready for a fight.

As we got within twenty steps of them they fired one shot each, and then wheeled and fled; we reserved our fire, not wishing to wound the horses, and pursued; as we got up with them they again turned and fired three shots, but without effect, and once more broke and run. We then commenced bringing down our double herreled shot guns, which had been well loaded with buck. At the first fire we had the satisfaction to see the thief on the gray (Richardson's Express Company's horse) throw up his arms and give a yell—what he said we could not hear, and then tumble from his saddle. His horse, jaded and trembling like a leaf, stopped short upon being relieved from the weight of his rider, and went to grazing. The man on the bay (Mr. FEY'S horse) "gave out" next; and the two survivors, upon witnessing the discomfiture of their associates, slipped from their saddles and gave leg hail, but we were not satisfied with the security, and ere they had taken forty jumps, they both planted on "chims" six feet by two, where they will be likely to stop for some time to come, unless the Coyotes "jump their location."

They were all young men, none I should say over 30 years of age. One had light brown hair, was of slender make, with small and rather regular features. He wore a brown coat and a slouched hat. Another was a heavily-built man, with dark hair and brounzed complexion; he was rather a good looking man; this was the person who wore the shawl. The two others were under size, but stoutly made. They wore red shirts and had long hair.

News from Nassau, N. P.

The British schooner Evelina arrived at Charleston on Saturday, with news from Nassau to the 10th inst. The Courier has the following:

Sir ALEXANDER BANNERMAN, the retiring Governor of New-Providence, came a passenger in the Evelina, and has, for a few days, taken rooms at the Mills House. He goes north to assume the Governorship of Newfoundland.

The Bahamas—with the exception of the lantern—for the erection of a cast-iron light-house on the "Great Isaacs" had arrived at Nassau.

The Legislature of Barbadoes has appropriated an annual sum, amounting to £2,500, in furtherance of the project to lay down a line of submarine telegraph to connect the North and South American continent, through the islands of the lesser Antilles, the line to be placed in North America, in connection with the Transatlantic line, connecting the British Island with the Continent, through Newfoundlund.

Two American vessels, the brigantine Montana and schooner Arcade, had arrived at Turke Island from the United States, for the purpose of obtaining licences for the Government to search after sunken property at the Silver Cey Bank, where, it is supposed, much treasure has been from time to time wrecked, without, hitherto, any recovery. The parties were provided with compe ere diving apparatus, such as ereem-engine, diving-bell, and submarine armors, &c., and the Government was about to grant a monopoly to one of them, to the exclusion of other foreigners. The Royal Standard thinks that the monopoly should not be granted, and that trouble will be sure to grow out of it.

Some surprise had been created in Antigua by the appointment of a Special Commission to examine the accounts of the Acting Treasurer.

A Useful Hint.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Please suggest to the gentlemen frequenters of the National Academy of Design, the propriety of their taking off their hats while in the exhibition rooms. Neither felt or stove-pips hats are transparent, and it is so provoking to have them continually in the way, while you are endeavoring to see and study some really good work of ART.

I.—A NEW NOVEL. By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe."
II.—A MEMOIR OF DR. LEWIS F. LINN.
D. APPLETON & CO., Nos. 346 and 348 Broadway.
Publish on Friday,

LIFE AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF DR. LEWIS F. LINN,
FOR TEN YEARS SENATOR OF THE UNITED STATES, FROM THE STATE OF MISSOURI.
Reviewed from Preface.

Few men were more thoroughly identified with "the Great West" than Dr. Linn, and no one took a livelier interest in all that concerned the Great Valley of the Mississippi and its enterprising people, or labored with greater zeal to develop its resources, open and improve its highways, by land and water, with a view to expedite the occupation of its rich soil and inviting climate by the temperate race of toil from the East, and to facilitate its commercial intercourse with other parts of the country.

On Saturday,
New work by the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe."
DYNEVOR TERRACE; or, THE CLUE OF LIFE.
By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "Heartsease," &c. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth. $1 50.
Extract from a review of The Heir of Redclyffe and Heartsease, in The North American Review for April.

The first of her writings which made a sensation here was the "Heir," and what a sensation it was! Referring to the remains of the tear-washed covers of the copy aforesaid, we find it belonged to the "eighth thousand." How many thousands have been issued since by the publishers to supply the demand for new, and the places of drowned, dissolved, or gorge away old copies, we do not attempt to conjecture. Not individuals merely, but households—consisting in a great part of tender hearted young damsels—were plunged into mourning. With a tolerable acquaintance with fictitious heroes, (not to speak of real ones,) from Sir Charles Grandison down to the nursery idol, Carlton, we have little hesitation in pronouncing Sir Guy Morville, of Redclyffe, Baronet, the most admirable one we ever met with, in story or out. The glorious, joyous boy, the brilliant, ardent child of genius and of fortune, crowned with the beauty of his early holiness, and overshadowed with the darkness of his hereditary gloom, and the soft and touching sadness of his early death—what a sanction is there! What a vision!

PITTSBURGH, FORT WAYNE AND CHICAGO RAILROAD COMPANY.
$10,000,000.
MORTGAGE BONDS CONVERTIBLE.
$7,500,000 FOR CONSTRUCTION. $2,500,000 FOR REDEMPTION OF FUNDED DEBT.

Date, January 1, 1857. Principal payable January 1, 1887.

Interest at seven per cent., payable July 1 and January 1.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN NEW-YORK.

To provide means for the immediate completion and full equipment of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad of 468 miles, as well as to make timely provision for the redemption of the Funded Debt of the Ohio and Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, and Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad Companies respectively, maturing at different periods between Sept. 1, 1864, and July 1, 1873, the PITTSBURGH, FORT WAYNE AND CHICAGO RAILROAD COMPANY, into which those three Companies were legally merged by consolidation August 1, 1856, has authorized the issue of TEN THOUSAND BONDS, of which 3,500 of $1,000 each are known as Construction Bonds, and 6,500 of $1,000 each are known as Redemption Bonds, and are of the tenor above stated.

These Bonds are secured by a MORTGAGE IN TRUST to JOHN FERGUSON and THOMAS E. WALKER of New-York, covering the Company's Road of 468 miles, from Pittsburgh to Chicago, with all its Depot grounds, appurtenances and franchises, embracing the Railroad Bridge over the Allegheny River at Pittsburgh and the Steamboats of great value in Pittsburgh, Allegheny, Chicago, Fort Wayne and at other points.

The Mortgage provides for a Sinking Fund.

The Redemption Bonds will remain under the control of the Trustees, and be issued only from time to time, as they can be exchanged for, or are required to be sold to redeem the outstanding Bonds of the three Companies consolidated, and the privilege of such exchange will now extended to holders of those Bonds, and their attention is especially invited to the advantages that will result alike to the Consolidated Company and themselves by such exchange.

The Construction Bonds are offered for sale to provide means to finish the Road between Plymouth and Chicago, 83 miles, and to ballast it and equip and furnish it with a full stock of Rolling Machinery, Engine Houses, Shops, Station-Houses, &c., the estimates for all of which are nearly $3,500,000.

The Capital Stock of the Company is fixed at.....$16,000,000
The present cost of the Road is about.....13,000,000
The par value of the Bonds issued is.....10,000,000
The Funded debt secured on the Road is.....6,639,000

The earnings of the Road, mainly from local traffic, since the consolidation, from the 1st of August, 1856, to the 1st of May, 1857, eight months, have been over $1,270 000. The net earnings for that time are at the rate of over 7 per cent on the entire cost of the Road. They are the earnings of an unfinished and but partially ballasted and equipped road.

The earnings for 1857 are estimated at $3,000,000.

The Road is operated for 383 miles, from Pittsburg to Plymouth, Indiana, where its business passes to and from Chicago over another more circuitous route of different gauge.

The 82 miles between Plymouth and Chicago are in progress of construction, and far advanced toward completion. Four thousand tons of American iron are purchased. 40 miles of track can be laid this season, and the whole will be completed to Chicago within twelve months; after which the earnings will increase, as is believed, with the development of the business of the road, to a permanent income of $4 000,000 per annum.

The guaranties of this result are believed to exist in these facts:

1. The road has immense resources for local traffic in passengers and freights. It connects by the shortest line Pittsburg and Chicago, and passes through 24 counties and 16 county towns (including two of the largest population of those property for taxable purposes in 1853 exceeded $450,000,000—the counties embracing some of those the best developed and most productive in Ohio and Indiana, and the towns being among the most important centres of trade between Pittsburg and Chicago.

2. The road has over 15 lateral railway connections, bringing it in communication with the whole Western Railroad system—these connections conferring marked advantages to the road in route over various and large portions of its line from Chicago to Toledo, Cleveland and Buffalo, and from Pittsburg to Indianapolis, St. Louis, Cincinnati, &c. A reference to a map will more fully illustrate this point.

3. The Road is a single line, without branches, and the longest CONTINUOUS railroad in the United States, and for its whole length of 468 miles, part of a great central route, in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad, of 318 miles from Philadelphia to Chicago, and of 906 miles from New-York to Chicago, via Philadelphia, and on completion of the Allentown Road in Pennsylvania, of 885 miles only from New-York to Chicago, thus saving from 52 to 72 miles in distance via Philadelphia, and from 73 to 93 miles via Allentown, as compared with the great routes through New-York—making also the shortest route, of 918 miles, Harrisburg, between Baltimore and Chicago. In alignment and grades the entire line from Chicago to Philadelphia has marked advantages, no grades existing between Chicago and Philadelphia, going East, over 52 feet per mile. Between Pittsburg and Chicago no grades occur exceeding 47 feet per mile, and for 335 miles there are no grades over 26 4-10 feet per mile, and for more than that distance the route is practically a straight line. The Road, therefore, must become one of the most important, if not the most important, PERMANENT avenues of American commerce, and its traffic will be limited only by its capacity.

4. The Road will be completed at a low cost, as compared with other leading through lines, and has corresponding advantages in grade, alignment, &c., for safe, speedy and economical operation, and easy and cheap maintenance.

A full Exhibit of the history, condition and prospects of this Road, with copies of the Bonds, Mortgages, Articles of Consolidation, &c., has been prepared and will be furnished for the information of parties desiring to invest in the Bonds.

The Company solicits a full investigation of the merits of this loan. It is offered as one in every respect worthy the attention of capitalists, and applications are now invited for the Construction Bonds, $150,000 of which have already been sold.

A subscription for $1 000,000 of the Construction Bonds, conditional on that amount being taken, with the option to subscribers of taking $2,000,000 at the same rate, is open at the office of the Company, No 37 William-st., (2d floor,) where all needful information will be furnished.

BACKING MAYOR WOOD.—The New-York Citizens' Volunteers (Second Division,) held a meeting on Thursday evening at National Hall, Canal-street to take into consideration the recent laws passed by the Legislature at their last session.

There was quite a large attendance, and the meeting was organized by appointing JOHN CREIGHTON Chairman.

The Chair, after making a few remark respecting the new laws made by the last Legislature for this City, concluded by offering the following resolutions:

Whereas, The new Charter, and the various measures enacted for our Government, were passed without any knowledge of the wants or interest of this City, and without any regard for the well-being, or any attempt to ascertain the wishes or obtain the assent of the people, and in violation of our chartered rights, and,

Whereas, Said laws are not in accordance with the spirit, intent and meaning of the Constitution of the State or of the United States; and,

Whereas After the returns of the late census, no apportionment or redistricting of this State was had commanded by the Constitution, and the people were not therefore constitutionally represented by a proper Legislature, the individuals assuming power as Legislators, not being elected in accordance with the present population, and having usurped those offices without legal authority; and,

Whereas, The Hon. FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor of this City, as well as the Common Council thereof, have refused to recognize the rights of the Legislature of the State to deprive the citizens of the City of their constitutional rights. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we will cooperate with his Honor the Mayor in resisting, with all legal means in our power, the enforcement of all measures encroaching on our constitution 1 and chartered rights as citizens.

The resolutions were adopted, after which a Committee consisting of Messrs. WALKER, MCPHERSON CREIGHTON, EVERETT, and WILD, were appointed to confer with the 1st Division at their meeting on Friday night

The meeting then adjourned.

The Two Charities.

THE CHILD'S NURSERY AND THE WOMAN'S HOSPITAL.

A number of ladies, whose husbands are among the most prominent, wealthy, and influential citizens of New-York, have decided to place on a liberal and permanent foundation, two institutions, with a fund of $50,000 each, who-e objects are so catholic, and so warmly commend themselves to the sympathies of all good men, that the very mention of them should be enough to create a generous ambition as to who shall come to give, and give the most, not only of material aid, but of that moral countenance which is so essential to the success of good enterprises.

That the funds which may be raised will be appropriated in the direction best calculated to ensure the highest good, and in the most direct and economical manner, our readers will feel there is an all sufficient guaranty in the character of those who have them management. Among them are found Mrs. D. Ogden Wiley, Mrs. W. B. Astor, Mrs. R. B. Minturn, Mrs. Jacob Le Roy, Mrs. T. C. Doremus, Mrs. R. F. Barker Miss Catherine Sedgwick, Mrs. James Gibbons, Mrs. C. N. Bankhead, Mrs. J. G. Holbrook, Mrs. A. G. H Fitch, Miss Ann Curtis.

The Woman's Prison Association and Home, whose humane object is to take charge of such women at their discharge as authorize the hope of reform, and afford them a comfortable home, with such employment as will enable them to support themselves, and at the same time give them that social countenance which goes so far toward sustaining that self respect and self dependence which are at the foundation of all good citizenship. It is believed that by thus snatching them away from depressing influences and from dangerous and overpowering temptations, and placing them in the way of honorable maintenance, they will not only be restored to society, but will be prevented from falling into such habits as would again make sure their home at Blackwell's Island, and entail additional expense upon our City by the actual disbursement of thousands of the City funds each year. Every tax payer is personally and pecuniarily interested in doing something toward the success of this enterprise, aside from the calls of common humanity. Every commitment costs the City seventy-five dollars. Surely no other argument should be needed to secure our object.

The other charity is the "Woman's Hospital" for only sick and respectable women, to give to all who apply cleanly apartments, good nursing and such medical attendance as will secure the speediest recovery, when they will leave, to return to their domestic duties as wives and mothers, to make room for others. Those who are able will be required to pay for their accommodation, so that with the aid of this income of the permanent fund, it may become here after a self sustaining institution, and be no long r a charity, except as to the gratuitous services of those generous-hearted women who have the management of the institution.

To raise the required fund, persons can give their note payable at a convenient time hereafter, but with semi-annual interest from date until paid.

To accomplish the whole within the coming six weeks, an efficient and vigorous effort is being made by the friends of the cause. The prominent citizens of our City will be called upon to ascertain what amount they will furnish toward these great objects by cash or note. Is there a heart in this great City a husband, a father, or a brother, who will not respond promptly, gladly, largely to a cause like this?

BROADWAY'S GREATEST ATTRACTION — THE PALACE OF ART.—The old Carlton House, on the corner of Broadway and Leonard-street, will soon be among the things that were, and bustling trade, with its stern facts and figures, will usurp the place where wit and good living once reigned supreme. But all the attractions that surround that locality are not gone, and one rendered equally famous still remains in all its freshness and brilliancy. We have left to us on the opposite corner GURNEY'S PHOTOGRAPHIC PALACE OF ART, No. 349 Broadway, which upon a visit will fully compensate even for the loss of a whole row of Carlton Houses. Upon the walls of the exhibition-room can be found Hallotypes of the most artistic character, and Photographs that for correctness and accuracy of execution cannot be equaled in this City. GURNEY'S rooms are daily filled with troops of both sexes, desirous to procure his KEN 1 NOOR PHOTOGRAPHS, that are now all the rage. We do not wonder that this is the case, for upon an examination of their merits one cannot fail to be gratified with their fidelity of expression, as well as delighted with their ideal beauty. In GURNEY'S pictures there are none of the constrained and slovenly attitudes that we too often notice in works of others in the profession, but grace and ease of position mark every Photograph that GURNEY executes. In fact, the quiet repose of attitude that really makes the picture is characteristically distinctive of GURNEY'S. The many discoveries in the daguerrean art since its inception have been improved upon and chastened by the artists employed at GURNEY'S, and the splendid Hallotypes owe all their brilliancy to GURNEY'S fostering care, that has brought them to such perfection. We would advise our readers who have not done so by all means to give GURNEY a call, at No. 349 Broadway, and if they are not pleased with the magnificent portraits they can obtain only there, let them set us down as false prophets.—Extract New York Leader, May 9, 1857.

LONG ISLAND.

LONG ISLAND RAILROAD.—Yesterday morning as the train with two locomotives was coming in from Jamaica through Atlantic-street, between Smith and Boerum streets, it overtook Mr. JOHN S. BALDWIN, of Centre Moriches, L. I., who was driving into the city with a fine horse and carriage. When the locomotive came up, the horse became unmanageable Mr. BALDWIN tried to secure him, but did not succeed. The horse took the carriage against the train, which was not delayed in the least, oversetting the carriage and throwing Mrs. B. out violently upon her head on to the pavement. She was considerably bruised and her face slightly wounded. Her husband narrowly escaped being run over by the train and instantaneously killed.

The horse and broken carriage kept on towards the tunnel, running against another carriage standing on the street, and breaking that also, when a young man seeing some three or four little children right a head in the horse's track, rushed at the risk of his life and a slight bruise, and secured him. The carriage was a perfect wreck.

THURSDAY, May 21—P. M.

With the exception of the Stock Board, which was firmer, business was dull in money circles to-day. Money is easy, and prime paper in request at 8@8¾ ₱ cent. The business in Foreign Exchange goes over to Tuesday next, as there is no steam-packet to sail on Saturday. The collections from the Northwest are said to be improving since the Lakes and Canals have fully opened, but there is still some concern felt as to the extent of the realizations from that quarter on the sales of last season. The immediate indications are that the amount of Produce coming forward is larger than was estimated before the opening of navigation. The Metropolitan Bank has notified for 50 ₱ cent. of its increased capital to be paid in by 15th July, and the remainder by 15th October. The Merchants' Bank will transfer 25 ₱ cent. surplus from the old charter to the increased capital of the new bank on the 1st June. Where the old stockholders have not subscribed to the new stock, the final dividend of 25 ₱ cent. will be paid in cash on the same day.

The heavy and causeless decline in Stocks yesterday, brought in a strong class of buyers today, and although the usual efforts to keep the market under, were resorted to on the opening of the list, the dealings were large and at advancing prices to the close of the day. The contracts, cash and on time, in Southern Michigan alone, register 6,500 shares. The sales of Erie and Toledo were also heavy in amount, and in the other Roads to a fair extent. The advance in Southern Michigan from yesterday was 3 ₱ cent., the closing sales 60½ ex privilege, equal to 66 ₱ cent. with the privilege. The guaranteed Stock sold at 90, and that rate bid for more. This price, and the common Stock at 60 ₱ cent., give a market value of 6 ₱ cent. to the privilege availed of yesterday of exchanging 20 shares to each hundred at par. Toledo shares recovered 2½ ₱ cent.; Erie 1 ₱ cent. and Panama 1 ₱ cent. Illinois Central yielded 1 ₱ cent. on the cash price of yesterday. There was not much done in the list of Bonds. The speculators sold Reading down to 78¾ ₱ cent. in the forenoon, but the bids stood 79¼@78 at the close. The market, generally, closed quite firm.

The recent award of the Second Mortgage Loan of the Galena and Chicago Company was to the amount of $2,767,000 to 248 applicants, all stockholders, and of a total proprietary of 1,300. The whole applications were for over two millions of dollars.

The Sub-Treasury received to-day $90,235; paid $89,046, and held at the close a balance of $13,693,956.

The following is the list of the awards of the Guaranteed Loan of the Southern Michigan Company, which could not be prepared, at the office, in season for the press this morning. We republish the introductory circular with the blanks properly filled.

Circular.

OFFICE OF THE M. S. AND N. I. RAILROAD COMPANY, No. 18 William-street, NEW YORK, May 20, 1857.

The Directors of the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad Company present herewith a statement of the applications made for the $3,000,000 of its 10 ₱ cent. guaranteed stock, and of the manner in which the same has been awarded.

This subscription was opened on the 7th of the present month, and at the close of the books this day it reached the sum of $6,615,089, embracing 902 different subscriptions. The subscribers represent, in the aggregate, about $27,000,000 of the general stock of the Company, standing in their names on the books. In compliance with the terms of the original proposition, there has been awarded to each subscriber four shares of the guaranteed stock for every ten shares of the general stock held by him, and in the same proportion for a greater or less amount; and these several awards appear in the list herewith.

In announcing this result, the Directors express their gratification at the prompt and liberal manner in which the stockholders have responded to their appeal. They have thus been enabled to realize, without sacrifice, cash means to an amount sufficient to place the finances of the Company in a satisfactory condition. They consider the unsold assets and securities of the Company sufficient to provide for the remainder of its unfunded debt, and that they may be converted as fast as may be necessary for that purpose.

The entire system of roads of this Company, embracing the Goshen Line, just opened, and the Detroit Road and Jackson Branch, now nearly finished, will be in operation in July; and the Board deem this a proper occasion to renew the expression of their confident opinion that the earnings of the Company for the future, as for the past, will be sufficient to provide for interest upon its debt, to meet the annual contributions to the sinking fund, and to make to the stockholders regular and liberal dividends upon both classes of the stock. This result is indeed insured by the past earnings of the road, allowing 50 ₱ cent. for expenses, at which it is confidently believed the road may be operated. The new portion of our road, now about to be opened, will, in the opinion of the Board, add largely to our receipts; and it is believed that $3,000,000 per annum will be the minimum of the earnings for the first year after our roads are fully in operation.

The Board expect to accomplish these results, and to that end will endeavor to introduce the utmost efficiency and economy into every department of the management of the road. The Board have adopted the plan of a guaranteed stock, for a limited amount, distributed pro rata amongst the stockholders, because they regarded it as the most economical and equitable method of providing means, but without any idea of interfering with regular dividends upon the remaining stock of the Company. Inasmuch, however, as the dividends on the guaranteed stock of the Company are made payable in June and December, it has been deemed advisable to change the dividend days upon the general stock to April and October, as this will more nearly equalize the payments of the Company during the year. By order of the Board.

EDWIN G. LITCHFIELD, JOHN WILKINSON, JOHN A. C. GRAY, JOHN STRYKER, WILLIAM B. WELLES, } Executive Committee.

AFFAIRS IN UTAH.

Condition of Affairs Among the Mormons—Interesting Letter from Hon. B. G Ferris.

ITHACA, Thursday, May 21, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times.

SIR: You deserve the thanks of the country for the pains you have taken to obtain reliable information from the pontificate of BRIGHAM YOUNG. The unscrupulous set of villains, congregated in the valley of the Great Salt Lake, would put Pandemonium to shame; and the time has come when their crimes can no longer go unwhipped of justice without national disgrace. I have watched with intense interest the events which have transpired in that interesting region, since I left it in May, 1853; and I am gratified to see that in your paper of the 20th inst., you have [illegible] that which has generally escaped observation—the true state of the facts in regard to the real strength of the Saints, and, the effect which even a small force would have in protecting those who are subject to the grinding tyranny of the Mormon Church.

The population of Utah has been greatly overrated. In the early part of 1853, it was roundly estimated at from 30,000 to 35,000; but at the Fall conference of that year, as appears from a regular census taken by themselves, it did not quite come up to 30,000. In the Summer of 1853, at the request of my publishers, I prepared a supplemental chapter, for a new edition of my work on the Mormons, and took great pains to inform myself in regard to the population. My facts, I think, are entirely reliable, the most important being obtained from the Mormon agency at St. Louis. From this and other sources, it appeared that the immigration of 1854 was only about 3,500; that 3,600 was the sum total, reported as shipped from Liverpool for 1855; and that 3,000 only were the numbers intended to be sent over the plains the same year. With these data, and making a fair allowance for loss and gain, by desertion and natural increase, I computed the population of 1855 at 28,500. In popular estimation, however, the immigration of the year in question amounted to about 20,000, one paper made it 30,000. But this magnifying process is easily accounted for, inasmuch as a single ship load of 500 are noticed at their landing in New-York, and at different points of their transit through the country, until their numbers swell to as many thousands.

The truth is, BRIGHAM YOUNG has neither the means of defraying the expense of a large emigration, nor of sustaining his new victims after their arrival. His hand-cart system, which has proved a wretched failure, is a confession of poverty, and would never have been resorted to, had the means of procuring the ordinary necessities and conveniences of travel been at hand. I have lately had information from Salt Lake City, that from one-half to two-thirds of those who adopted this novel mode of conveyance perished by the way.

What then is the present population of Utah? How it can by possibility be made to number 40,000, is more than I can see. Their own statements are not generally to be relied upon, inasmuch as they have been in the habit of magnifying their numbers to aid in the business of proselyting; and a lot of more ready and unscrupulous liars, in all points involving what they believe their interests, probably never disgraced mankind. The publication of their census of the Fall of 1853 was an impropriety—a lapsus linguæ—of which they have not since been guilty.

The time has, I think, come when decisive measures should be taken to remove this plague-spot from the map of the country. But how is this to be done? It is very easy to talk of desirable results, but not quite so easy to produce them. Some are for marching a large army into Utah, and having a Mormon war outright. The true policy of the country towards them does not, in my judgment, require any such emergency. I do not believe the Mormons will ever assume an attitude of open resistance, unless driven to it by the necessity of self-defence. The leaders are perfectly aware, not only of the great power of the United States, but of the crushing weight of public opinion against them. If a military force be sent, and certainly one should be, instead of open resistance, they will resort to a warfare more congenial to their inclinations, such as seducing soldiers from their allegiance, secret assassination by poison, cutting off stragglers disguised as natives, and such other means of destruction as a direct influx from the infernal regions may suggest to their willing minds. It is all-important, therefore, that the officers and men sent there should be selected in reference to character, rather than numbers. A large force is not needed, but one respectable in all respects certainly is.

Many will, doubtless, insist there is open rebellion there now, and refer to the destruction of the public books and records, the violent breaking up of the District Court, and other things of like nature. But in this they are mistaken. Those acts of violence did, no doubt, occur, but at the hands of irresponsible ruffians, whose acts BRIGHAM YOUNG will disavow, and every one of them will triumphantly prove an alibi, if brought to trial. Already has FERRAMORG LITTLE, one of the Saintly gang, undertaken to impeach the statement of Judge DRUMMOND. But let no one doubt the verity of the Judge's statement. I know he has correctly stated in regard to LITTLE himself, who was Mayor or Marshal of the city while I was there, and about whose antecedents, rich of Mormon odor, I was well informed.

There is a great mass of discontent in the Territory, which, by prudent management, may be turned to good account. I assume this to be the case, because I found it to be so in 1853, and the same causes which operated then are in greater activity now. In reference to this, a careful selection of a Governor is a matter of great importance. In this connection, allow me to do justice to General PIERCE. We are so much in the habit of denouncing the acts of FRANKLIN PIERCE, all and sundry, that we hardly yield him that due which, by the popular adage, is freely given to the incarnation of evil himself. There can be no breach of confidence now in stating that, soon after my return from Utah, in an interview with General PIERCE, I took the liberty of suggesting the propriety of sending a force to the Territory, for the purpose of keeping the Indians in subjection, not imposing enough to excite jealousy, but yet sufficiently effective to keep the Mormons in check. This force, however, it was suggested, should be under the command of an army officer, (to be appointed Governor,) who, superadded to his military qualifications, would not only be able to discover the discontent existing in consequence of the tyranny of the Church, but to guarantee to the discontented that ample protection would be afforded them. The President assented to these views, and intended to carry them into effect in the subsequent appointment of Colonel STEPTOE. That he failed was not his fault, but that of the Senate, who confirmed the appointment, clogged with the condition that the Colonel should resign his military command. Neither the Senate, nor, indeed, the public, were then prepared to receive, without many grains of allowance, the statements made by myself and others in regard to the Mormons.

I have made this communication longer than I intended, but cannot forbear saying a few words about polygamy. I deem it unwise, at present, to make any direct effort to suppress this practice. It will be found very difficult to do so, by the ordinary common law proceedings by indictment and trial, because the Juries will be composed wholly, or in part of Mormons. Such efforts attended with failure, will only increase the evil. On the other hand, it may be discouraged, and finally extinguished by indirect means, leaving the inhabitants in freedom on the subject. In the first place, every Mormon officer, from BRIGHAM YOUNG down, should be speedily removed. This will deprive them of much of the means of supporting their harems. The three thousand and odd dollars which the head of the hierarchy annually draws from the Public Treasury, go a great ways in furnishing the numerous Mrs. YOUNGS with provender.

In the next place, when females who are worth saving, and who are now entirely at the mercy of the Church, shall find themselves protected from its oppression by a competent Governor, backed up by a reasonable amount of the ultima ratio, it will in my judgment work a gradual and sure discouragement of the offensive practice.

Yours, very truly, BENJ. G. FERRIS.

THE QUARANTINE INJUNCTION REMOVED.

THE EXCISE LAW, &C., &C.

Nothing of serious importance occurred yesterday in connection with the Police question. Mr. Carpenter, the newly-appointed Deputy Superintendent, did not call upon Mr. Matsell to demand the transfer of the books, papers, &c., connected with his office, but it is said that he will do so to-day. Nearly all the Captains received on Thursday night official notification of Mr. Matsell's removal and Mr. Carpenter's appointment, but only a few read the notification to the men under their command. Capt. Squires, of the Eleventh Ward, was in his Station-House on Thursday night, at the midnight roll call, and assumed his seat behind the desk. First-Lieutenant Croft, and Second-Lieutenant Cameron were also present. Lieutenant Croft called the roll, and assigned the men their posts, after which Capt. Squires rose and addressed the men as follows:

GENTLEMEN: I am called upon to say to you that in consequence of the present excitement in the Police Department, I have taken counsel in reference to the course to be pursued, under such circumstances, and I have come to the conclusion that, in obedience to the laws of the State, it is advisable to recognize the new Police Commissioners, and I shall hereafter make my returns in accordance with their instructions.

The Captain then read the notice from Superintendent Tallmadge (published in yesterday's TIMES,) that George W. Matsell had been removed from, and Mr. Carpenter appointed to the office of Deputy Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police.

Second Lieutenant Cameron addressed the men also. He said that he heartily approved of his Captain's determination, and that, for himself, he would hereafter obey only the orders of the new Commissioners, because he believed that they only had power to command the Police Department.

First Lieutenant Croft then arose. He said he, too, had a word to say, whereupon he read the following:

GENTLEMEN: Under the present excitement I wish to state to you how I feel in this matter. You all well know that Captain Squires called a meeting of all the force of this District, and told us that the Captains had been called before the Mayor, and as regards the new Police Commissioners, until the matter was settled by the Court of Appeals, in which he has failed to keep his word as a gentleman. And now, men, I do not recognize the persons claiming to be Police Commissioners, other than the Mayor and City Judge Russell and Recorder Smith; and I contend that this station-house is the private property of the City and County of New-York; and the Mayor and Common Council have control of the same. I shall obey all orders received from the Mayor, and at the same time thinking those parties not recognizing the Mayor, intruding on the City property; and at the same time, stating to Captain Squires that I shall not recognize him as Captain of the District; neither will I recognize Lieutenant Cameron.

Lieutenant Croft then read the following:

MAYOR'S OFFICE,
NEW-YORK, Friday, May 15, 1857.

Lieutenant Croft is hereby authorized and directed to assume full charge and control of the Station house, as well as all other corporation property, as well as the Police of that District, in case the Captain thereof in any manner recognizes the authority of the persons assuming to be Police Commissioners.

[Signed] FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Lieutenant Croft then desired the men to declare themselves, as their names were called, which of the Police Boards they should obey. The men complied and the result was, 35 for the old and 8 for the new Board. The men present were then dismissed on their beats. They left in silence. A number of the Police of this District were not in the Station-house when this vote was taken. Some were on beat and some in "bunk."

Captain Dilks, of the Fifteenth Ward, and Speight of the Twenty-first Ward, also read the order of Superintendent Tallmadge to their men, and each sent the returns to Deputy Superintendent F. Carpenter, at No. 88 White street, instead of to "Colonel" Matsell's place. Reports from these Wards, however, were also sent to the Chief's Office by the Lieutenants in command, who still adhere to the old Board.

Sergeant Johns, of the Reserve Corps, of the Chief's Office, yesterday revolted against the old Board, and made his report to Deputy Carpenter. Sergeant Johns is a First Ward policeman, and is the first member of the Department in that Ward who has shown any sympathy for the new Commissioners.

Commissioners DRAPER, BOWEN, NYE, and CHOLWELL, met at their new quarters in White street, at 10 o'clock, and immediately repaired to an inner room, where they held a session. The first business in order was the trial of Lieutenant Horrigan, (recently made Captain by the old Board,) and Policeman Files, (appointed Second Lieutenant by Messrs. Wood and Russell,) and Evans, all of the Fifth Ward. The charge was that of insubordination. Lieutenant Daniel C. Horrigan was first called. His name was called by the Clerk, but he did not answer. The trial proceeded.

Deputy Superintendent Carpenter was called, and sworn. He testified as follows:

On the 16th of May I received a copy of the State law, and read the same to my men, stating that I no longer would recognize the old Board of Commissioners, but I would hereafter obey the new Board, and requested them to do the same. Lieut. Horrigan then addressed the men, saying that he likewise had received instructions, but from the Mayor, and that he (the Mayor) was still at the head of the Police Department, and that the men were to obey him (the Mayor.) This was said in the presence of the whole force. I then left the Station-House, but returned. I remained all night in charge. When I got up in the morning I found a note lying on my table, with a complaint against me before the old Board for insubordination, said complaint being made by Lieut. Horrigan.

No defence was made. Decision reserved (according to roll) until to-day.

Messrs. Files and Evans were then tried. They failed to appear. The evidence against them was substantially the same as that preferred against Horrigan. Decision in this case was also reserved.

No further public business was done by the Commissioners. They will meet again to-day at the usual hour.

The insubordination of Captain Squires, of the Eleventh Ward, and others of the Thirteenth and Seventeenth Wards, being made known to him, Mayor Wood summoned Judge Russell to meet him, and both, in the afternoon, met, and made the following dismissals, promotions and appointments:

ELEVENTH WARD—William D. Croft, Captain, vice Squires, dismissed.

John M. Cornell, First Lieutenant, vice Croft, promoted.

Thomas R. Barton, Second Lieutenant, vice Cameron, dismissed.

James Corran, policeman, vice Cornell, dismissed.

Luther H. Wygnant, policeman, vice Barton, promoted.

THIRTEENTH WARD—Patrick Calhoun, policeman, vice Steers, dismissed.

SEVENTEENTH WARD—Charles A. Russell, policeman, vice —— Nugent, resigned.

The old Commissioners then adjourned to meet again to-day when they will take further action in punishment of the insubordinates.

The Mayor's Office was filled all day with conspicuous parties opposed to the "Albany Commission" and "centralization of power," and in favor of "maintaining the rights of the City." Many of them had private audiences with the Mayor who remained in his office until a late hour.

At the office of the new Board, the throng was not less. A placard at the main entrance read, "applicants for office will remain in the basement below," and to the "basement below" went a great many to wait in patience.

In "the room above" were a great many on official business, including a number of Policemen in uniform. The temporary clerks were kept very busy, and the General Superintendant had not time to nod to one-half of those who sought to speak with him on "important business." He issued orders during the day, however, to Deputy Superintendent Folk, of Brooklyn, to detail all of the Brooklyn reserve force to protect the Sunday School children, who have their anniversary on the 26th inst.

Ex-Captain Maynard, of the Nineteenth Ward, appeared and offered to the Commissioners the voluntary aid of from 150 to 200 men until peace is restored, and John B. Dengleden, of the Nineteenth Ward, offered to the Board the gratuitous use of a large hall at the corner of Fifty-ninth-street and Third-avenue. A similar offer of a dwelling, located at No. 25 East Fifteenth-street, was offered by E. H. Jennings of the Eighteenth Ward.

Superintendent Tallmadge is not disposed to press matters to a collision. The Commissioners will not take summary measures with such of the Captains as deny their rule, but will first test their juri-diction by a friendly law-suit with Mr. Matsell, for refusing to obey the summons to surrender his office and its appurtenances.

Of the twenty-two Captains, only four have as yet given in their adhesion to the new Commission, viz: Carpenter, Fifth Ward; Squires, Eleventh Ward; Dilks, Fifteenth Ward; and Speight, Twenty-first Ward.

With these Captains several of the Lieutenants have taken part, and in many of the Wards a majority of the men are favorable to the new law.

It is expected that to-day several other Captains and Lieutenants will revolt against the Wood-Russell Commission.

This of course will give further work to both Commissioners.

The new Commissioners have not yet made any appointment of "Inspector" for the Fifth District, in place of Carpenter, promoted, so Messrs. Horrigan, Martin and Files still act.

Every day adds strength to the new Commissioners, as every day more men are proclaiming in their favor.

The excitement in the Department increases rather than diminishes.

An Armed Organization to Sustain Mayor Wood.

The First Division of the New-York citizen volunteers held a meeting last evening at National Hall, Canal street, to follow the example of the Second Division, and express their views concerning the recent laws of the Legislature. There were some fifty persons present, including three of a Committee of Five, appointed from the Second Division, to meet and confer with them.

Alderman WILSON, of the Second Ward, was chosen Chairman. After calling the meeting to order the Aldermen made a brief opening speech in allusion to the laws passed by the last Legislature in reference to New-York City. He thought no sensible man could for a moment doubt that these laws were unconstitutional. This fact stood out broad and glaring on their face. He deemed it necessary that all citizens who had any respect for their rights should array themselves in opposition to those laws. He had been informed and believed that the Republican Party of the City had a military force in readiness to carry the new laws into effect, should occasion require the intervention of such force. He considered it their duty to be prepared to combat this Republican force and sustain the present Mayor and Commonalty of the City. He announced, in conclusion, that several resolutions had been drawn up for the action of the meeting.

The following resolutions were read to the meeting:

Whereas, We have reason to and we do believe that there exists unlawful and secret associations in our midst to do the bidding of the Albany Regency in carrying out the objects of its nefarious legislation, therefore,

Resolved, That at all times and every hazard we are prepared to support our municipal authorities in their praiseworthy opposition to the Black Republican Junta, the Albany Regency and all its myrmidons.

Resolved, That we form a military organization for the purpose of sustaining the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York in their legislation in regard to the laws affecting the City of New-York, passed at the last Session of the Legislature of this State.

Resolved, That we, members of volunteer target companies, members of independent military companies and citizens of the City and County of New-York, do organize ourselves into a military organization to be known as the New-York Citizen Volunteers, the same to be governed as near as can be, by the rules and regulations of the United States Army, such organization to be one division of one district comprising the whole City and County of New-York.

The resolutions passed at the meeting of the Second Division, on Thursday evening, and published in yesterday's DAILY TIMES, were also read.

Captain CREIGHTON spoke briefly to the resolutions. He said he objected first to the manner in which they were drawn up, from an apprehension that the public might place a wrong construction upon their spirit and intent. He had made up his mind, however, that what ought to be said should be spoken out plainly. He, therefore, went for the resolutions as they were presented, however strong they might seem.

Captain CRUGER, late of General WALKER's army in Nicaragua, coincided with Captain CREIGHTON. He thought any step justifiable to prevent the new State legislation from going into effect.

All the resolutions read were passed, when the meeting adjourned.

TWO OF THE COMMITTEE DISOLAIM.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Will you have the kindness to insert the following card:

I was greatly surprised on my return from my country seat this morning, to read in this morning's TIMES a notice of a meeting of the Second Division of Citizen Volunteers, in opposition to the Laws, &c. I see my name is used as a member of a Committee to confer with the First Division, who meet to-night in relation to future action.

I desire at this time only to say that my name was used without my knowledge or consent, and that I disapprove entirely of the proceedings; and shall as early as Monday, take occasion to give my views at length upon the subjects referred to in the publication.

H. N. WILD, No. 458 Broome-street.
No. 293 Broadway, New York.
Friday, May 22d, 1857.

To the Editor New-York Daily Times.

SIR:—I notice an article in the Herald of this morning, headed, "Meeting of the Second Division of the New-York Citizen Volunteers in opposition to the laws of the Albany Legislature," I am named as one of the committee appointed to confer with the First Division.

The use of my name in this connection was wholly without my knowledge, consent, or approbation. I do not understand the Citizen Volunteers to be a political organization in any respect. My position, as an officer thereof, is one of a purely military character, and having no possible political purpose, and while in common with other citizens I have and profess my political opinions, I do not wish them to be considered as in any way connected with, or dependant upon my connection with the "Citizen Volunteers."

I refused Mr. CREIGHTON, the Chairman, to allow my name to be appended to the call for this meeting, because I disapproved of the objects for which it was called, and I now choose not to be responsible for what it has done or may do.

The rights and duties of citizenship need not, and, in my opinion, should not be confounded or mixed up with the rights and duties of a volunteer militia.

Your ob't servant,
WILDES P. WALKER.

The Germans on State Legislation for the City.

The German Democratic Central Club have passed the following resolutions:

Whereas, The late so-called Republican Legislature at Albany have passed a series of laws which grossly violate the liberties and rights of the citizen as well as the Constitution of the state, which is the highest law, and also the independence of this municipality; and

Whereas, Our City officers, selected by the people have been either arbitrarily discharged from their functions, or like arbitrarily limited in their lawful powers and other officers, nominated by the Governor, have been placed in their stead; and

Whereas, The people must now pay such new made officers, and thereby are subjected to additional taxation; and

Whereas, These laws do not only violate the rights and liberties of the citizen and the sovereignty of the people, but take City property and make it State property; and

Whereas, These laws do concentrate all powers in the State, and do sanction an odious overcesership and a tyrannical classification of the citizens into the rich and poor, and thus abolish the principal of equality among the citizens; and

Whereas, The honorable the Mayor and Common Council, as the immediate representatives of our interests, have, by their firm and energetic action, tried to avert the impending dangers, by invoking the courts and appealing to the sovereign people, thus questioning the constitutionality of these laws; and

Whereas, We, as free and independent citizens, know how to estimate properly this action, and wherein they have our sympathy and our support in a high degree; therefore, be it

Resolved, 1. That we, the German Democrats, render to the honorable the Mayor and the Common Council our thanks and our acknowledgment for their manly and dignified conduct, and that we give to them our assurance that they, under all circumstances, can rely upon our active assistance in the warfare against a corrupt Legislature which tramples our rights under its feet.

2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the honorable the Mayor and Common Council, and be published in the papers.

NEW-YORK, May 6, 1857.

To the Hon. Fernando Wood, Mayor of the City of New-York:

DEAR SIR: I have the pleasure to transmit to your Honor a copy of the resolutions adopted at a meeting of the German Democratic Central Club, held last Monday evening, in the Shakespeare Hotel.

Permit me to add, I am satisfied that the Germans in this City, without party distinction, will adhere to your Honor in the struggle in which you are engaged to the last. Whatever may happen, try your German friends and you will not be disappointed.

I avail myself of this opportunity to assure your Honor of my high regard, with which I remain your most obedient servant, DR. CHAS. NANZ.

1st Secretary German Democratic Central Club, No. 3 Chambers-street.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 16, 1857.

DEAR SIR: I am in the receipt of your kind note endorsing the very complimentary resolutions passed by the German Democratic Central Club, held last week at the Shakespeare Hotel.

It is pleasant to know that so large and reputable a body of men indorses and encourages the action which I have taken to resist the usurpation of the Black Republicans at Albany. With such support, it is impossible that any public officer can fail to do his whole duty.

Please return my thanks to the gentlemen composing the Central Club for their well written and patriotic resolutions. Very truly, yours,

Dr. CHAS. NANZ. FERNANDO WOOD.

How the Police get on in Brooklyn.

The Police difficulties in Brooklyn are at a standstill. The only change yesterday worthy of note was the return of Captain MILLER, of the Ninth Ward, which was made out to the "Deputy Superintendent of Police," instead of the "Chief of Police," as heretofore. The Police now stand as follows:

IN FAVOR OF OBEYING THE LAW.

Captain Joel Smith, First District.....32 men.
Captain Henry Goischard, Fifth District.....30 men.
Captain John Stilwell, Seventh District.....8 men.
Captain Thomas Coombs, Eighth District.....8 men.
Captain Joel Miller, Ninth District.....10 men.

THOSE OPPOSED TO THE LAW

are Captain Thomas King, Second District...24 men.
Captain Geo N. Carr, Third District.....37 men.
Captain James Powers, Fourth District...25 men.
Captain James Mullen, Sixth District.....24 men.

All of the men in the first five Districts named openly obey the law, and in the remaining Districts a large majority of the men would do so if they felt safe in it, as the following votes taken in evidence.

In the Third and Fourth Districts a vote was taken yesterday, which resulted as follows:

For the Law, Third District..23. Fourth District..17.
Against the Law, Third District..4 Fourth District... 8.

In the Second District Captain King, the two Assistant Captains are for the Law, and many of the men, but they dare not publicly express their opinions.

The same is the case in the Sixth District, Captain Mullen.

Motion to Modify the Injunction Restraining the Corporation from Paying $10,000 for Counsel to Aid Mayor Wood.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.
Before Judge Birdseye.

BROOKLYN, May 22, 1857.

At the opening of this Court, RICHARD BUSTEED, Esq., Counsellor to the Corporation of New-York, moved to have the injunction, obtained at the instance of RICHARD S ROBERTS, of Brooklyn, restraining the payment of $10,000 under the resolution of the Common Council, toward defraying the expenses of contesting the constitutionality of recent acts passed by the Legislature, affecting the City and County of New-York, modified so that they may exercise the proper power of a legislative body.

The complaint and affidavits of Mr. BUSTEED, Alderman MCSPEDON, and Comptroller FLAGG were introduced, to show that the passage of the resolution was not obtained through any improper means, or for any improper purpose.

The following papers were read in the case:

THE COMPLAINT.

SUPREME COURT.—Richard S. Roberts vs. The Mayor and Commonalty of the City and County of New York.—The plaintiff shows to the Court:—That he resides in Kings County, and that he owns real estate in the City and County of New York which is subject to taxation, and that he has owned such real estate for several years last past, and has paid taxes thereupon up to this date.

That the Legislature of the State of New-York, at the last session thereof, passed an act entitled "An Act to establish a Metropolitan Police District, and to provide for the government thereof," which the plaintiff is advised and believes and charges is the law of the land.

That as the plaintiff is informed and believes, after the said act took effect, and with a view to obstruct and prevent the execution and administration thereof, Fernando Wood, the Mayor of the City of New-York, commenced an action in the character of a taxpayer of said City in the Supreme Court of the First Judicial District, against Simeon Draper, James Bowen, James W. Nye, Jacob Cholwell, and James S. T. Stranahan, the persons composing the Board of Police Commissioners, appointed by the Governor by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the State of New York, under and pursuant to said act, to perform the administrative duties in said act prescribed to said Board, and at the same time procured an injunction in said action restraining the said Board from performing the said duties, which injunction, as the plaintiff has been informed and believes, has since been dissolved upon cause shown.

That as the plaintiff has been informed and believes, and charges, the Attorney-General of the State of New-York, at the instance and on the relation of the said Fernando Wood, has commenced another action in the nature of a quo warranto, in the said Court and District, against the said persons so appointed a Board of Police Commissioners, under and pursuant to said act, and procured from said Court, in said action, another injunction against the said persons composing said Board, restraining them from performing their said duties under the said act, and that a motion to dissolve the said injunction is now pending and undetermined.

That as the plaintiff is informed and believes, the prosecution of the said actions is attended with large expense in counsel fees and otherwise, which has been and is being incurred at the instance of the said Wood, but with the expectation that the same would be reimbursed out of the treasury, and so involuntarily by the tax-payers of the said City.

That, and as the plaintiff believes at the instance, and by the procurement of the said Wood, the Municipal Councils of said City, in both Boards thereof, have, by resolutions passed on or about the 27th and 28th days of April, 1857, appropriated the sum of $10,000 to be applied to the expenses of the said actions, in the employment of counsel and otherwise, and in the prosecution of other actions contemplated by the said Wood, to obstruct the execution and administration of other acts relating to the said City, passed by the said Legislature, at the last session thereof, and which the plaintiff is advised and believes and charges are the law of the land, which resolutions the plaintiff believes and charges have gone through the usual forms of local legislation, and have become effective, so far as the law permits resolutions passed for such illegal purposes to take effect.

And the plaintiff further says that he believes and has charges, that unless this honorable Court shall interfere by injunction to prevent the same, the said sum of money so illegally appropriated, will be paid out of the Treasury of the said City for the said unlawful purposes and to the great wrong and injury of the plaintiff and other tax-payers of the City of New-York.

That he is advised and believes and charges, that the said action and appropriation of said sum of money, by the said Municipal Councils, are contrary to law, and that the said proceedings of the said Wood, in aid of which the said appropriation was made, are factious, of evil example, tend to bring the law and the Executive Authorities into contempt, tend to the resistance of the Police Laws of the State and the disturbance of the public peace, and are highly injurious to the citizens and tax payers of the City of New York.

The plaintiff files this complaint on behalf of himself, and of all other persons tax payers of the said City of New-York, who may come in and constitute or otherwise become parties to be affected by this action, and prays that an order in the nature of an injunction may be made by this Honorable Court, restraining the said Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New York, and the officers and agents of the said Corporation respectively, from paying the whole or any part of the said sum of money for or on account of any of the purposes contemplated by or expressed in the said resolutions, passed by the Board of Councilmen April 27, 1857, and by the Board of Aldermen on the 28th day of April, 1857, (the said Boards composing the legislative officers of the said Municipal Corporation,) and that the Court will grant to the plaintiff and others, in whose behalf he prosecutes as aforesaid, such further, or such other and further relief as to the Court shall seem meet, together with the costs of this action.

Sworn to by RICHARD S. ROBERTS.

THE ANSWER.

SUPREME COURT, KINGS COUNTY.—The Mayor and the Commonalty of the City of New-York, at the suit of Richard S. Roberts.—The defendants in the above entitled action, for answer to the complaint herein say: They have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief, whether the plaintiff owns real estate in the City of New-York which is subject to taxation, or whether he has owned such real estate for several years last past, and has paid taxes thereupon up to the time alleged in the complaint, or up to any time, and they leave the plaintiff to make such proof thereof as he may be advised is material or necessary.

They admit that the Legislature of the State of New-York, at its last session, passed an act, entitled "An act to establish a Metropolitan Police District, and to provide for the government thereof," but these defendants say that they are advised and believe, and upon this information and belief say, the act is not the law of the land, but is in violation of the Constitution of the State of New-York. They admit the allegations of the complaint respecting the commencement by the Mayor of New-York, in his capacity as taxpayer, of the suit in the complaint mentioned, to prevent the execution and administration of the said law, and that the injunction granted therein was dissolved. They admit that the Attorney General of the State, on the relation of Fernando Wood, commenced the action in the nature of a quo warranto, referred to in the said complaint, and procured in the said suit the other injunction referred to in the complaint, but, upon their belief, they deny that the said last-mentioned suit was brought by the said Attorney-General at the instance of the said Fernando Wood, or at the instance of any other person, but they allege it was brought by the said Attorney-General as the law officer of the State of New-York, and in the discharge of what he considered the duty appertaining to his office; and the defendants further say that the said action so brought, as aforesaid, by the Attorney-General, was brought by him to test the question of the constitutionality of the said act, entitled as aforesaid, and that the said action is still pending and undetermined.

These defendants, upon their information and belief, admit that the prosecution of the said suits will be attended with large expenses for counsel and other fees, but they deny any information or knowledge sufficient to form a belief whether the said Wood expects that the expenses thereof will be paid out of the City Treasury, also involuntarily, by the tax-payers of the City of New-York.

And these defendants deny that at the instance and by the procurement of the said Wood, the Municipal Councils of the said City, in both Boards thereof, have, by resolutions passed on or about the 27th or 28th day of April, 1857, at any time, appropriating the sum of $10,000 or any sum, to be applied to the expenses of the aforesaid actions in the employment of counsel or otherwise, and they deny that the said Municipal Councils have appropriated the sum of $10,000, or any sum to be applied towards the prosecution of any action contemplated or to be prosecuted by the said Wood, in his private capacity, or in his capacity of Mayor, except under the advice and control, and with the consent of the Counsel of the Corporation of the City of New-York, to obstruct the execution and administration of other acts of the Legislature, passed at the last session thereof, relative to the City of New-York.

And for a further answer to the complaint herein, these defendants say that as to the laws passed by the Legislature of this State at its last annual session, affecting the City of New-York, other than the law entitled "an act to establish a Metropolitan Police District, and to provide for the government thereof," they have not been advised by the counsel to the Corporation of the City of New-York, who is by law their legal adviser, whether the same, or any, or which of them are legal enactments and the law of the land, and they, therefore, neither admit nor deny the allegation of the complaint that such other acts are the law of the land, and say that they have no knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief, and they leave the plaintiff to make such proof thereof as he may be advised is material or necessary.

And the defendants deny that the said appropriation of $10,000 is contrary to law, and they deny that it was made for unlawful or improper purpose or with any but a lawful and proper motive, and for a lawful and proper object.

And these defendants further say that the following are the same resolutions passed by the both branches of the Municipal Legislature, and approved by the Mayor of New-York, to which reference is made in the said complaint, and they say that by the laws of the land they were and are authorized to pass such and similar resolutions, and that the object of them is a legal one, and the appropriation of moneys therefor a just and necessary exercise of their discretion and powers in the premises:

Whereas, It is represented that the Legislature of this State has, during its present session, passed various acts relating to the City of New-York; and

Whereas, It is represented that many of said acts are calculated to, and do, impair or interfere with the property, rights, franchises, privileges, and powers of the Corporation of the City of New-York; and

Whereas, The said acts were passed without the application or consent of said Corporation; therefore

Resolved, That the Counsel to the Corporation be and he is hereby requested to report to the Common Council, without delay, what acts have been so passed by said Legislature, setting forth copies thereof.

Resolved, That, if he deem it necessary, the said Counsel be authorized and empowered to consult and advise with such other counsel as he shall see fit, touching the validity and effect of the said several acts, and each of them, and present to the Common Council an opinion in detail in regard thereto.

Resolved, That until said report and opinion shall be received, the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York, its officers, agents and servants, will wholly refrain and abstain from any action calculated to admit, recognize, or acquiesce in the validity of any act, or part of an act, which may have been passed by the said Legislature, touching the property, rights, powers, privileges, jurisdiction or franchises of the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, except such acts as may have been passed by said Legislature upon the application of said Mayor. A dermen and Commonalty, and that in case any attempt shall be made by any person to enforce, or carry into effect such acts, or any of them, it shall be the duty of the said Corporation Counsel immediately to institute proper legal proceedings to prevent the same, and protect the rights of the City.

Resolved, That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for this purpose, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to pay the charges of such additional counsel to the Corporation may require.

And the defendants allege that it was not the intention or purpose in the passage of the said resolutions to authorize the payment of any services in any suit brought by the Mayor in his capacity as Mayor, or tax-payer, or in any capacity except as directed by the Common Council, and then only under the advice and by and through the Counsel of the Corporation.

RICHARD BUSTEED, Att'y. for Defend'ts.

ALDERMAN M'SPEDON.

City and County of New-York, ss.—Thomas M. McSpedon, of the said City, being duly sworn, says that he is one of the Aldermen of the City of New-York, and of the defendants herein—that he has heard read the foregoing answer and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to those matters stated on information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true.

THOMAS McSPEDON,

Sworn before me, this 14th day of May, 1857,
JAMES SANDFORD, Commissioner of Deeds.

COMPTROLLER FLAGG.

Azariah C. Flagg, of said City and County, being duly sworn, says: That he is the Comptroller of the City of New-York; that he has heard read so much of this affidavit of Richard Busteed in the above entitled action, and hereby annexed, which says "that on the 1st day of May, 1857, he verbally notified the Comptroller of the City of New-York that no moneys must be paid under the said resolutions, or out of the said appropriations, for any legal services in the suit brought by the Mayor against Simeon Draper and others to test the constitutionality of the Police law, or in the suit brought by the Attorney General, on the relation of said Wood, or to defray the expenses of any suit that might hereafter be instituted by the said Wood to test the validity or constitutionality of any of the recent acts of the Legislature, in which the City of New-York was interested," and the same is true in very particular.

And defendant further says that he has not paid, or caused to be paid, any moneys for any legal services whatever attempted to be authorized under its said resolutions, or out of said appropriations, nor does he intend so to do unless so advised by the Counsel to the Corporation.

SUPREME COURT, KINGS COUNTY.

The Mayor and Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York at the suit of Richard S Roberts, City and County of New York, ss.—Richard Busteed, of said City, being duly sworn, says that he is the counsel to the Corporation of the City of New York, the above named defendants, and was such counsel at the time of the passage of the resolution hereinafter referred to. That as such counsel he is by law intrusted with the charge of conducting all the law business of the said corporation and of the departments thereof, and all other law business in which the said City shall be interested, when so ordered by the Corporation. That he is engaged in the discharge of the duties so by law and his office cast upon him. That on or about the 17th of April last he was shown the resolutions offered upon that evening in the Board of Councilmen, and was consulted as to the propriety and necessity of associating other members of the legal profession with himself in determining the question of the alleged unconstitutionality of the various enactments referred to in the said resolutions, and deponent was of opinion and advised that it was a proper case in which to have the benefit of the advice and opinion and consultation of counsel learned in the law, and deponent himself suggested the last of the said resolutions, appropriating the sum of $5,000, or as much thereof as might be necessary for the purpose, because by the charter of the City of New-York, as it then stood, no expense could be lawfully incurred by the City unless an appropriation had been previously made covering such expense.

Deponent further says that the following are the resolutions referred to in the affidavit of the plaintiff in this action, and upon which the order of injunction herein was procured.

Deponent further says, that the resolution of appropriation, as it was originally introduced into the Board of Councilmen, and approved by deponent, was to have $5,000 appropriated to enable him to employ aid, &c.

Mr. Busteed, after opening the case, was followed by Joshua M. Van Cott, Esq., who submitted the case upon the following points:

I. The equity of the complaint is not denied. The answer is unsworn, and cannot be read as an affidavit.

The affidavit of defendant's counsel supports the plaintiff's equity.

II. The appropriation made by the resolution is unlawful and void.

1. The resolution does not specify the purpose for which the appropriation is made.

2. The general purpose expressed is not one for which the Common Council may lawfully appropriate money.

3 An appropriation to carry on the action referred to was plainly contrary to law.

4. The appropriation being of a sum in gross to several objects, it cannot be apportioned. It cannot be stated as an appropriation of $10,000, or of some specified part of $10,000, to such one or more of the several objects referred to as may be deemed lawful.

5. The factious and unlawful purpose displayed by the Corporation, as disclosed in the paper before the Court, entitles the plaintiff to the protection and only adequate relief afforded by the injunction.

6. This motion was not necessary. The Corporation had only to appropriate a sum to a specified lawful object in the mode presented by law. The matter should be denied with costs.

Decision reserved.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

Mass Meeting of the Citizens of Anderson County—Declaration of Rights—Organization of the Town of Hyatt—Items of General News.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

FRANKLIN, K. T., Sunday, May 10, 1857.

I send you the proceedings of a Mass Convention and Town Meeting, held at Hyatt, in Anderson County, a few days since. This being the first move of the people in that direction, it has an importance which it would not otherwise have had. The bogus authorities of the Territory may consider it rebellion or treason, and proceed to arrest the parties concerned. The people are determined hereafter to act for themselves in such matters, and bravely meet the consequences.

The meeting was called to order on the 4th inst., and D. N. BUFFUM appointed Chairman, and ALBERT BEAUVELT Secretary. A Declaration of Rights was then presented and unanimously adopted. Among its declarations are the following:

"The object of our present union and organization is, that we may have the benefit of 'law and order.' We have waited already too long for the action of the General Government. We have proved to the world our desire for peace, and our consent for legally constituted authority. To require a longer in the present anarchical state of affairs, would be to stultify ourselves in the eyes of the nations, and to prove ourselves unfit to be freemen. When a community finds themselves, as we now are, without any form of government, it is their right, it is their duty, to provide themselves with a government, and the necessary guards for their future security.

Articles of fraternization follow, which provide for the election of County Judges, and a Mayor, Common Council, &c., for the new town.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Saturday last a young man named JOSEPH SMITH was shot in Franklin, by a fellow called MCGEE. The quarrel commenced in a groggery. SMITH was intoxicated, and made a remark which MCGEE considered an insult and resented. SMITH drew his bowie-knife and started towards MCGEE, who immediately drew his revolver and shot him just below the heart, inflicting a wound which caused his death shortly afterwards. The murdered man was one of the drivers of RICHARDSON'S Express wagons. MCGEE was a farmer living in this vicinity. He is not large, and no attempt at his arrest has been made.

There are now in Kansas twelve Free State papers, three of which are in Lawrence, and one German, published at Emporia. The Chimdowan (in English Leader) is to be edited by Mrs. NICHOLS, a well known, vigorous writer, of established reputation in the editorial corps of Vermont. The Wyandott Register is published by M. W. DELAHAY, Esq., editor of the Territorial Register, when his establishment was "crushed out" and thrown into the Missouri River by the Border Ruffians at Leavenworth City.

The Herald also states that the overland emigration from Iowa is immense, and grows larger from day to day.

Mr. HYATT is about to open a Manual Labor School 16 miles from Lawrence, the building to be 80 feet square, and located in the centre of a park of 40 acres.

Two of the Free-State prisoners, given up by their bail and consigned to the care of the United States Marshal at Leecompton, escaped the night following. The horse of the United States District-Attorney for Kansas came up missing the same night.

A company of Germans from Connecticut, under the lead of Professor SOBERNHEIZ, have arrived, and would settle the town of Humboldt, on the lower Neosho.

The Lawrence Herald of Freedom of the 9th, proclaims the "Gibraltar of Slavery taken," and notes some of the surprising changes which are taking place in Kansas. Douglas, Osceola, Lecompton, Kickapoo, and other towns started by the pro-slavery men, and still under their auspices, are all hard-head or drag out a sickly existence. Tecumseh, Delware City, Leavenworth, and Doniphan, have seceded from pro-slavery into Free State influences.

Advice to Immigrants.

Firstly, Let every man who purposes seeing Kansas this year, make up his mind firmly and conclusively that he will find no luxurious, very few pianos, comparatively nothing in the way of carpets, and a general stagnation in the article of crinoline. Let him take a good final look at the gravel walk and orchard which his grandpapa provided, and especially let him secure a daguerreotype of that admirable stone wall which closes in the suburban acres. Let him make up his mind to eschew such luxuries as butter the undoubted gem West of St. Louis. A taste of this article, as it appears on the Missouri boats, will convey to his mind reminiscences of galvanic batteries, Leyden jars, and other scientific astonishments which entered into his early education. Let him expect when he reaches Kansas to find a full-sized sand bar in his stomach and general indications of ennui. This will not do it him. The water of the Missouri resembles a tincture of black yard, but in the experience of this writer it is entirely healthful, and damages no one who keeps it unmixed with the lava of Western bar-rooms. Let our new pioneers come fully prepared to step professionally under the protecting shelter of the stars. A tent or covered wagon, one hundred miles West of the Missouri River, are luxuries which any person will learn to appreciate. A genuine Kansas man has many a time made up his bed on prairie grass, and has hooked to his boot, slept comfortably and awaked gracefully. While he cheerfully resigns his own mattress and buffalo robe to the comfort of every stranger, he smiles at the regrets which arise from the memory of the maternal warming pan. In brief, if you come to Kansas to make a home, you must go to work and make it. If you come expecting to find it already made, you will inevitably be disappointed.

The present Spring has been, in some respects, a disastrous one for Kansas. When I reached the Territory (about one month ago) the weather was sour, disagreeable, and cheerless. Vegetation was contending against desperate odds of drouth and frost. The Indians were asserting, with wry faces, shrugs and objurgations, that within their Aboriginal memories, no month of March or April has been so "boisterous rough." Many enthusiasts came up the river, expecting to find a ready made Arcadia. They landed at Leavenworth or Quindaro, hurried to the fire-place, cursed the weather, retreated to the steamboat and negotiated passage to St. Louis. I must confess that I do not think Kansas has lost much by these desertions. The chief quitters have been the steamboat-owners and Railroad Companies, and our candidates for pioneer honors have turned out chiefly illustrations of the vacuum existing between the fool and his money.

A Southern View of Gov. Walker's Probable Kansas Policy.

From the Charleston Mercury.

GOVERNOR WALKER, in his letter accepting the appointment to Kansas, set forth as the policy he should pursue, a course of strict neutrality between the peoples there met in antagonism of views and institutions—a neutrality abiding only at the preservation of law and order in the Territory until it should be brought into the Union as a State, whether Slave or Free. Such was the pro-slavery announced and accepted by us: and when, shortly after, the appointed Governor took occasion to express the opinion that the Territory would come in as a Free, and not a Slave State, we took effect upon to make known our dissatisfaction, and to say that we regarded the declaration as ill-timed and unfortunate—as likely to cast a shade of suspicion on the Governor's after conduct, lest, through fear of the consequences of Free-Soil agitation, and in zeal for the official success of the Democratic Party, he should be tempted to aid—perchance quietly, but effectively enough—in the fulfillment of his ill-boding prophecy. We added that the people of the South were tired of being trifled with by the treacherous Governors of Kansas; that they now had their attention fixed upon that Territory and the officers appointed there, and would be satisfied with nothing short of a genuine and strict neutrality, fully and fairly carried out.

Mr. Secretary STANTON, it has been seen, delivered a speech on his recent arrival in Kansas, and also published an address to the people. This gentleman's words are not without value or unauthoritativeness, inasmuch as it is understood he is to succeed the veteran politician he has consented to accompany, so soon as the policy shall have been thoroughly inaugurated, and himself completely instructed in his part by that sorcic sage and dishonest. His address therefore, combines matter of vital import to Kansas and the South, and should be carefully read and weighed by all interested in the fate of that Territory and our slave institutions. It will be found to contain the following very significant language:

"The Government especially recognizes the Territorial Act which provides for a call making a Convention to form a Constitution with a view to making application to Congress for admission as a State into the Union. That act is regarded as preserving the only test of the qualification of voters for delegates to the Convention, and all preceding repugnant restrictions are thereby repealed. In this light, the act must be allowed to have provided for a full and fair expression of the will of the people through the delegates who may be chosen to represent them in the Constitutional Convention. I do not doubt, however, that in order to avoid all pretext for resistance to the peaceful operation of this law, the Convention itself will, in some form, provide for submitting the great distracting question regarding their social institution, which has so long agitated the people of Kansas, to a fair vote of all the actual bona fide residents of the Territory, with every possible security against fraud and violence. If the Constitution be thus framed, and the question of difference thus submitted to the decision of the people, I believe that Kansas will be admitted by Congress without delay, as one of the sovereign States of the American Union, and the Territorial authorities will be immediately withdrawn."

Nor has Mr STANTON alone thus expressed himself. Hon. ROBERT J. WALKER has also spoken, and in his speech of last Tuesday, in New-York, the TIMES represents him as using the following unmistakable language:

"The people of that Territory had a clear and unquestionable right to decide for themselves upon the application for a State Constitution—and any attempt on the part of any Convention, or any other body of men, however respectable and influential they might be, to impose upon the Territory a constitution not sanctioned by the popular vote, would be usurpation and a wrong which could not be tolerated for a moment. So far as the utmost exercise of his official powers and his personal influence would go to secure that result, Governor WALKER said he was determined the people of Kansas should have an opportunity for a full, free and solemn expression of their will upon the adoption of any Constitution that might be framed—after a fair and satisfactory census of all the bona fide inhabitants who might be in the Territory at the time. He considered this one to them. It was part of their inherent and inalienable sovereignty. And he should consider it, not only a point of law and of official duty, as an officer of the Territory, but a point of honor as a man and a gentleman, to do everything in his power to secure to them the full, fair and undisputed exercise of this fundamental right."

Now, we hold that the submitting of the Constitution soon to be framed by the people of Kansas in Convention assembled, back again to the people individually, for ratification, is a work of supererogation—a matter to be done or not, entirely at the discretion of the Convention, as a thing of contingent expediency only, and not by any means a thing of necessity. And we cannot but look upon this suggestion of Mr. STANTON, however coupled with declarations of Southern feeling, and the determination expressed by Governor WALKER, as partaking of the nature of official dictation, and being, in fact, a violation of the promised neutrality—an insidious and high handed breach of faith towards the South and Southern men in Kansas. We, therefore, desire in the outset to stamp this game as it deserves, and to protest against all attempts to influence the action of the Convention from without, whether coming from the Territorial officers appointed by the President, or the Freesoil schemers of New York and Boston. The real object and end is, under the guise of fair words to the South, to make a free State of Kansas.

ADHESION OF THE BRAZILIAN GOVERNMENT TO THE ABOLITION OF PRIVATEERING—RIO COFFEE MARKET, ETC.

We have received Rio papers to the 4th of April, inclusive.

The Correio Mercantil of Rio Janeiro in its issue of the 3d of April contains the following important paragraph:

"We are enabled to announce that the Imperial Government has taken an important step. Responding to the invitation of the Powers who signed the Treaty of Paris in 1856, the Government of Brazil declares its adhesion to the four principles of maritime law adopted by the Congress, tending to put an end to privateering, and to respect altogether the property of a neutral or an enemy if it be covered by a neutral flag. The Government declares, moreover, that it is disposed to accept the extension proposed by the United States, of the first principle (the abolition of privateering) as the full expression of a new national jurisprudence, so as to exempt all private property belonging to either belligerent, from seizure by ships-of-war."

In Rio, on the 3d of April, the coffee market closed with animation. Eighteen thousand bags were sold that day. There were also shipped on the same day 6,250 bags to New-York and 1,950 bags to Baltimore. Freights to United States—North, 75 to 80; South, 90 to 100.

POLITICAL CRISES IN VICTORIA—MINISTERIAL DEFEAT—FORMATION OF A NEW CABINET—FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

We are in possession of advices from Melbourne to the 15th March, and Sydney to the 16th.

A political crisis had been experienced in Victoria. The Haines Ministry had been defeated by a majority of 6 in a house of 52. The immediate cause of defeat was respecting the grant proposed by the Ministry for the purposes of emigration. They proposed to spend some £150,000 more than had been authorized by the House, and Mr. O'SHANASSY had introduced a resolution to the effect that the House felt bound to express its disapprobation of the course pursued by the Ministry. A sharp debate of eight hours ensued, and the result was as we have stated above. The Ministry resigned. Mr. O'SHANASSY was summoned by the Governor-General, and was commissioned to form a Ministry.

On the 10th March the Victoria Assembly met, after the adjournment consequent on the ministerial defeat, to hear the explanatory statement of the new Premier. Mr. O'SHANASSY, in a speech of considerable length, entered into a detail of the various steps he had taken towards the formation of a Cabinet. Ultimately, he had been able to secure the services of the following gentlemen: H. S. CHAPMAN, Esq., Attorney-General; J. V. F. FOSTER, Esq., Colonial Treasurer; C. G. DUFFY, Esq., Commissioner of Public Works; A. F. A. GREEVES, Esq., Commissioner of Trade and Customs; G. S. W. HORNE, Esq., Commissioner of Crown Lands and Survey; J. D. WOOD, Esq., Solicitor-General. These gentlemen, with Mr. O'SHANASSY himself as Chief Secretary, form the new Administration. Mr. CHAPMAN was formerly Chief Justice of New-Zealand, and more recently Colonial Secretary of Tasmania. Mr. FOSTER was formerly Colonial Secretary of this colony, and at one time, indeed, Acting Governor. Mr. DUFFY is too well known to our readers to require description. Dr. GREEVES was one of the leaders in the old Legislature, in which he sat as a member for the city. Mr. HORNE is a legal gentleman of high character and respectability, brother to the present Chief Justice of Tasmania. Mr. WOOD is one of our ablest lawyers, and was offered the Solicitor-Generalship a fortnight before, by Mr. HAINES, and refused.

"Since our last summary," says the Melbourne Age, "the markets have been glutted by excessive arrivals from England, and the prices have been inordinately depressed. Several failures have taken place; but they are mostly among small firms of limited means, and happily not likely greatly to influence the markets. Yet confidence has been shaken, and few but cash transactions are ventured upon. As the banks have shown a disposition to accommodate firms of respectability, no permanent interruption to the course of legitimate trade is likely to arise, and a crisis need not be apprehended. The depression in commercial matters generally is exercising an unfavorable influence with respect to gold as well as other commodities. Yet the yield of the various gold fields is tolerably steady, and the returns do not present an unfavorable appearance. The total amount of gold received by escort since our last summary (February 14) amounts to 169,750 ounces; the total by escort up to February 13, to 320,175 ounces; making the total by escort for 1857, 490,525 ounces. The total gold shipped during 1857 was 628,874 ounces.

Letter from Colonel Crabb.

The following is a letter addressed from Colonel CRABB to the Prefect of the District of Altar, on his entry into Sonora:

SONORA, Thursday, March 26, 1857.

To Don Jose Maria Redondo, Prefect of the District of Altar:

In conformity to the colonization law of Mexico, and in compliance with urgent invitations from the most influential citizens of Sonora, I have come within the limits of this State, bringing with me one hundred companions, and in advance of nine hundred others, with the design of colonizing for ourselves happier homes with and among you. I have come with the intention of offending no one, and without intrigues, public or private. On reaching this place I have made no hostile demonstrations; on the contrary, I have made pacific propositions.

It is very true that I am provided with arms and munitions; but you already know that it is not the custom of Americans, or any other civilized people, to travel unarmed. Moreover, it will be well to consider that we have to pass through places where the Apaches commit their depredations continually. Yet I learn, to my great surprise, that you are taking measures of hostility, and are assembling a force to exterminate me and my companions. I know that you have given orders to have the wells poisoned, and that you are inclined to use weapons of the vilest and basest kind.

But, beware, Sir, lest all that we may have to suffer recoil upon your own head and the heads of those who accompany you. I do not believe that you will disgrace yourself by such barbarous acts. I know well that you have endeavored, by perfidious offers, to excite against us the friendly tribe of Papagos, but I have reason to believe that your efforts have not succeeded.

I have come into your country because I have the right to follow the common industrial maxims, and from the moment of my arrival, as I have already given proof, I expected to be received with open arms, but now I learn that I am to expect death at the hands of an enemy lost to all feelings of humanity. As to my present companions and those who are to come after me, I protest against all severe measures.

Finally you have to come to a decision, and bear this in mind: if blood flows, it will all flow back on your head and not on mine. You may rest assured, however, while making your hostile preparations, that I intend to go on in the object that I have long contemplated. I am only waiting for the rest of my forces. I am their leader, and my intention is to do as I shall judge best, in conformity with the natural law and the instinct of self preservation. Until we meet at Altar, I am your obedient servant,

HENRY A. CRABB.

Destructive Fire in Toronto.

From the Globe.

On Saturday evening, about 7 o'clock, SUTHERLAND & MCLEAN'S extensive car factory depôt was observed to be on fire, the flames bursting from the building in the vicinity of the boiler. The distance being considerable (nearly two miles from the centre of the city) and a strong breeze blowing, the fire had proceeded so far before the engines arrived that it was impossible to do anything to save the work-shops and their contents from total ruin. Several cars were burned, besides a number of freight drays. Among the cars were three just ready to be turned out for the Buffalo and Brantford Railway; six had been turned out for the Grand Trunk a few days before. By the disaster which has occurred, some 60 mechanics, employed by the firm, are thrown out of work. A portion of the premises were rented by the Messrs. SHAW, of Yonge-street, as a tool factory. They were uninsured. The total loss is estimated at from $50,000 to $60,000.

NEW-YORK CITY.

ELDRIDGE-STREET JAIL.

The Coroner's Inquest on the Body of Eugene Greliet, one of the French Prisoners.

An inquest was held by Coroner GAMBLE yesterday, at 1 P. M., at Eldridge-street Jail, upon the body of EUGENE GRELET, one of the prisoners in the French Extradition case, who was found dead in his bed at the Jail, on Thursday morning. There was a numerous attendance at the Jail of the friends of the deceased prisoner. A Jury being impanneled, the Coroner proceeded to take evidence in the case.

THE TESTIMONY.

Stephen E. Gardner was first sworn—He testified that he was the Deputy Jailor at Eldridge-street Prison; the deceased was brought there in the latter part of September, 1856, on an order of arrest from the Supreme Court, in default of $500,000 bail; he was brought there at the suit of the Northern Railway Company of France; he had been confined in the prison up to the day of his death; when admitted to the Jail he appeared to be in good health; about three months ago he was taken sick, but the sickness lasted but about ten days; the attack was a billous attack; during this sickness Dr. WETHERALL attended upon him; after recovering from this sickness he continued apparently quite well till the first of the present month, when he complained of pain in his head; his indisposition was such that he took to his bed, and Dr. HILTON was called to attend upon him, and continued to act as his physician till his death. Since this last attack the deceased kept his bed nearly all the time; Dr. HILTON told him (the witness) that he could do the deceased no good while he remained in the jail, and that it was necessary to insure his recovery that he be removed; he was of the same opinion himself, and suggested his removal to some quiet place, where he might receive the best attentions; having no power to act himself, he applied to the Sheriff, who informed him that he could not give an order for his removal without the consent of the prosecuting attorney in the case. As the deceased was delirious part of the time he proposed to the Sheriff that he should be sent to the Lunatic Asylum on Blackwell's Island. At the suggestion of the Sheriff he called upon JAMES MORROW, the prosecuting-Attorney, and was told by him that he had some time previously given the necessary papers for the removal of the deceased to a more suitable place. The room in which the deceased slept was on the third floor. Its dimensions is 9 feet by 30 feet. It was occupied usually by from two to nine prisoners as a sleeping apartment. He made the application spoken of to the Sheriff on the day after Dr. Hilton spoke to him about the importance of his removal.

Dr. Joseph Hilton, next sworn—Testified that he was the attending physician at Eldridge-street jail; he was called to visit the deceased about the third day of the present month, and found him laboring under excessive pain in the right temple; he treated him for affection of the brain; finding that under the treatment administered, the deceased became no better, he deemed it advisable to have him removed where he could receive better air and proper comforts; he suggested to his friends to have him removed to a suitable place; he spoke to Mr. GARDNER, the Deputy Jailor, upon the subject, and the latter showed himself willing and solicitous to do the best he could for the deceased; the deceased personally objected to being removed from the prison until the night previous to his death; when abscesses were found in the body of the brain, in his opinion it would take longer than three days to form; he was satisfied that whatever treatment might have been used toward the deceased, he could not have got well; the noise in the prison had a deleterious effect upon him; every attention was given to him that his case required; his room was well ventilated, and the remaining prisoners who occupied his room with him, appeared to be gentlemanly and cleanly persons.

Gasper M. Maunction sworn, testified that he had been confined in the jail as a witness for the past month; he slept in the same room occupied by the deceased; the latter was taken sick about a week after he came to the jail; his physician called on him daily and sometimes two or three times during the day; his brother and others of his acquaintance and friends attended upon him and saw that he was furnished with everything that he needed; he never heard the deceased make any complaint of want of attention or kindness on the part of the keeper; he slept in the bed adjoining that occupie by the deceased; when he woke up on Thursday morning he discovered that GERLET lay on his back dead; he heard no noise or struggle during the night.

Dr. C. T. Hunell was the last witness called. He testified that he had made a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased. The body was pale and emaciated, and gave indication of having received meagre nourishment. The brain had five abscesses in the right hemisphere, varying in size from a marble to a hen's egg. The surrounding brain texture was perfectly healthy. One of the abscesses was formed in the anterior lobe of the brain and the other in the middle and posterior portion. Intense arterial injection appeared on the surface of the brain. The death of the deceased was caused by the abscesses referred to—they being the result of inflammation. Abscesses of the brain like those described would form in from three days to three weeks. The confinement of deceased in prison would be calculated to produce the condition of the brain found upon his post-mortem examination.

The Jury gave the following

VERDICT.

That the said EUGENE GERLET came to his death by abscess of the brain, the result of inflammation. Further, we find that deceased received every possible attention at the hands of the physician and keepers, during his imprisonment. We consider the building now used as a "County Jail" entirely unsuited for that purpose, on account of the crowded state of the rooms and want of ventilation, and would call the immediate attention of the proper authorities to the subject.

THE BURIAL.

Subsequent to the rendition of the verdict by the Jury, the body of the deceased was removed to the French Catholic Church, the St. Vincent de Paul, in Canal-street, between Broadway and Centre-street. A numerous concourse of friends accompanied the remains, among whom were the French prisoners still in custody at the Eldridge-street jail, going under an escort of an officer. At the church the usual impressive ceremonies of the Catholic Church were performed in the French language by Rev. Mr. LAFONT. When these were ended, the body was taken to the Calvary Cemetery for interment. A large number of carriages, containing some of the most eminent of the French residents of the City, both ladies and gentlemen, followed the corpse to the grave. M. DAVID, one of the prisoners confined in Eldridge-street jail in connection with the great French railway fraud, delivered an address in the French language, eulogizing the merits of the deceased, and denouncing in severe terms the treatment to which he had been subjected at the hands of the legal authorities of New-York.

EUGENE GERLET was young—only twenty years of age. He came to New York from France, in September, 1856, accompanying his brother and the other French prisoners. No charge was ever made against him of having had any connection with the alleged French railway fraud. He has been confined as a witness only. His friends insist that his death was the result of his prolonged imprisonment. They say they had expected it, and had urged the necessities of his case to the proper authorities, but they were always deaf to them! Three persons confined in Eldridge-street jail, as witnesses, state that they asked to be allowed to testify before the Coroner's jury but that the Coroner would not permit them. They state further that their evidence would have given a complexion to the case altogether different from that presented in the evidence which was taken.

ELDRIDGE STREET JAIL.

Before rendering their verdict, the Jury desired to see the room in which GERLET died. They accordingly repaired thither, accompanied by the Superintendent of the prisoner's apartments. It was on the top floor of the building, and was about 15 feet long by five feet wide. It contained nine beds, five on one side and four on the other, the head of one bedstead touching the foot of another. The window was heavily barred, and could with difficulty be lowered an inch or two to admit air, while, it was averred, till within three days of the prisoner's death, no aperture had been cut in the door for the creation of a draft. And with this aperture made, the air received from without came from a narrow passage, in which were five beds, one touching the other so closely that a pin could scarcely have been dropped between them. Adjoining these were other rooms, smaller than that in which GERLET died—rooms eight feet by six, each with five beds in them, and all occupied. The stench was overpowering, nor much unlike that of the atmosphere of a slaughter house, where the offal has not been lately removed. he remarks exchanged by members of the Jury, and those who visited the spot with them, were not complimentary to our humanity as a people, and bore very hard on the authorities, who had power to remedy the evils consequent on the disgraceful condition of this Prison, and did not do so.

General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church—The Proposed Basis of Union—Secession Threatened.

SECOND DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The Synod convened at nine o'clock, and in accordance with a resolution adopted yesterday, the first half hour was appropriated to devotional exercises.

At half past nine the roll was called, and most of the delegates were present.

The Rev. Drs. POTTS and CAMPBELL, and the Rev Messrs. CONDIT, MCKEEHAN, and WILKIN were present, and the Synod unanimously admitted them to seats as corresponding members.

Rev. Dr. FINDLEY moved that so much of the Reports of the Presbyteries as referred to Psalmody should go to the Committee on that subject. Adopted.

So much of the Reports of Presbyteries as referred to the State of Religion was submitted to the Committee on the State of Religion.

A letter from the Presbyterian Church of Ireland was referred to the Committee on Correspondence.

A communication from the New-School Presbyterian Church, accepting the proposed bases of union, was referred to the Committee on Overtures.

The Committee to whom was referred the reports of Presbyteries, relative to the proposed bases of union, and who made a report at the previous meeting, which was recommitted to them for amendment, made an amended report. They submitt that of the total number of votes on the subject, 154 are in favor of the bases without any modification, and 94 opposed to them. Eight Presbyteries have not reported to the Synod their vote, either for or against—but of these two have cast their vote in the aggregate in favor of the bases, and six against them. The report was accepted, and the Committee discharged.

Messrs. H. H. Thompson, G. D. Archibald, John Brash and J. N. Preetly, were appointed a Committee for the apportionment of the delegates' fund.

A memorial was received from the Presbyterian Church of Springfield, setting forth the advantages of Collegiate education, and asking the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church to endow a college at some central location, for they believed the time had arrived for such action on the part of the Synod. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Education.

Rev. WM. FINDLEY offered the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, The consummation of a union of the Associate and the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Churches, is a high duty, and of great importance to the maintenance of the peculiar principles, held in common by these Churches; and, whereas, the testimony proposed to us by the Associate Church as a basis of union, contains no principle which is not expressly embodied in the standards of the Associate Reformed Church, or has in some form received her sanction; and, whereas, it is not doubted that the wisdom of the united Church will effect any modifications of the form of Church government, or the directory for worship of the Westminster standards, necessary to harmonize them with the common faith and practice of the two Churches; or any desirable modifications of the formula of question to applicants; and, whereas, a majority of the Presbyteries of the Associate Reformed Church have declared themselves in favor of receiving this basis, as it is, rather than to fail of obtaining this union; and, whereas, it is believed that the great mass of the people in both these Churches anxiously desire it, and that their spiritual interests urgently require its speedy consummation; and, whereas, finally, it is to be feared that, if the present overture should be rejected, the accomplishment of this object will be long postponed; and the heart-burnings and contentions between these Churches in former years be to some extent revived, and similar evils be produced among ourselves; therefore,

1. Resolved, That the Associate Reformed Church does hereby declare her acceptance of the testimony proposed as a basis of union, by the Associate Synod, and overtured by the General Synod of 1856, to the Presbyteries.

2. Resolved, That a Committee of three be appointed to communicate this action to the Associate Synod, and in conjunction with a similar Committee of that Synod—if it shall see proper to appoint one—to agree upon and recommend the necessary measures for the immediate consummation of this union.

WM. FINDLEY,
M. MCKINSTRY.

Rev. WM. TAGGART moved to lay the matter on the table.

An amendment was offered that it be referred to the Committee on Overtures.

Rev. J. T. PRESTLEY hoped that the resolutions would be made the order of the day. He advocated a cautious movement of the matter, and the proposed collation of the amendments as proposed by the several Presbyteries for consideration.

Rev. J. D. GILSON fel. that it was of vital importance that this matter should be speedily settled. If it was to be discussed it should be discussed now.

Prof. ALEX YOUNG earnestly urged that the matter should be laid on the table.

Rev. WM. FINDLEY hoped that the motion to table the resolutions would not prevail. The matter was of great interest to the Church, and should be acted upon at once. He trusted that any discussion of it would be characterized by the Spirit of Christian courtesy and forbearance.

Rev. Wm. Taggart, Rev. Mr. Wallace, Rev. R. A. Browne, Elder Robb, Rev. Alex. Young, Rev. Mr. Pollock, Rev. Mr. Brash, Rev. Mr. Calderhead, Rev. Mr. Love, Rev. Dr. Eken, Rev. Mr. McKinstry, Rev. Wm. Findley and Rev. Mr. Harper took part in the debate—the majority urging immediate action.

An amendment to the resolutions was then offered by Elder J. M. NIVEN, that the whole subject be referred to a Special Committee to compromise the bases of union so as to make them acceptable to all the Presbyteries.

The question was taken on the amendment, when it was lost, and by a vote of 43 to 39 the resolutions were made the special order for 3 o'clock.

Rev J. B. SCOULLER moved that the pecuniary part of the report of the Committee of Missions be taken up for consideration, but the Clerk had not the report in the house, and the subject was laid over.

Elder NEVIN, of New York, proposed the following resolutions, which were laid on the table for the present:

Resolved, That the Church of Christ is one—that in reference to this Church there is "one Lord, one faith and one baptism," and that it is the duty and privilege of all who hold "like precious faith" to endeavor by all suitable means to promote organic union with each other.

Resolved, That the Associate Reformed Synod of the South is a branch of the Christian Church, and inasmuch as its standards are the doctrines put forth in the Confession of Faith, and larger and shorter catechisms, and its practices are drawn from the Directory for public worship; therefore, be it further

Resolved, That the said Synod be invited to unite with this General Synod, upon the basis of union agreed on between this Synod and the Synod of New-York.

Rev. W. IRVINE then closed the session with a prayer.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Synod resumed its business at 3 o'clock, Rev. Mr. BALDWIN opening the session with prayer.

The Moderator announced that the consideration of the resolution on the subject of the proposed union was now in order.

Rev. R. D. RIDDLE, Rev. Mr. VAN NESS, Rev. JAMES THOMPSON, and Rev. Dr. FORSYTH being present, were admitted to seats in the Synod as corresponding members.

The resolutions offered in the morning were again read.

Rev. Mr. FINDLEY remarked that as the time of the Synod was precious, he hoped no factious opposition to the evident wishes of the majority would be manifested. He contended that due deliberation had already been given to the subject, and the conclusion of the majority was in favor of the bases. For his part, he could not see how this overture from the Associate Presbyterian Church could be consistently refused. It had been well established that the bases contained nothing inconsistent with the acknowledged principles of the Associate Reformed Church, and what could be said, or how should they apologise to the Christian community at large, if they now refused this union, which for a score of years they had aimed to establish, and thus heal the schism which had prevailed so long in the Church. He admitted that the proposed bases were not, in all respects, what he could have desired, but he considered it an impossibility to draw up a document which would satisfy every man, and if they waited for such a document, the consummation of this desirable union would be rejected for twenty years more, if not forever, and disastrous consequences would thereby be entailed on that branch of the Church which they represented.

Gen. A. C. NEVIN, of Monticello, N. Y., felt the importance of the question, not only to this Synod, but to the whole Christian Church. He was opposed to the bases of union, for they involved the integrity of the Church. Not more than one year ago, the Synod of New-York and the Synod of the West entered into union, and on no other basis than that which they agreed upon could they have done so. But, now, in the short space of one year after that compact had been published to the world, they found the majority attempting to violate that solemn agreement and substituting a radically different one, which could never receive the acquiescence of the people, however much of the spirit of conciliation they might possess. He hoped that the majority rule, which was always arbitrary, would not in this matter be enforced, for if it was, he and those who thought with him would be forced out of their communion—there was no middle course left them. His fervent prayer was to witness an enlargement of the Church, but not at the expense of their faith and principles.

Dr. M'CARROLL, of Newburg, N. Y., believed that the proposition was one upon which they could not act harmoniously, and this the various reports from Presbyteries demonstrated. Under these circumstances, as a matter of discretion, he urged that for the present the Union should be abstained from—inasmuch as they had prospered without it, and certainly it would be no sign of increased prosperity should their congregations secede to other denominations, rather than accept the proposed basis. He must solemnly protest against the majority coercing the minority into connection with any church they former might designate. They had no more right to merge the minority into the Reformed Presbyterian Church, than they had to merge them into the Church of the Great Apostate. The Congress of the United States had as much power to transform this Republican form of Government into a monarchical one as that Synod had to legislate the Associate Reformed Church into another Church. Individual volition must alone decide this matter.

The speaker then asserted that there were principles contained in that basis which many there could never accept. He cited the 26th chapter of the Confession of Faith of the Associated Reformed Presbyterian Church, and contended that the article of the basis on Church Communion was entirely at variance with the position he had read. If they adopted the basis, the anomalous spectacle would be presented to the world of two sets of Body possessing contradictory articles of faith. Another objection if the bases were adopted was, they would have to receive both the Westminster Standards, namely, the Confession of Faith and Catechisms, (Larger and Shorter,) which had been rejected, in part, by this Church at its organization, and which not one man among them, he believed, could now assent to. He considered that the subdivision of Christians into sects was not schism, and that every man had the right to unite with any sect he chose to.

Rev. JOHN T. PRESTLEY said that these two branches of the church had met together and fraternally interchanged views for many years, and that in matters of doctrine and worship they were substantially one, and so should they be organically. The result of the separate existence of the two bodies was that in almost every village of the country are found two small to seats as corresponding members. destitute churches, one of each sect, which were scarcely able to sustain a minister, and at any rate cramped his sphere of usefulness, while with the union they would have flourishing congregations.

He thought that the objections against the proposed bases were not of such weight as were represented, particularly with reference to the acceptance of the Westminster Confession. He saw nothing in the testimony which conflicted with the doctrines taught by the Scriptures, and it contained nothing which, if he accepted, would make it incumbent on him to reject the vows he took on his ordination to the ministry, or to embrace anything he had not already accepted. His opinion was, that both organizations would be benefited by the union.

Rev. ALEXANDER YOUNG asked if it would not be expedient for the Synod to take into consideration the various modifications proposed by the several Presbyteries before they could assent to the Union, or should they totally disregard their objections and coerce them into the Union? He considered it the very essence of Popery for the majority to prescribe a certain course of action for the minority, and upon the majority rested the sin of schism if they attempted this matter of doubtful expediency. No! The matter was to be left to the conscience alone, and if this basis were not accepted voluntarily the subject had better be postponed until another basis could be formed. The West, said the speaker, will be the most materially benefited by the Union, and it is from the West that the greatest opposition to it is manifested. He trusted that the brethren who urged their acceptance of the proposed basis would not press it further now, but that they would act cautiously, lest their precipitancy should further postpone the consummation of the Union they so earnestly wished.

Rev. R. A. BROWNE, of Newcastle, N. Y., wished to hear nothing more of a division and secession from their Church, for there was nothing of the kind to fear. He urged that by the Union their sphere of usefulness would be extended. All of them acknowledged that Slavery was a sin and a blight to the land, and he desired this union that the army might be increased, which would fight against it. They would be recreant to the principles of Presbyterianism if they assisted in this detestable neutrality while three millions of their fellows were held in bondage. The union of the two Churches, continued the speaker, would be the beginning of a wide-spread Presbyterianism, which, instead of retaining the ministers at home to keep up a schism in the Church of God, would send them forth to fields which are whitening for the harvest, but sadly lack the harvesters.

Rev. J. B. PRESTLEY, of New York City, denied that the majority of the Presbyteries were in favor of the proposed basis, as had been asserted, but, even if they were, it was a poor way to bring about a union by a division among themselves. He had many objections to the basis, not only on certain doctrines laid down there, which were not in accordance with his faith, but on other grounds. He objected to its article on secret societies, which organizations it declared to be contrary to the genius of Christianity. He did not stand there to defend secret societies, but he was not prepared to prescribe every man from communion with the Church who was connected with them. Neither could he agree with the article on Covenanting, nor with that on Psalmody. He would not say what he should do if this subject was brought to a bitter end, but he trusted that God would lead them to a conclusion which would subserve His glory.

Rev. Mr. MCCAGUE briefly alluded to the blessings which would accrue to both organizations if the union were effected, when the time for adjournment having arrived, further consideration of the subject was postponed to this morning at 9 o'clock.

Rev. Mr. BRASH closed the session with prayer.

Accident on the Erie Railroad—Train off the Track—No Lives Lost.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I send you a hasty lead pencil note of "another railroad accident." The night express train of the New-York and Erie route, which left New-York at 4½ o'clock P. M. on Tuesday, is now detained between Cattaraugus and Little-Valley, where part of the train is completely wrecked, from running off the track. Fortunately, however, no lives have been lost, and no limbs injured beyond slight bruises in one or two instances.

About noon to day (Wednesday) as the train was sweeping a curve, on a descending grade, the locomotive leaped from the rails and ran for about 150 yards, at a divergence of a few inches from the track, when it pulled off, first the tender, which ran 50 yards nearly parallel to the road, and then the first baggage car. The strain of the tender upon this car became so great that it snapped the spring connection with the latter, leaving it upon the road, while the former, together with the engine, ploughed a furrow into an embankment which rose a few feet from the track on the right, and both burying all the running-gear lower works into the soil. Meanwhile the first baggage-car broke from the track, which after dashing along for some distance upon the cross-timbers under the rails, and capsized, broke into a thousand fragments, by dashing against the rising ground on the left of the track, suffering the added violence of being crushed by the second baggage-car, which also went to pieces in the collision. The first passenger-car kept its wheels to the track and received only a slight shock against the ruins in front, from which it suffered no injury, not even to the breaking of a pane of glass.

The remaining passenger cars (four in number) were not disturbed upon the track, further than to be brought to a stand. Their inmates did not expect that catastrophe had happened until after the cars had stopped.

The passengers, male and female, rushed from their seats, and leaping from the cars, found themselves in a miscellaneous flock upon the side of the road, where their eyes were saluted with the spectacle of their baggage strewn for fifty feet along the road; boxes and trunks were broken, and their contents spilled in every direction.

It was quickly ascertained that not a person was hurt, although the wreck of one part of

Before Judge Ingersoll.

The United States vs. Geo. W. Lyman.—In this case, which was an indictment against the first mate of the ship Middlesex, for an assault with a dangerous weapon and for cruel and unusual punishment, a jury was impannelled for the trial, but the defendant's counsel pressed for a postponement, alleging that they had material witnesses absent, and after much opposition on the part of the District-Attorney, Judge INGERSOLL put the case off for the term, it being, as he said, the practice not to try a prisoner at the same term at which he is indicted, if he shows good reason for the postponement.

The case therefore goes over till October next.

James Mills, one of the parties implicated in the mutiny of the schooner Merchant, of which he was the mate, was released from custody under the charge, and put under bonds of $500 as a witness against Santos and others, indicted yesterday for fitting out the Merchant for a slaving voyage.

The Bowen & McNamee Libel Suit.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Woodruff.

SUMMING UP FOR THE DEFENDANT.

Richard G. Fowles vs. Henry C. Bowen, one of the firm of Bowen & McNamee.—This case was resumed yesterday, and the interest still continues. A few ladies remained to hear the argument, as long as the stifled and unwholesome atmosphere of the miserable little court-room would permit. The Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher, being present, was politely invited by his Honor to take a seat on the bench, which he did for a short time.

Mr. Cutting opened for the defendant by urging the jury to forget the parties to the suit, except as plaintiff and defendant, and to be influenced by no extraneous issues or considerations. He intended, first, to clear off the mist which had gathered around the case; second, to state and review the evidence; third, to show the jury on how slight grounds the plaintiff's case rested; and fourth, to suggest the rule according to which the damages, if any, should be awarded.

Judge Woodruff—Am I to understand, then, that you intend to introduce no evidence at all for the defence?

Mr. Cutting—Yes, Sir; we are quite satisfied with the case as it stands, and see no necessity for introducing any evidence whatever.

Mr. O'Conor stated that there was a piece of evidence which he had expected to elicit from one of the defendant's witnesses, and, as the defence did not propose to examine any witnesses, should like to introduce it at this stage of the proceedings. It was a letter, for which he had already laid the foundation, but which he desired to introduce and identify. Mr. Evarts opposed this introduction, and the question was argued at some length, his Honor and the counsel having read the letter. It was admitted that it was a question of professional practice, within the discretion of the Court, whether evidence could be introduced after the defence had commenced to sum up. Mr. O'Conor stated that some doubts as to whether the letter was relevant to the case, as it then stood, had led him to reserve its introduction until such time as it should clearly be admissible.

The Court thought the offer had better be allowed to be made; the question of its admissibility being left open.

Mr. Cutting desired that the plaintiff, as a condition of this favor granted, might be required to admit that a letter signed "Bowen & McNamee," previously introduced, was written by the same person as the letter then before the Court.

Mr. O'Conor denied that he had asked any favors, and desired to make no compacts.

The Court decided that, having exercised a sound judicial discretion in granting the previous motion, could annex to such permission no condition unless the nature of a permission of a similar character. The matter suggested was presumptively easy to prove.

Mr. O'Conor then offered a copy of a letter from Henry L Stone, a partner in the firm of Bowen & McNamee, to John Shilletto, of Cincinnati, and read a stipulation from the defendants' counsel, dated Oct. 1, 1853, admitting that it was a true copy.

Mr. Cutting objected to its introduction, but the objection was overruled and he excepted.

Mr. O'Conor proceeded to read the following letter:

[PRIVATE.]

MR. J. SHILLETTO—DEAR SIR: You will, doubtless, remember Mr. Fowles, who had charge of our glove department for some time, and who left here a few days since for Cincinnati, bearing a letter of introduction to you from me.

Since he left we have heard of his carrying a very large amount of luggage—much larger than he would naturally have for his clothing—and, although we have no reason to suspect his honesty, we think it a suspicious circumstance, and would like to have some little watch taken of his proceedings.

If he has taken goods, he would probably try and sell them, either on the way or in your city. If he should call on you, you could very easily ascertain where he stopped, and we should like to have you employ some safe officer to watch his lodgings and ascertain whether he appeared to be in possession of property that a clerk on a small salary ought not to have.

By taking a little pains he could ascertain the true state of the case, and if, on knowing the facts, you should think it advisable to have his things detained you will please do so, and advise us by telegraph.

Perhaps I ought to say that the only thing he would be likely to have of ours would be gloves, and I suppose we should not be justified in interfering with anything else.

You will of course perceive this matter requires very delicate management, as we know nothing against the young man, and would very much regret to say or do any thing to injure him.

We know of no better way than to employ an experienced police officer, and charge the expense to us. He will of course say nothing to any one but yourself.

Respectfully, your obedient servant, H. L. STONE.

Mr. Cutting, after some few remarks, proceeded to sum the evidence for the plaintiff. He considered the communication made by Mr. Bowen as privileged, and the intent with which the statement was made, and the way it was received, formed a very important point. Mr. Fowles had charge of the glove department, and he alleges that the words were uttered in regard to his duties as a clerk. They did not impeach his abilities as a judge of goods, his industry, or any of his abilities as a clerk, but merely imputed a particular and single defect.

Mr. Bowen, in his statement to Mr. Cole, expressly stated that he had no positive proof of any dishonesty, but after the letters were written, his suspicions were aroused by the fact of the plaintiff's leaving the City with six heavy trunks, which, with the fact of Mr. Fowles receiving but a small salary, seemed very singular, and as he was fearful that Wood & Co., had been misled by a letter from his firm, he felt it his duty to make the statement which he did. It was alleged that the trunks were filled with books, but no one was called to prove it, although if such were a fact it would be easy to find some one who had seen them. Mr. Fowles had a perfect right to go on to the stand and testify in the case, but he had not done so. The Jury would be told by the plaintiff's counsel that they had a vast amount of evidence in reserve, and he would ask them to give a verdict, not upon the evidence introduced, but upon what imagination might supply to make out a case. The reason that the defendant had not introduced evidence, was because he believed that the plaintiff had made such a contemptible case that he was ready to submit it to the Jury without evidence.

He thought that there was no inconsistency between the conversation in March, 1852, and the letter given to Mr. Fowles, in December, 1851. The statement to Mr. Carter was merely that Fowles' conduct was satisfactory to him, and was given before Mr. Fowles left the City. Even if he had been addicted to wine, or a liar, that would not have been sufficient to an horize defendants' saying that he was not a proper person to receive a letter of introduction merely. Their suspicions of his honesty were vague, and they did not at that time feel authorized to express their fears. In Mr. Stone's letter of introduction of Mr. Fowles, he merely spoke of him in his capacity for business, and it did not, as it ought not, to give a schedule of his vices not directly affecting his business capacity. But when it came to the knowledge of the firm that he was of dishonest habits, then it was their duty to let it be known in order to prevent any evil arising from their letters. And was there anything inconsistent in these two actions? The letter, and indeed all subsequent proceedings, indicated a kind and friendly disposition. The letter to Mr. Shilletto proved, by its careful wording, the pains which were taken to prevent unpleasant consequences to the plaintiff.

As to the motive for the libel, it was alleged that Mr. Fowles had taken trade from the defendant to other firms, but no proof was given of such a fact. If the defendants had ordered the counterfeit glove label to be made, as it was alleged they had done, why did they not prove it? Mr. Fowles sold the goods with the labels on, and would have known all about it, but he was not examined, nor any proof of such or any distinctly was shown.

As to the question of damages. The Jury were to try the case according to the evidence here presented, and not upon that presented upon a former trial. He asked the Court to say that they must not take into consideration any act done in Cincinnati except the discharge of Mr. Fowles. If he was discharged without cause he had a cause of action against Wood & Co. for breach of contract, and, in fact, he did commence an action for breach of contract, which he believed was still pending. The defendants are responsible for the necessary results of their action, and for those only. The plaintiff had alleged, as a special damage, that he was discharged from the store of Wood & Co., but both his witnesses swear that he was not. Mr. Fowles was paid up to the full time of his departure, and up to a still later time, but for how long he had been unable to ascertain. Mr. Fowles knew, but Mr. Fowles would not tell.

A second cause was that he was unable, in consequence of the libel, to obtain employment. But he was then in business, and the time he was not so engaged was not proved.

Mr. Cutting concluded by attempting to show that as the plaintiff, at most, had proved but nominal injury, he could receive but nominal damages. He stated that his pointe would be sent to his Honor's residence in the evening.

The Court was then adjourned until to-day at 11 o'clock.

Judge WOODRUFF will not sit at General Term today, but will continue this case that it may be finished this week.

COMMON PLEAS—TRIAL TERM.

Before Judge Daly.

INTERESTING TO LANDLORDS AND TENANTS.

Wiseman vs. Bacon, &c.—This was an action of trespass for breaking into the dwelling of the plaintiff then in his possession and occupation, and ejecting him therefrom, and also for damages for putting his furniture on the walk and injuries done to it. The defendants were mother and son, and the defence was that the premises in question belonged to the mother; that she never let them to the plaintiff—he was there wrongfully, and an intruder, and admitted that she directed her son, the other defendant, as her agent, to put the plaintiff out, and that he did so as well as he might, without doing injury to the plaintiff or his furniture.

The plaintiff proved that on the day of the alleged trespass he and his family were in the occupancy of the premises. On the part of the defence it was shown that on the 1st of May, 1856, defendant let the premises to the son of the plaintiff by the month, payable monthly in advance; that he opened a butcher shop, and took his father's family (the plaintiff) into the back room. In August following the son died, and left the plaintiff in possession. On the 1st of September defendant let the premises to another person, and the plaintiff refused to move.

The Court held—1st, That in a letting by the month, the tenancy expired at the end of that month, in the same manner as a letting by the year terminates at the end of the year. 2d, That the law in relation to "agreements in the City of New-York, which do not specify the duration of such occupation, should be deemed valid until the 1st of May next after the possession after such agreement shall commence" did not apply to the letting or hiring by the month 3d, That the defendant, the owner, had a right of entry, and might enter peaceably upon one who is in possession, without right, and dispossess the wrong doer; but, if he entered with a strong hand, and committed a breach of the peace, it was an offence for which she was answerable criminally by indictment, and not to plaintiff, in a civil action. 4th, That the defendants were, nevertheless, liable to any injury they may have done to the furniture of the plaintiff by the removal of it from the premises.

P. F. Smith for plaintiff; W. H. Bell for defendant.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Hon. Judge Russell.

A BOGUS LET LOOSE.

Yesterday, when the Court opened, the District-Attorney stated that he had to submit to the Judge a question of law. A man with three aliases, Philip Koleman, Fred. Olhoff or Bernard Ulric, had attempted to pass a $5 counterfeit bill at Wallack's Theatre, and was therefore forthwith arrested. It appeared that he was well known in that profession. On three previous occasions he had been arrested for attempting to pass counterfeit bills, but in each case the evidence was insufficient to convict him. The question of law now was—could testimony of those previous attempts to utter counterfeit money be produced against him for the present offence? The Judge decided that it could not. The accused was undoubtedly a very bad man, but his conviction could only be obtained in compliance with the law. As the fact of having this single counterfeit bill in his possession would not be sufficient to hold him for trial, he must be discharged. And he was discharged.

William Jackson pleaded guilty to an attempt to commit burglary in the third degree, and departed to the Penitentiary for one year.

John Sullivan pleaded guilty to assault and battery under circumstances of great provocation. He beat an Irishman. Judge Russell suspended judgment.

For breaking into the liquor store of John Kearney and stealing $6 worth of cigars, John Connelly was convicted of petit larceny, and sent to the Penitentiary for six months.

ROBBERY IN THE FIRST DEGREE—HEAVY SENTENCE.

Catharine Clark and Aaron Paul were indicted for robbing William Lynch, by force and violence in open daylight, of $96 and a silver watch. Lynch dwells in the City of Churches. On the 11th of April he thought he would invest about $100 in a lively nag. Accordingly he crossed the ferry and examined many specimens of horse flesh, but decided at length that he would not purchase. Feeling hungry, he dined, and then sought the ferry. While in search of two cents to pay his fare across the river, he inadvertently exposed in his palm a $10 gold piece, at which prisoner Clark, who was standing near, made a successful clutch, and ran off into Water-street, hotly pursued by the prisoner. She dived into a saloon, and her pursuer dived after her. She offered to restore the money if he would treat all hands. He treated. She bade him treat all hands again. He complied. Then the male prisoner, Paul, got up a free fight, and the robbed and defrauded Lynch was knocked down and robbed of $86 and his watch. The evidence of Lynch himself, a boy who sold the watch for Paul, and of the police officer who arrested Paul, made the case clear.

The Judge charged the Jury, that as there was but one count in the indictment, which attributed the use of violence to both prisoners, and there being no evidence that the female prisoner, Clark, used any violence, she must be acquitted. The Jury, accordingly, while expressing their opinion that she was equally guilty with the male prisoner, found her not guilty; but they found Paul guilty, and the Judge sentenced him to imprisonment for Twelve Years and Three Months in the State Prison.

The Jury were then discharged. Sentences on several prisoners to day, and the May term will terminate.

KINGS COUNTY CIRCUIT COURT—GENERAL TERM—MAY 21.

Before Judges Strong, Emott and Birdseye.

It was expected that this Court would open early in the morning, but owing to the unavoidable absence of Judges STRONG and EMOTT, who did not arrive until evening, the Court was not opened until 4 o'clock. In the meantime Judge BIRDSEYE proceeded with Special Term business.

DECISIONS.

When the General Term opened, Judge EMOTT said there was no decision in the Staten Island Ferry Case, as there had been a misunderstanding between members of the Court as to the time the decision was to be rendered. He came to-day prepared to make it, but his associates were not prepared.

The Court then rendered a decision in the case of Jeremiah Butler, on a motion made and argued at Poughkeepsie, granting a new trial.

Butler was a Sergeant in the United States Marine Service, and stationed at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard. He kept a small greggery just outside of the Yard, which was generally attended by his wife, who indulged freely in intoxicating liquors, as well as Butler himself. One morning she was found dead in the house, and Butler was indicted and tried for killing her, the Jury rendering a verdict of guilty of manslaughter first degree. The motion for a new trial is granted, upon the ground that the testimony did not warrant the finding of the Jury.

THE SHEEPSHEAD BAY RAPE CASE.

The decision in the case of Joseph Jackson, convicted of rape last August, at Sheepshead Bay, upon the person of Catharine Sullivan, an immigrant girl, was next rendered, denying the motion for a new trial. The motion was made upon the point that defence offered to prove special acts of improper conduct on the part of the complaining witness, which was ruled out. The Court then adjourned.

KINGS COUNTY COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER—THURSDAY, May 21.

Before Judge STRONG, and Justices EMMONS and SCHOONMAKER.

Immediately upon the adjournment of the General Term, the Oyer and Terminer was organized, to sentence Joseph Jackson, convicted of rape, in whose case, upon an application for a new trial, a decision adverse had just been rendered in the General Term.

Jackson, upon being called by the Clerk, Mr. STEVENS, accompanied by his wife, who has stood by him in all his troubles, advanced to the bar. He was asked the usual question, whether he had anything to say before sentence was pronounced, to which he replied that he supposed it would do him no good to say anything; but he was not guilty, or he would not care anything about it. The Court then addressed him a few remarks before passing sentence. Judge STRONG stated that there was only one mitigating circumstance in the case. It would seem that when Jackson entered the room where the girl was, at Sheepshead Bay, that he did not go there with premeditated design to use force. The Court complimented the wife for her almost unparalleled fidelity, and sentenced Jackson to ten years imprisonment—the lowest term for the offence, under the statute.

When the sentence was passed, Mrs. Jackson partially swooned, when Jackson caught her in his arms, and attempted to soothe her. Partially reviving, she attempted to address the Court, and was checked by Jackson, who still supported her. She finally exclaimed, "I will speak, I will tell the Court he has always been a good husband to me. It is not true. It is not true—I cannot believe," and she fell groaning upon a chair, repeating, "I cannot believe it—it is impossible," until removed to a window for fresh air.

To the usual questions, Jackson said he was born in Gardiner, Me., was a stevedore by trade, never was in any prison before, and was 37 years of age.

The Court consented that he should remain in Jail until Monday next, when he will be taken to Sing Sing.

The Court then adjourned sine die.

Terrible Tragedy at Geneseo—Persecution and Suicide.

A tragical affair occurred at Geneseo, N. Y., on Wednesday. A young Englishman, by the name of RICHMOND, came from the West, to Geneseo, about a year ago, bringing with him a woman, apparently young, who pretended to be a cousin of his. RICHMOND was employed by H. P. NORTH, Esq., in his flouring mill, and bore the reputation of being an industrious and faithful man. He (RICHMOND) was subsequently arrested on the oath of the woman, and, this week, was to be tried for seduction and breach of promise, at the present term of the County Court and Court of Sessions, at Geneseo. As we are informed, he was so tried, and the Jury awarded a verdict of $500 to the woman. After the first trial, he was again arrested, on the charge of being the reputed father of the woman's child, and gave bail to provide for the support of its seven years, at one dollar per week.

After having thus been arraigned a second time, RICHMOND was a third time arrested, on a warrant issued on the oath of the woman, charging him with rape. On this charge he was arrested yesterday morning, at the mill where he was at work, and after the warrant had been served by the officer, he remarked that "he supposed he had got to go to State Prison any way, or else he would not have been persecuted as he was," and requested permission to go up stairs to change his clothes.

This was granted by the officer, and while he was up stairs, the persons in the mill heard a noise resembling the falling of a window. It was not noticed much, however, and the officer, after waiting some time, and RICHMOND not returning, became tired of waiting, and proceeded up stairs, together with a number of persons, and found the door of the room locked; to which RICHMOND had gone to change his clothes. The officer called to RICHMOND, and hearing no reply, forced the door open, and found the latter lying on the floor, gasping and bleeding from the effect of a pistol shot wound through the head, the ball passing entirely through his head, and coming out just above his left ear.

Mr. SILAS MILLER, of Coxsackie, Columbia County, was killed at the railroad crossing near Macklindale, on Monday last. He was driving a pair of horses, which he stopped when he saw the train approaching; as the train passed the horses became frightened and overturned the wagon, throwing him out with such force as to cause instant death.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1857.

To Correspondents.

We are unable to answer the inquiries of our Toronto Correspondent concerning the present address of the gentleman to whom he refers.

G. B. R. is informed that Dr. Mars, of Bond-street, is the owner of the statue of WASHINGTON in the Park.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

A letter from one of our Washington correspondents indicates that active movements are on foot to relieve Gen. WALKER from his position in Nicaragua, or if it be too late for this, to take possession of the Transit route. The rumor of WALKER's escape from Rivas is generally discredited. At the last advices he still held that place, and it is confidently predicted by his friends that he would be able to hold it for some weeks or even months longer. But it is said that 293 men left San Francisco for his relief in the Ocean Bird, and we were told several days since, on good authority, that 500 more would soon be ready to go from New-Orleans. We do not attach much importance to these statements, although if the steamer next due should bring news that WALKER still holds out, there is very likely to be another vigorous attempt for his relief.

News from the City of Mexico, to the 5th inst., has been received. There is no positive information, as stated by telegraph, that Col. CRABB and his party had been shot. On the contrary, orders had been issued to bring the prisoners to Mexico for trial, and it was believed to be the intention to clear them, if possible. The Mexican loss was heavy in the battle with Col. CRABB. Letters report that five hundred more filibusters had entered Arizona, and were encamped in the region of Tucson.

Another conspiracy to revolutionize the country was discovered on the 29th ult. The plan was to seize the person of President COMMONFORT, and then attack the city. Captain NOGUERA, a protégé of COMMONFORT's, was to plunge a dagger into his patron's breast, and his death was to be the signal for the attack. The ringleaders in this conspiracy had all been arrested, and it was rumored that they would be beheaded. Others had also been arrested, said to be concerned in the affair. It was reported that Ex-Minister AGUILAR was also implicated.

From the Rio de Janeiro papers, which we have received to the 4th of April, we learn that the Brazilian Government adheres to the proposition of the United States to abolish privateering and to exempt all private property from seizure by ships of war. It is officially announced that the Brazilian Government is ready to accept this as a new national jurisprudence.

A dispatch from St. Louis states that Colonel CUMMINGS, Indian agent for the West, has been tendered, but declines, the Governorship of Utah.

A Horse Show was had at Chatham Four Corners on Wednesday last, under the auspices of the Columbia County Agricultural Society. The show was creditable and successful.

The troubles of our Police Rulers are as thick as ever. Mr. MATSELL was not called upon yesterday by Mr. CARPENTER to surrender his office and the appurtenances thereof to the new Police Commissioners, but he will be requested to do so to-day. The new Commissioners tried Messrs. HORRIGAN, FILES and EVANS of the Fifth Ward Police, for insubordination. None of them appeared and all will to-day be dismissed. The old Commissioners met yesterday also, and peremptorily dismissed Captain SQUIRES of the Eleventh Ward, appointing Lieut. CROFT in his place. They made also some other appointments, promotions and dismissals deemed requisite by the peculiar state of affairs. Ex-Capt. MAYNARD of the Nineteenth Ward tendered yesterday to the new Commissioners the voluntary assistance of from 150 to 200 men until such time as the present litigation concerning their powers should be finally settled. Tenders of buildings in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Wards, free of charge, were offered them—on the other hand they First Division of the New-York Citizen Volunteers, some fifty officers, resolved to form themselves into a military organization to resist the enforcement of the offensive laws and to sustain Mayor WOOD. The resolutions passed at the meeting of the Second Division on the evening previous were fully indorsed. Matters were quiet in Brooklyn. But our Corporation Counsetor, BUSTEED, in the Supreme Court, Special Term, before Judge BLADEKE, moved for a modification of the injunction granted at the instance of RICHARD S. ROBERTS, some time ago, restraining the Corporation from placing $10,000 at the disposal of Mayor WOOD, to enable him to resist the laws recently passed by the Legislature affecting the City and County of New-York, as that the Common Council may exercise the proper power of a legislative body. The decision was reserved.

It has been announced in some of the papers with a good deal of flourish that some of the military companies of the City had declared their intention to stand by Mayor WOOD in his resistance to the laws of the State. The rumor is a calumny upon these spirited and patriotic organizations. It grows out of the fact that a portion of the members of a target company, called the Citizens' Corps, not recognized by the authorities, and forming no part of the military force of the State, had passed resolutions of this character. The regular military companies of the City are under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, the Governor of the State, and will sustain the law, if necessary hereafter, as they have done heretofore, against all who may attempt to nullify or overthrow it.

To-day is City Inspector MORTON's first pay day of the contractors for cleaning the streets. Their bills amount to $6,600, but Mr. MORTON says he shall not pay a single bill till he has examined the streets in each contractor's district, and discover whether the work has been done properly, and the money earned. When, pray, will he do his inspecting?

Mr. EBLING, yesterday, finished paying off old scores, due on last year's work, to Street sweepers and cartmen. The aggregate amount paid is about $23,000, among some 1,100 men.

The Association of Medical Superintendents of Institutions of the Insane brought its session to a conclusion last evening. During the day they had visited the Astor Library, the Deaf and Dumb at Fairwood, the Bloomingdale Asylum, and Dr. RICHARD's Institution for Imbeciles, at Harlem. At Bloomingdale they had a fine collation. Returning to the City at 6 o'clock, they passed resolutions of compliment and thanks, and adjourned.

By way of carrying into effect the recommendations of the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, for improving the position and efficiency of seamen in the merchant service, an agreement has been in circulation among the shipowners, and has been signed by GRINNELL, MINTURN & Co., CHARLES H. MARSHALL & Co., A. A. LOW & BROTHERS, and forty others of the most prominent merchants, to abolish the present custom of paying advance wages to seamen after the 1st day of July, 1857. To compensate for this innovation upon long-established custom, they propose to supply warm clothing, equal to one suit per man for each ship under their control, which shall be sold at cost to the sailors, and also to pay a bounty of 10 per cent. on the earned wages of each sailor who shall perform the voyage to the end of contract or return in the ship. If the ship is lost, every seaman to be paid to the time of the loss, in no case less than one month on foreign, and one half month on coastwise voyages. These conditions are to be affixed to the shipping articles. Further meetings are to be held for final action.

In the Supreme Court, yesterday, the case of FOWLES vs. BOWEN, for libel, was continued. The room was crowded with spectators, among whom was the venerable Dr. LYMAN BEECHER, who, by invitation of his Honor, took a seat for a short time upon the bench. The plaintiff introduced sufficient evidence to support a prima facie case, and there rested, reserving the bulk of his testimony to introduce as rebutting evidence, when the defendants should have finished their case. Mr. CUTTING, however, on the plaintiff resting, arose and proceeded to sum up. Upon being asked, he remarked that he intended to offer no testimony, believing that the plaintiff had not made a case which required it. The plaintiff is thus debarred from introducing the greater part of his evidence, and the case will have to go to the Jury on such testimony as has already been presented by the plaintiff. Mr. CUTTING tried the same course, with success, in the case of OAKLEY vs. ASPINWALL, argued some time ago. Mr. CUTTING, yesterday, finished his summing up, and Mr. O'CONOR will sum up for the plaintiff to-day.

The summing up of counsel in the French extradition case is at length closed, and United States Marshal BETTS is engaged in arranging the mass of evidence that has been taken. His decision will be sent on to the Department at Washington as soon as it is written. This case has been under examination since the 11th of February, and has occupied the time of the Commissioners forty-five sessions.

Judge CLERKE, yesterday, rendered a decision in the Quarantine Commission case, denying the motion for an injunction to restrain the Commissioners from erecting buildings on Seguine's Point, on the ground that the Commissioners, by the sixth section, are endowed with discretionary powers in regard to the temporary buildings.

The case of the officers of the alleged slaver Merchant was not continued yesterday, in consequence of the death of Commissioner MORTON's daughter-in-law. The first mate of the Merchant, Mr. JAMES MILLS, has been discharged on bail. He was held as a witness.

Mr. PATTERSON, second mate of the American ship Victoria, was yesterday arrested on a charge made by HENRY NOBLE and DAVID COOK, of having on the 18th and 22d of February, and the 13th of May, assaulted them with iron belaying pins, and a capstan bar.

DANIEL DIX, chief mate of the ship Witch of the Wave, was arrested yesterday on a charge of insubordination, made by Capt. JOHN E. A. TODD.

Coroner GAMBLE held an inquest yesterday upon the body of young GRELET, who died on Thursday at the Eldridge-street Jail. GRELET was arrested last September, at the same time with the French railway prisoners, one of whom was his brother. He has been kept in custody as a witness. The Jury gave a verdict, declaring his death to have been caused by abscesses on the brain caused by inflammation. In this verdict they pronounced Eldridge-street Jail, in its present condition, as an unsuitable place for the custody of prisoners or witnesses. The body of GRELET, after solemn funeral service in the French Catholic Church in Canal-street, was taken to Calvary Cemetery for interment. A large number of prominent French residents of the City, together with the French extradition prisoners, joined the funeral procession.

The Associate Reformed Presbyterian General Synod continued its sessions yesterday. The principal business under consideration was the proposed basis of union with the Associate Presbyterian Church. The delegates seemed pretty equally divided on sentiment. There was a debate, conducted with great moderation on both sides, though there is evidently deep feeling in the matter, in which it was asserted that should the Synod decide on the acceptance of the proposed basis, no middle course will be left those who are opposed to it but a secession from the Church. The debate will be continued to-day.

We understand that Messrs. WILLIAMS & STEVENS intend to close their exhibition of CHURCH's Niagara on Monday next. It would be a great convenience if this magnificent picture could be exhibited to the public, for a few days before it leaves the country, by daylight instead of gas-light, in a room large enough to admit a respectable number of persons at a time and in an atmosphere which can be breathed at least ten minutes without danger of suffocation. Cannot this be done?

The bodies of two unknown men were picked up in the water near Coney Island yesterday. One apparently was that of a man 35 years of age, dark hair, and had on a black frock coat, black satin vest, and black pants. In the pockets were found two coppers, three keys, ivory handled penknife, and the following pawn ticket: "No. 37,730 C. FRIEDENBERG, Loan Office, No. 299 East Broadway, corner of Scammel-street, Feb. 19, 1857. Coat $1. NICHOLS." The other body was that of a sailor, about 5 feet 8 inches high. Further particulars can be obtained from Coroner LOTT, of Gravesend.

On Thursday afternoon a party of thirty children, varying in age from babyhood to fourteen years, left New-York from the Children's Aid Society, under the guardianship of Messrs. C. C. TRACY, of the Newsboys' Lodging House, and J. MACY, Assistant Secretary of the Society.

JOHN B. GOUGH addressed a crowded house at the Allen-street Methodist E. Church, last evening, in his happiest style. Ex-Mayor HARPER presided.

Ex-President PIERCE and his wife left town, yesterday, for Concord, N. H.

JOSEPH JACKSON, convicted of rape upon the person of CATHARINE SULLIVAN at Sheepshead Bay last Summer, was sentenced yesterday by Judge STRONG, in the Kings County Court of Oyer and Terminer, to ten years' imprisonment—the lowest term.

JEREMIAH BUTLER, who killed his wife in Brooklyn last Summer, and was subsequently convicted of manslaughter, has had a new trial granted him.

INCREASE OF PRICES AT HOTELS.—It is understood that the proprietors of the principal hotels are endeavoring to raise their prices for board from $2 50 to $3 a day. The proprietors of the Metropolitan do not assent to the arrangement;—whether it will go into effect without their coöperation, we are not aware.

A hotel proprietor, like everybody else who has anything to sell, has an undoubted right to fix his own price upon it;—and a very good reason for an advance in the prices of board is to be found in the advanced price of all articles of food. We think it is a fair question, however, and one which the proprietors would do well to consider, whether the traveling public will not on the whole be better satisfied with a simpler style of living than with an advance in cost. It is not so much the cost of the necessaries of life, as it is the extravagantly luxurious habits of hotels, which the effort to outdo each other has produced that makes it necessary to raise the price of board. If some of the great hotel proprietors, instead of raising the price of board, would introduce a more moderate style of living, we have no doubt that the change would be much more acceptable to the traveling public, and leave a much better profit for the keeper of the hotel.

The magnificence of our hotels is now simply oppressive to the majority of people who live in them, and the luxuriousness of the tables is as little conducive to genuine enjoyment as to health and good morals. Besides, why should there not be different scales of expense, and different styles of living, to suit the tastes and the convenience of travelers? Now, they are all compelled to eat alike, to live alike and to pay alike—whatever may be the variety in their tastes, their habits or their means. A simpler style of living would suit the great majority. If the few desire expensive luxuries, let them pay for them. As it is, they are mainly paid for by those who would willingly do without them.

The Contest Between Law and Civil Anarchy.

The Journal of Commerce persists in regarding the pending struggle between Mayor WOOD and the Police Commissioners from a purely partisan point of view. It can see in it nothing but an attempt of the "Black Republicans" to take away patronage and power from the Democratic Party. We submit that the time for such a treatment of the case has gone by. While the law was pending in the Legislature, it was quite legitimate to resist its enactment upon such grounds. But party considerations have no longer anything to do with the question. It is right enough for the Democratic Party to insist upon the repeal of the law,—or even to seek its overthow by the decisions of the Courts. But every Democrat and every Republican,—every citizen who has any stake whatever in the maintenance of order and the security of life and of property,—is deeply and profoundly interested in not permitting this, or any other law, to be nullified or resisted so long as it retains its place upon the statute book. We cannot believe that any considerable portion of the large and influential class which the Journal claims especially to represent, can possibly acquiesce in the view which that paper takes of the pending controversy. The merchants of New-York are eminently and steadfastly conservative in all their instincts and principles. Their interests and their sentiments equally attach them to the Supremacy of Law. They have always been first and foremost in frowning upon any attempt, upon the part of ambitious politicians or of an ignorant and thoughtless populace, to disregard the injunctions of the law or resist its constituted Authorities. And we shall not believe, without further evidence than we have yet seen, that in so important a contest as the one now pending, they are prepared to go for Anarchy instead of Law.

For that is simply and clearly the issue. The law of this State distinctly and unmistakably commits the entire control and authority over the Police Department, to the new Board of Commissioners: and it declares with equal distinctness and precision that the Mayor of the City shall no longer exercise any such authority or control. No one denies or doubts that this is the language and meaning of the law. No Court, and no Judge of any Court, has ever declared that law to be unconstitutional,—to be hostile to the vested rights of this City or of any inhabitant thereof, or to be, in any respect or for any cause, invalid or of imperfect obligation. It stands upon the Statute Book with just as much authority as any other law. It is just as binding in its obligation, and just as imperative in its injunctions, as the laws against murder and forgery, or as any other laws whatever. It is the duty of every citizen to obey it. Whatever he may have thought, or may now think, of the justice and wisdom of its provisions,—whatever he may think of its constitutionality, or of its political and partisan bearings, so long as it is the law,—he cannot, if he be an honest man and a good citizen, refuse to recognize and obey it.

Yet Mayor WOOD is now using all the powers of his office, and all his personal influence,—not to secure the repeal of the law nor its overthrow by the Courts,—but to resist its execution. He is using the organized and disciplined police force of the City against the law. He is forbidding the men over whom he claims authority, and who like himself are in office only to secure the execution of the law, to recognize its existence and is punishing them for attempting to enforce it. And he does all this,—not upon the ground that the law has been declared void by any authorized tribunal, but simply because he thinks it may hereafter be thus decided to be unconstitutional. What possible shadow of right has he, or has any man, thus to anticipate the decision of the Courts of law and make his conjecture as to their action, the rule of his conduct as an Executive officer? It is said that an unconstitutional law is no law at all. That is very true; but every law, duly enacted, is presumed to be constitutional, and is constitutional, until it is decided and declared to be otherwise by the Courts of law. It does not become invalid because Mayor WOOD thinks, or believes, or hopes it may at some future day become so. When that decision is made, then Mayor WOOD will have a right to govern his conduct by it. Whenever the Courts shall declare this law to be unconstitutional, then Mayor WOOD can resume the authority of which the law deprives him. But in doing it before that time, he nullifies the law by sheer force. He tramples upon the first principles of government, and renders the preservation of order by the supremacy of law, utterly impossible.

Mayor WOOD is making an experiment upon the City of New-York. He is testing the question how far he can be sustained by the public sentiment and actual force of the City, in establishing his own personal will and authority over the Laws, and if necessary against them. He aims to be not merely the Mayor of the City, acting under law and executing its provisions in accordance with his duty and his oath, but an absolute, unchecked Autocrat over its million of people—wielding their authority, using their money, and administering their affairs without any other restraint than his own convictions or his own convenience. He has been preparing for such an experiment ever since he has been in office. He has drilled and instructed the Police to regard his will as their law. He has sought to secure their devotion to his person by parades, by flatteries, and by medals. He attempts to compel their active aid by threats of punishment if they refuse it. He has sought similar support with the Target Companies—the unrecognized and unorganized military—of the City. He has appealed steadily to the interests and the passions of the lowest and most reckless classes. And he now expects to be sustained by all these influences, added to the party strength which the nature of the contest gives him, in overthrowing by violence and force the Authority of the Law, and in substituting for it his own personal and unrestricted Will.

We have no hesitation in predicting that in this attempt Mayor WOOD will fail. He is in the wrong latitude for such an experiment. He is in New-York, and not in Paris or St. Petersburg. He may have all the ambition and all the ability of LOUIS NAPOLEON, but he has not the same material to work with, nor the same atmosphere to work in. He will find that the great mass of the People—including the very men on whom he relies for aid—respect the Law more than they either love or fear him. Every hour's reflection, while it reveals the real nature of his designs, strengthens the determination even of the policemen under his immediate control, to stand by the Law, and maintain its supremacy. We have no apprehensions of violence or bloodshed in this contest. The legal authorities have no need and no desire to provoke such an issue, and Mayor WOOD dare not. Upon the first blow which he should strike in such a cause, he would find himself alone. The Police force of this City, while its members properly and prudently abstain from any active participation in the controversy, and will await its decision by the proper tribunals, is not disposed to incur the penalties of the law, and the disgrace of rebellion, for his convenience, or for the promotion of his personal or political designs. They are American citizens, as well as Policemen, and they will not forget the duties of one character any more than neglect those of the other.

The Chinese War—Poisoning and Assassination as Weapons of War.

We are sorry to say that the zeal of one of our cotemporaries in the cause of peace and protection, has betrayed it, inadvertently no doubt, into an apology for the Chinese poisoning and assassinations. The Tribune yesterday morning expresses its surprise that John Bull should expect the Chinamen to change their hereditary system of warfare for his special benefit, and ridicules him for feeling horrified by the poisoning of the bread and water, and the price set on the heads of the English. "Poor John Chinaman" is not, we are told, to be "deprived of his only means of defence and revenge against the unprovoked assault upon his life and his habitation by civilized Christians." "The natives of the Middle Kingdom," adds the writer, "are not so crushed and bestial in their servitude as the darker skins of Hindostan."

We do not purpose discussing the cause or justifiability of the Chinese war, but we cannot suffer "these abominable principles and this more abominable avowal of them," to use the language of Lord CHATHAM, in answer to a somewhat similar line of argument, to pass without a word of comment. Whatever the opinions of the American public may be regarding the justice or expediency of the course which is being pursued by the British at Canton, we cannot quietly suffer the world to be seduced into so belief that we look with eyes of approval, or even of indulgence, upon the use of such weapons as poison and assassination—against men of the same race, language and religion as ourselves, either by "poor John Chinaman," or any other "poor John" who may owe them a grudge. We are not at all surprised to find the people of Hong Kong, and other places, resorting to every device to rid themselves of their enemies which barbarism and cruelty can devise. Nor, we venture to assert, is John Bull; but this is by no means a reason for his not lifting up his hands in holy horror thereat. When one of our countrymen on the Western frontier falls in an Indian skirmish, we are not surprised to learn that he loses his scalp, but this does not lessen our disgust for the custom of scalping. We know very well that the laws of savage warfare visit on the vanquished the direst penalties which demoniac rage can suggest, but no civilized Christian man ever hears of such horrors without indignation, no matter what the provocation or how the quarrel begins. It is the nature of savages and wild beasts to be treacherous, and cowardly, and bloodthirsty, to lie in wait for, tear, rend, and torture their victims. These are their "hereditary system of warfare," but we have never yet heard of their tactics exciting either sympathy or approval among Christians or gentlemen. The very use of these means of warfare by the Chinese alone goes far to vindicate the British policy.

The public will be slow to believe that a population which commences the destruction of its enemies, at the very first outbreak of hostilities, by poisoning bread and water, and putting a price on their heads, without discrimination of age or sex, is remarkable for a peaceful disposition. People of ferocious habits are not generally peacefully disposed. The negro-burners and torturers of Tennessee and Kentucky are not men slow to quarrel. The cruel are too often swift to shed blood. We can only say that, no matter how this quarrel began, the means resorted to by the Chinese to carry it on being such as place them on the level with the beasts of the forest, and such as the whole civilized world visits with the deepest execration, we can see without a pang all the laws of civilized warfare enforced against them in their fullest rigor. The cowardly ferocity of the Chinese proves nothing as to the "preservation of their pride" under the harassing influence of "long suffering." The application of such a term to the intercourse of the truculent Canton rabble with foreignors of all nations for many years past we cannot designate by any milder phrase than a perversion of language. The Chinese are notoriously a slavish people—broken into habits of abject submission by many centuries of despotism. No people would submit more readily to a foreign rule, when once that rule had disorganized and displaced their own government. A Tartar horde overran the whole of their vast empire without much difficulty. Seventy thousand British will doubtless find that the experience of the world, which stamps poisoners and assassins as cowards and slaves, is based on truth; and we venture to assert that this high-minded, high-toned race would be conquered with less difficulty and ruled with far less trouble than those Hindoos, whose "bestial servitude" the Tribune deplores. The institution of any comparison whatever between the two races, certainly betrays very remarkable ignorance of the leading characteristics of both. To the milder sort of philanthropists the Hindoo is certainly a much more promising object of patronage than "poor John Chinaman" is like to prove for ages to come; and he is, let us add, a vastly better soldier than the Chinese have ever yet shown themselves.

The insinuation inserted at the close of the article, that Sir JOHN BOWRING, the man of peace, temperance, and all other "movements" of the same caste, concocted this war, and brought on this bloodshed and disorder in conjunction with the English tea-dealers and others at Canton and Hong Kong, solely with the view of raising the price of Chinese products in the home market, is so very singular, that we should be ashamed of ourselves if we attempted its refutation. Blundering, folly, rashness, inhumanity, ambition we may charge him with; but for the honor of human nature, we will accuse no man of such antecedents as BOWRING with letting slip the dogs of war upon an unoffending population, simply to aid the guilty schemes of speculators for a rise.

The Condition of the Police Force.

We are by no means certain that the Supervisors, by their recent action, succeeded in paralyzing the action of the new Board of Police Commissioners. That they intended to do so is evident; but nothing is more common than for people, who are not particularly sharp, to miss the precise object at which they aim and accomplish something quite different. The youth who in nursery rhymes, "bent his bow to shoot a crow," but succeeded only in "killing the cat in the window," has had a great many successful imitators.

1. It is very clear, in the first place, that the Supervisors did actually recognize as valid and in full force the law creating the new Metropolitan Police, for they quote its language as authority for the action which they proceed to take.

2. Now that act (§ 31) declares that from and after the date of the first meeting of the new Board of Police, it shall have all the power and authority heretofore conferred by law upon the Mayor, Recorder and City Judge in their capacity as Police Commissioners; and that the duty and authority and power of each and all these officers in relation to Police government and discipline shall wholly cease and vest in the new Board created by this act. This is very explicit and establishes the fact, that the new Board is the only Board which has any legal authority or control over whatever Police force there may be in the City of New-York.

3. The same law (§ 32) proceeds to declare that "the police officers and patrolmen shall continue to do duty under existing laws until after the first meeting of the Board of Police under this act, when the said Police shall hold office and do duty under the act hereby enacted, and as members of the Police force of the Metropolitan Police District hereby constituted." This settles another point, and places the members of this present Police directly under the jurisdiction of the new Board.

4. The law (§ 6) provides that the new Board shall appoint so many Captains not to exceed 40, so many Sergeants not to exceed 150, and "so many police patrolmen as may be determined upon by the Board of Supervisors of the County of New-York;"—and the said Board of Supervisors may from time to time increase or diminish the number of patrolmen,—and until otherwise provided the quota of police force for the counties of New-York and Kings shall be of the number of patrolmen now existing by law in the cities of New-York and Brooklyn. This settles two other points—first, that the Supervisors have the power to increase or diminish the numbers of the Police force; and secondly, that until they do thus provide for its increase or diminution, it shall continue to be tho same as it was under the old law.

5. So much for the law. Now for the action of the Supervisors. On Monday evening, having first, as we have seen, distinctly recognized the validity and obligation of the new law,—and thus sanctioned the provisions we have already quoted from it, they proceed to assign five men to the jurisdiction of the new Board. But they say not one word about "increasing or diminishing" the aggregate number of the Police force of the City. They do not disband the present force existing under the old law. On the contrary they proceed to declare nothing in their resolutions shall be construed as interfering with that force in any respect. Instead of diminishing the Police force of the City,—or doing what might be understood or construed as designed to produce such a result,—they distinctly protest against such a construction,—adopt and continue in power the policemen already in office, and then authorize the new Board to appoint five more.

6. The Supervisors assign only five to the jurisdiction of the new Board—reserving to the old Board the control of the existing force. But, unfortunately for them, the Supervisors have no power whatever to assign jurisdiction or control over the police. The law does that for itself. They have simply power to determine the number of the police force, and to "increase or diminish" it at discretion. But when they have done this—when they have fixed upon the number of policemen for the City, that number, whatever it may be, is placed by the law under the jurisdiction and control of the new Board, and neither the Supervisors, nor anybody else, has any right or any power to assign authority over the whole or any part of it to anybody else.

The Supervisors therefore have recognized the new law as valid and in force;—have performed the duty which it enjoins upon them;—and have determined the number of patrolmen for this City,—retaining the whole of the old force and authorizing the new Board to appoint five more. This is certainly an important step in aid of the endeavors of the new Board to carry into execution the provisions of the law.

Public Health and Quarantine.

The approach of Summer brings with it the remembrance of the past, and no little anxiety for the future, relative to the public health and Quarantine. Judging from the health reports of the West Indies, and those of New-Orleans and other seaboard towns, the indications are that we are not likely to be visited this season with pestilential disease, nor inconvenienced by the enforcement of rigid quarantine laws and regulations. But however flattering the reports from abroad may be, indicating that we shall not be threatened this Summer with imported disease, the authorities should not on that account relax their sanitory efforts to keep our streets, alleys, vaults, &c., in the best possible condition.

There was an attempt, last Summer, on the part of some of our ship-owners, to "dodge Quarantine" with their West India vessels and infected cargoes, by "heading off" their vessels at Sandy Hook, and sending them to some small seaport town bordering on Long Island Sound, where they could discharge their cargoes immediately and then set sail for the wharves of our City; and not unfrequently before these vessels could reach the City, parts of their cargo would be landed here from on board of smaller vessels, without regard to its previous infected condition. The result of this evasion of our Quarantine laws was the sudden and unaccountable appearance of several well marked cases of yellow fever on the piers and wharves of our City; and this singular development of pestilence, in those localities, did not cease till the Commissioners of Health ferreted out the secret, sent one or more of the poisoned vessels to Quarantine, and absolutely prohibited the cargoes of such vessels from being brought into the City. The bark Hyperion was recorded as one of the list of these vessels.

Rumor has it that the attempt of last season will be repeated this Summer by the Cuban shippers, if the prevalence of the yellow fever in the West Indies should make it necessary to enforce quarantine regulations here. We understand that if such an attempt is made, our authorities, having ample powers to remedy the evil, will act promptly and effectively in the premises. Our Health Laws, while they have special reference to infected vessels coming directly from Southern or West Indian ports, nevertheless apply in full force to ALL VESSELS and CARGOES deemed to be infected by the Commissioners of Health, or Board of Health, no matter what may have been their port of departure. Such being the nature and grasp of our Quarantine Laws, our City will be protected from the threatened pestilence of last Summer, whatever "dodge" may be resorted to, provided the authorities are watchful and efficient.

From the Louisville Journal

We copy the following paragraph from a leading Philadelphia paper, partly in justice to the singularly enterprising editor of the New-York Ledger, and partly to prevent the circulation of any erroneous impression in regard to ourselves. BONNER, of the Ledger, is a glorious fellow, who deserves all that can be said of him. He spares no expense in rendering his paper worthy of the unparalleled patronage which it receives. It is a prodigy among papers as he is among editors. It is true that we have undertaken to furnish weekly a half column of pleasant and amusing paragraphs for the Ledger, but our readers must not suppose that any portion of our time will on that account be abstracted from the Louisville Journal, which we are determined to render the leading political journal of the country, if it is not so already. Our labors for the Ledger will scarcely cost us more than an hour per week, but we shall take great pleasure in performing them, and endeavor to make them acceptable to the host of BONNER's patrons—nearly as large the army of XERXES.

"It is the practice of Mr. BONNER to make the article he advertises superior to any other of this kind, and then he advertises with a perfect looseness. Were the Ledger an inferior paper of its class we do not think that his advertising would be of much benefit. His advertisements make the people buy the Ledger, and its superiority over all others makes people keep buying it. BONNER has for contributors all the leading intellects of the day. He pays them fabulous amounts for their articles, and monopolizes their writings. He has the best talent of the country at his command. No sooner does any star appear in a different part of the literary firmament than Mr. BONNER hastens to make it a fixed star in the Ledger horizon.

GEORGE D. PRENTICE, of the Louisville Journal, one of the wit lest writers of the day, is now engaged for the New-York Ledger.

We have also heard that FITZ GREENE HALLECK, the greatest of American poets, is hesitating whether or not to reappear with poetical pen of world-wide renown, and gratify the millions of readers of the Ledger. Thus Mr. BONNER makes his Ledger worth advertising."

LATER FROM MEXICO.

The Shooting of Col. Crabb and his Party—The Late Conspiracy against Comonfort, &c.

(From the New Orleans Picayune of May 16.)

By the schooner Major Barbour, Capt. ARNET, arrived last evening, we have advices from Vera Cruz to the 9th inst. The Barbour brings $38,500 in specie on freight.

Captain ARNET left in port two British vessels of-war, two French, and one Spanish. Their object is doubtless to watch the interests of English, French and Spanish subjects, in case of difficulty at home or foreign war; also, perhaps, to exert a moral influence at least upon negotiations now in progress.

Vera Cruz papers, furnished by Capt. ARNET, make no further mention of the filibuster route to Sonora. We learn, however, from passengers that the prisoners taken at Caborca, on the 6th inst., sixty five in number, and among them Capt. CRABB, had all been shot, and the Government was on the lookout for other parties of the filibuster band. These facts were obtained from official accounts received at the Capital, on the 5th inst.

The papers, however, confirm to the fullest extent, the general result of the expedition as before stated, the attack upon the filibusters then in possession of the village of Caborca, on the 31st ult., in which Capt. CRABB was wounded, and eight of his men killed; their subsequent four days' siege, during which the Sonorians were numerously reinforced; the second attack, on the 6th, when the two houses in which CRABB was besieged, were fired, exploding two barrels of powder by which many were killed and wounded; their final surrender, 50 in number, at discretion; and the report that they were to be shot on the 9th.

The engagements both on the 1st and the 6th were severe and bloody, the Sonorians are also suffering great loss, especially of officers, which left them at the close of the first day almost without command.

Accounts vary both as to the number of the filibusters and of the Sonorians. According to one report, the former numbered 150 men in all, which, deducting the 59 prisoners and 14 fugitives, would make the number of the dead 76. There was a party of 25 in the vicinity near Tubutama, who advancing at the time, had no part in the engagement. It is stated that 11 of these were taken, and as the last accounts the remaining 14 were hotly pursued.

The force of the Sonorians on the first is estimated at 250 to 300 men; on the last day, with reinforcements, at 700.

Touching the expedition by sea, designed to cooperate with that by land, letters have been received at the capital from Hermosillo, dated March 30, which stated that 200 filibusters had landed at Bobos, two leagues from Guaymas. It was added that great disaffection existed among them, and that 20 had deserted and presented themselves to the American Consul at that port, who turned them over to the authorities. They represented that they had no intention of making war upon Mexico, and that they had been deceived as to the object of the expedition.

The same letters state that 500 more filibusters had made their way into Arizona, and were encamped in the region of Tucson. Letters had been received from General YAÑEZ, which state that on the receipt of the news of the route of the filibusters, he had suspended his march towards Sonora. He had, however, sent on reinforcements and munitions of war by sea.

The parties concerned in the conspiracy against the life of the President have been arrested. The plot was to assassinate the President at night, at the Palace, a room of which is occupied by Madame. Captain of the Guard, [illegible] was the head of the conspiracy. [illegible] confessed the existence of the letter, whose accidental discovery brought to light the whole plot. He was one of the most intimate friends of the President, and enjoyed a seat at his table. The principal part of the other conspirators have been [illegible] the palace. Generals [illegible] have been put in the most rigorous confinement.

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.

The Foreign Appointments—Increasing Number of Applicants—Examination of Acting Midshipmen, &c.

The number of applications for Foreign appointments, particularly for consulates, continues to increase. Every day brings hither both individuals and letters strongly recommendatory for these offices. The President has declared to his friends that the business greatly embarrasses him, particularly as he cannot gratify one in ten of the applicants. No doubt the appointments will be made gradually, he having the entire Summer before him for that purpose. None will, it is positively stated, be summarily recalled, and the utmost delicacy will be observed towards the present incumbents. This programme has caused much disappointment to those who anticipated an entire change during the ensuing month.

The Secretary of the Navy has ordered Captains PENDERGRAST, LOWNDES and WILKES, and Commanders KENNEDY and PAGE to witness the examination of the acting midshipmen at the Naval Academy commencing on the 1st of June.

It is not true that Governor WRIGHT, of Indiana or any other person has been selected for the Governorship of Utah. The difficulty exists in finding a man suitable for the emergency.

The Marshal for the District of Columbia has given notice to Mr. BLANCHARD, one of the printers of the National Era, and Mr. DAVIS A. HALL, of his intention to sell their property to pay the bail forfeited by GEO. CHARLES, who was charged with the abduction of slaves from this District.

The Republicans here nominated to-night candidates for Collector, Surveyor, and Register, to be voted for in June.

Mr. Soulé in Washington—The Purchase of Cuba—The Spanish, English and French Ministers, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 21, 1857.

Mr. SOULÉ is again here, and is, of course, on a footing of intimacy with Mr. BUCHANAN. It cannot be doubted that they have talked over the Ostend matter, now that they have considered the mode for the purchase of Cuba. In a few days we shall know who is to have charge, for the coming four years, of this important negotiation in Spain. Some suppose it will be Mr. PICKENS, of South Carolina. I do not think it will be Mr. BELMONT, though Cuba can never be purchased, except through the financial influence of the ROTHSCHILDS and other money-princes of Europe. No changes are to be made in the mission to England and France at present. But, ultimately, as soon as anything is to be done, Mr. R. J. WALKER will be our representative in England and Mr. SLIDELL in France. If Cuba is to be bought by the Administration, it must be through remarkably skillful diplomacy in London and Paris.

It is a matter as to which England and France will have something to say. Their consent and influence must be obtained as a necessary preliminary to a successful attempt to purchase Cuba from Spain. About one hundred and fifty or two hundred millions is all that the United States will consent to pay, or he bound for. They do not expect to pay it from the Treasury of the United States. But the Cuban Creole planters and slaveholders will promise to pay the money, as well they might, considering that by the immediate rise in the value of their property, they will make almost the clear sum of seven hundred and fifty millions. But the United States must assume the payment of this sum, in annual instalments of twenty-five millions a year.

The next Congress is looked to as being more likely to favor this scheme than any one that has preceded it, or may soon follow it.

But there is not much probability that the matter can be brought to a head before the second session of the next Congress.

Meanwhile it will be necessary to overcome the scruples and misgivings of the South in regard to the effect of this measure upon their interests. To think all these sugar interests is of no account, for that will soon be done by the cultivation of the Chinese and African sugar cane. To withdraw their capital and labor from present employments and leave these lands worthless, is a matter of little concern to most of the old Southern States, for the same process of depletion is now going on:—the life-blood of the old Atlantic slaveholding States being drawn off rapidly towards the newer States. It is a question, therefore, chiefly between Texas and Cuba. Shall the old slaveholding States back up Cuba or Texas? I think they incline to decide for Cuba, because Cuba will never form but one State, while Texas should it cure be divided, will afford two non-slaveholding States.

The northern commercial and manufacturing State will, of course go for the acquisition of Cuba, as they did for that of Texas. General CUSHING was mistaken when he asserted that Massachusetts had opposed the annexation of TEXAS, and his assertion is a flat contradiction of the repeated statements of Mr WEBSTER, who, after canvassing all the Eastern States, and using every effort to raise an opposition to the annexation of TEXAS, could not make a single proselyte, nor force a solitary follower.

The merits of the whole question, as a northern and a southern question, respectively, were argued in the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress by GERRIT SMITH, of New York, on one side, and Mr. BOYCE, of South Carolina, on the other. These were confessedly the ablest speeches on the subject ever made in Congress. Mr. GERRIT SMITH argued in favor of the acquisition and annexation of Cuba, with Africans free, and Africans slaves just as they are. Mr. BOYCE, on the other hand, undertook to demonstrate the fact that the proposed acquisition would be prejudicial to the interests of the whole country, and entirely ruinous to the South. It may not, however, be in the power of the South to prevent it, when an opportunity for the consummation of the project shall present itself. The influence of the great and growing Northwest is to decide this question, and as they furnish the water that constitutes the Mississippi, and will raise cattle and breadstuffs for exportation, they will insist upon having all the trade which properly belongs to the Mississippi—and the trade with Cuba is to them of vast importance.

Expedition from San Francisco to Aid Gen. Walker—The Utah Governorship—General News.

[FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.]

WASHINGTON, Friday, May 21, 1857.

Private advices were received here from California by the last steamer, stating that the clipper-ship Ocean Bird had sailed from San Francisco for San Juan del Sur, with 293 men, well officered, equipped and provisioned, to aid Gen. WALKER. Considerable excitement prevailed in San Francisco, and the Californians were determined to take forcible possession of the Nicaragua route, to insure the safety of travel and the transit of its treasure. Whether WALKER is "wired out" or not, they are determined that the Costa Ricans shall not hold possession of the right of way to their exclusion. I am informed that a similar movement is being made in our Southern States, and that a demonstration will also be made in New-York. In a short period we may look consequently for important developments.

It is understood that the Cabinet, yesterday and today, was engaged with the foreign appointments, but no determination have yet been made.

General HERRAN, the Minister from New Granada, a very distinguished and gallant officer, and who was a friend and companion of the celebrated BOLIVAR, expresses his opinion that our difficulties with his Government will be amicably adjusted, and that no rupture will take place.

No appointment has yet been made of a Governor to Utah. Major BENJAMIN MCCULLOCH, who is expected to arrive here soon, may yet be prevailed upon to accept. If he does not, it is proposed to give Gen. HARNEY both civil and military powers to settle Governor, until law and order is established in Utah.

A clerk in the Pension Office, from Michigan, was garrotted yesterday, on suspicion of being a Republican. It is said, however, that he is a good Democrat, and was removed merely to gratify Senator STEWART, of Michigan, the cause being a personal quarrel. The personal gratifications of no one man should be permitted to prevail, either in the appointments or removal of any officer of the government. I regret to say that in the departments there has been much too of this "one-man influence" accumulating positions to the overthrow of general recommendations and combined delegations.

An interesting case to gentlemen seeking foreign appointments, came up in the Court of Claims this morning. Mr. FERDINAND COX, who was Secretary of Legation at Rio de Janeiro under Minister SCHENCK during the Administration of General TAYLOR, sues the Government for additional compensation for acting as Chargé d'Affaires during the absence of Mr. SCHENCK. The learned Solicitor opposed the claim, on the ground that the act of Congress made no provision for any such case. But it is clear that Mr. COX is entitled to extra pay, and, if I remember right, Mr. SCHENCK received from last Congress an appropriation for extra services in making a treaty during its very absence, and there is no reason why his Secretary of Legation should not also receive it.

The Court of Claims is getting to be but a poor resort for justice, and claimants are finding out that it is quite a waste of both time and money to go before them at once.

The contracts for the water works of this city, for which a million of dollars were appropriated at the last session, have not yet been determined upon by the President and Secretary of War. There are a host of contractors for the work, and no little excitement and anxiety prevails among them. The first thing that a man from your City does, on his arrival here, is to sigh for the Croton! UNO.

My Institute is strictly private. Situated at the corner of 13th-st. and 5th-av., well-known as the mansion of the late Charles Henry Hall, Esq. LOST VOICE RECOVERED!—NEW-BEDFORD, August 10.—Mr. S. W. FOWLE—Having seen many certificates published in relation to DR WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, I take this opportunity of offering a word in its favor, which you are also at liberty to publish. A few months since my wife's lungs became so much affected by a sudden cold, that she lost her voice, and suffered severely from pains in the breast. Her situation caused her friends much alarm. Having heard your balsam strongly recommended by those who had used it, I purchased a bottle of your agent in this place. She took it according to directions, and it produced a wonderful effect. Before using one bottle, she had completely recovered her voice, the pains subsided and her health was soon fully restored.

Yours truly, (Signed) HENRY G. BRIGHTMAN.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Street-Cleaning—Pay of the Contractors.

The City Inspector, who holds the reins that the Legislature took from the hands of Mr. ENGINE, has among the duties thrown upon him that of paying off the contractors for cleaning the streets. To-day is the first pay-day under this new order. A number of the contractors sent in their bills yesterday, and the remainder will doubtless come up to-day to-day. The whole amount called for to be paid is $6,880. Of this amount, Mr. MORTON says that he shall not pay to day a single dollar, as he has not yet looked through the district of each contractor to see how the work is done. The contractors are seven in number. Mr. J. W. REYNOLDS has the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, Ninth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Seventeenth, Twentieth and Twenty-second Wards; PETER MORRIS the Seventh and Eleventh Wards; WM. DYKE, Tenth Ward; JOHN REYNOLDS, Thirteenth Ward; J. W. BUSH, Sixteenth Ward; CHRISTOPHER HAYES, Eighteenth Ward; and JOHN EAGAN, Nineteenth and Twenty-first Wards.

CURING THE PEOPLE.

Everybody now acknowledges the advantages of pure Iodine in water, as a substitute for cod-liver oil. It is the only substitute, because iodine is the only thing contained in cod-liver oil that effects a cure in cases of consumption. But, besides this, the wonderful properties of Iodine when dissolved in pure water are past all belief. It is a specific remedy for rheumatism, relieves the pains, and removes the morbid cause promptly and effectively. For dropsy, for scrofula, for piles and bilious complaints, it has no equal as a cure. It purifies the blood, stimulates the liver, gives new vitality to the heart, absorbs the tubercles on the lungs, and produces the most extraordinary health. Ask those, if you doubt, who have taken DR ANDERS' Liquid Iodine or pure Iodine Water. Sold at $1 a bottle, by ANDERS & FOSDICK, No. 3 Second Avenue and No. 562 Broadway; C. H. RUSS, No. 702 Broadway; Mrs. HAYES, Brooklyn, and all druggists.

TUESDAY, May 22—P. M.

There is a very quiet Money Market to-day. The large Banks are taking some outside paper, 60 days, at 7 ₰ cent., besides discounting freely for their regular customers. The private mail by the Niagara is especially encouraging in regard to the movement of Gold and Silver in England. The Continental demand for the former has fallen off, and the shipments of the latter to the East very much reduced, and a better state of things in the London Market is early looked for. Such is the purport of several banking letters received in the mail this morning; confirmed by the views of a leading merchant-banker of this City who returned in the Niagara. The circular and newspaper advices also show that the Funds left off firm, even after the announcement that the English Bank had curtailed the usual facilities to the Brokers. The hostility to the Russian Railway Loan in London continued. The Times is particularly hostile to its success through the aid of English capital. Messrs. BARING are the London representatives of the project, and Messrs. PEREIRE and HOTTINGUER in Paris. The rival money interest, we infer, is the firm of ROTHSCHILDS. They have no love for BARING and Heirs, and less for PEREIRE and his Credit Mobilier.

The Stock Market opened strong in the forenoon, and a very large business was done in most of the Railroads, and at a further advance in prices. Michigan Southern went to 62¼ ₰ cent. ex privilege, New-York and Erie 38¾, and Toledo to 66@66¼. The list, however, left off weak after the early orders were supplied and some forced sales of Erie being made in the Street between the Boards, the afternoon session was quite excited on the Bear tack again, and some few of the sales were made at a difference of 2@2¼ ₰ cent. from the morning prices. The sudden change, whether by preconcert or impromptu, appeared to result from one or two Brokers competing with each other for the lowest sales in Erie, and this in turn encouraged the disconcerted Shorts of the forenoon in Michigan Southern to return to the attack. The general market, however, finally reacted, and closed steady at an improvement on Thursday's sales. One of the Street reasons for the fall in Erie was, according to rumor, that the partner of the Treasurer of the Company, who happens to be a Broker on the Stock Exchange, was a seller at 38@38¼ ₰ cent.; but we presume the Treasurer himself, even if in the City, was quite as ignorant of being a party to the highest sales of the day, as his partner was guiltless of selling at the lowest. At the same time, we are disposed to agree with our cotemporary of the United States Economist, that much damage (possibly unintentional) is done to the credit of certain Companies, the Erie prominent among the number, by the immediate connection of their Treasurers with the Stock Exchange. The following are the prominent fluctuations of the day on an aggregate of sales of 25,000 shares:

New-York and Erie	38@38¼@37@36@36¼
Michigan Southern	60½@61½@61½@62¼
New York Central	86¼@86¾@85¾
Cleveland and Toledo	65¾@66@66¼@65¾
Reading	79¼@79¾@79¼@79¾

The shares of the Harlem Company have fallen back to 12½ ₰ cent. The guaranteed Stock of the Michigan Southern advanced to 91@92 ₰ cent.

The Purser's mail by the Niagara failed to reach us in season for this morning's paper. We now copy the London Circular of Messrs. BARING, and make the following financial extracts from other authorities. Messrs BARING add to their general market report the advice that—

"The stringency in our Money market, and the great consequent value of Money for temporary purposes, are complete obstacles to investment in American Stocks at present, but some business has been done in Railway Shares and Bonds to a trifling extent. United States Bonds and Stocks can be sold at 106¼. We should quote Massachusetts 5's Sterling Bonds at 99@100; Maryland at 89¾@91¾; Pennsylvania at 74¼@76, and Bonds at 79¼@81. Pennsylvania Central Railroad, 1st Mortgage, at 88@89; ditto, 2d Mortgage, Sterling, sellers at 92. Michigan Central 1st at 91, sellers. Illinois Central 7's, 89@91; Fraelands, 106@108. New-York and Erie, 1862, 77@79. Canada 6's, 119@119½. New-Brunswick, 103. Nova Scotia, 103¾. Grand Trunk Shares, 61@65; Bonds, 6's, 80@80."

Messrs. ROBERT BENSON & Co., on the same subject remark:

"The transactions in American securities continue unimportant in amount. There have been sales of Michigan Central Railroad Bonds of 1860 and 1869, at 91, and Shares at 58; Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Sinking Fund Bonds, at 71 ex Coupon; New York and Erie 3d Mortgage, at 83—1875 Bonds at 83; New-York Central Shares at 83; Illinois Central 7 per cent. constructive Bonds at 90¼; Freelands at 106, and Shares at 28@27½@28 prem. There have been few transactions in State Stocks."

And Mr. E. F. SATTERTHWAITE reports:

There has not been much demand for American Securities in London during the past week.

We note, however, more inquiry for the Shares of the Illinois Central Railroad at previous rates, in order to secure the new issue of Shares at par. Pennsylvania Central Shares are also in demand, and we note small transactions in Illinois Central 6 per cent. Bonds, in Michigan Central 8 per cent. Bonds, and in Detroit and Milwaukee Bonds at our quotations.

From Liverpool, Messrs. BROWN, SHIPLEY & Co. write:

"There has been a better feeling towards Cotton during the past week, with an advance of ⅛d. ₰ lb in American descriptions. The late accounts of damage by frost to the growing crops, and the probability of only moderate supplies for the remainder of this season, acting on an unduly depressed market, are, we think, the main causes of the improvement. The business for the week ending last evening is estimated at 60,000 bales, speculators taking 7,000 and exporters 6,710 bales. To day the sales are 8,000 bales, the market closing firmly, but with less animation, at the following quotations: Fair Orleans, 8¾d.; Fair Mobiles, 8d.; Fair Uplands, 7¾d. ₰ lb; Middling Orleans, 7¾d.; Middling Mobiles, 7 11-16d.; Middling Uplands, 7 9-16d. Total stock in this port 592,000 bales; American 530,000 bales. Total sales this last year, 750,000 bales; American, 381,000 bales.

There has been rather more doing in Manchester, with a firmer market for Goods and Yarns, but without change in prices.

Mr. Phelps and the Delaware and Lackawanna Company.

From the Evening Post.

Soon after the report of the Investigating Committee of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company was presented to the stockholders, we stated in our columns that the ex-President claimed that great injustice had been done to him in the report, and that he should lay the facts, which were submitted to the Committee, before the stockholders, that they might each judge for themselves of the merits of the controversy. Mr. PHELPS' statement is now published, and we presume that all parties interested will examine and exercise their own judgment upon the merits of the question.

American Credit—A German View.

Translated From the New-Yorker Handels Zeitung

In contrast with a short review of commercial affairs here, in our issue of the 13th inst., the latest German newspapers contain letters from New-York the contents of which are calculated to give a terrible fright to foreign capitalists who have made permanent investments in America, or to merchants who have business connections with the United States. Of course there are many speculations among us as to the origin of these letters, and they are attributed to malicious motives; we, however, believe ourselves to be better informed, and merely see in them a proof of the ignorance and circumscribed views of their authors.

Who writes the New York correspondence? With few exceptions, literary vagabonds who pursue their studies in political economy in lager-bier cellars, and, excluded from every decent circle, entirely lack all information. Such men write about commerce and the finances. Their learning is just sufficient to translate the daily poisonous exhalations of the Herald, and we can only pity the editors who pay for such correspondence, and the readers to whom this poisonous food is presented as healthy nourishment.

To-day we shall content ourselves with the correction, so far as our time and space allow, of the gross errors which are contained in a correspondence of the National Zeitung (Berlin) of the 7th of April. We shall just so claim as blind belief in our statements, but give on contradictable proofs, i. e., figures.

"Since the commencement of this year," it says, "a regular deluge of European goods has poured into our port."

The Import of European manufactured goods for the first four months of 1857 amounted to $37,663,412, in contrast with $37,068,110 during the same period of 1856; if we take into consideration the increase in the price of goods during the last year, this year's Imports shown a decrease. Two clouds, pregnant with deluge which according to Mr. H. R must follow this "deluge," will therefore not cause a universal crash. Again:

"True the importers drag more goods into the country in a quarter than the export of the whole year no comes to."

It is well known that New York Imports almost the whole of the manufactured goods required by the Union. In 1856 the importation was larger than ever before, and reached the immense sum of $33,562,893. The export of products, on the other hand, is mostly from the Southern ports, and in the year 1856 amounted to $271,219 423.

Again: "We must most certainly be prepared for a bad harvest after having had a good one in 1855 and a middling good one in 1856."

What in all the world authorizes the correspondent of the National Zeitung to come to this conclusion? At any rate we advise him to look over the Western newspapers, which present good auspices for the approaching harvest.

Such results lie beyond the reach of human control, and we do not miscalculate the great misfortune which a universal bad harvest would bring upon us. For the space of several years, commerce and manufactures would suffer incalculably from such an unhappy event, but still, a few more fortunate years would heal the wounds. A universal bad harvest, however, is hardly to be feared with the great extent of this country, and its constantly increasing power of production. If the fields of the West bear no fruit, the products of the South will protect us from famine, and vice versa.

Again: "When heretofore the year's reckoning with Europe showed a balance of fifty or sixty millions against us, we very simply sent over bonds, shares, &c., to that amount."

In the little pamphlet, The Commerce of New-York in 1856, a balance is shown which does not exactly tally with the figures of Mr. H. R. The total imports of the Union amounted to $314,679,943
The total exports 326,964,908

Accordingly, a balance in favor of the United States of $12,324,965

But, if Mr. H. R. understands so well how to satisfy balances of fifty or sixty millions by means of bonds, shares, &c., we are able to procure him a much more profitable situation than that of newspaper correspondent. How much the good advice is worth which Mr. H. R gives European exporters, they themselves may estimate. They can, however, implicitly believe him, that he is neither a Bull nor a Bear, for neither of these would write so great nonsense. If we wished to take the thankless trouble to instruct Mr. H. R., we would first of all have to tell him that, as the youngest office-clerk knows, since two years the sale of American securities to Europe has ceased. Without entering into a longer discussion in favor of the Union, we would merely say—Would any other country, from which, after five years' most liberal support with capital and credit, both are suddenly withdrawn, after the greatest unfavorable taxings have been called into life with these foreign means—would any other country in the world have sustained itself so well as the United States have done?

But it seems to us as if there were also other motives at work in Germany to spread the most incorrect views in regard to the Union.

The Lumbug which since some years has taken possession of the once solid Germany, threatens a dreadful catastrophe; every means to delay the crisis is welcome, cut, acting after the principle of Louis Philippe, they endeavor to ascertain whether from the sore spots of the distant past, America is more preferable, as, by throwing capital upon it, its finances, their forced sale is encouraged, and new capital for banking operations is put in course. It does not become us to put Germany on trial, but still we would ask: What good have the hundreds of millions of dollars which within the last few years have been applied to the encouragement of trade and industry," as yet really effected?

Notwithstanding the withdrawal of foreign capital, we have, during the last years, not only fulfilled our engagements, but with the most circumscribed means have increased our trade, our manufactures, and our wealth. Germany found no better investment for its money than a game of hazard. We would

THE POLICE DEPARTMENT.

BLOODSHED IN BROOKLYN.

Mr. Matsell Refuses to Surrender to Deputy-Superintendent Carpenter.

Appointments and Dismissals — The Target Companies, &c, &c.

The Metropolitan Police Commissioners are progressing step by step. They have fitted up their new quarters, at No. 88 White-street, for the purposes designed, with desks, iron railings, &c., &c. They have had the basement windows secured with iron bars, and all the entrances, front and rear, strongly protected, to prevent the entrance of burglars, from whose assaults there was believed to be some danger. They have fully completed their plan of organization and procedure in the discharge of their duties. They have divided themselves into the following Committees:

1. Finance—Messrs. Stranahan and Draper.
2. General Discipline—Messrs. Nye and Bowen.
3. Station-houses, Accoutrements, and Domestic Economy of Force—Messrs. Cholwell and Stranahan
4. Rules, Regulations and Bye-Laws—Messrs. Nyand Stranahan.
5. Applications and Removals—Messrs. Nye and Stranahan.
6. City and County Authorities and Ordinances.—Messrs. Cholwell and Stranahan.
7. Prison and Police Courts—Messrs. Cholwell and Draper.

They have had printed the necessary blanks. The one for Policemen's warrants is designed with taste, and is much larger than those in use by the old Board. It is as follows:

State of New York, ss. [No. —
BY THE COMMISSIONERS OF POLICE OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK.
[Coat of Arms of the State.]

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting: Know ye, that ——— ——— having been duly examined, and having presented to the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police the certificates required, under the act entitled "An act to establish a Metropolitan Police District, and to provide for the government thereof," passed April 15, 1857, and having duly subscribed, and taking the constitutional oath of office, as required by said act, we do, by virtue of the power conferred upon us by said act, hereby appoint the said ——— ——— to the office of Patrolman for the ——precinct of the Metropolitan Police District of the State of New-York.

Given under our hands ——day of ——, one thousand eight hundred and fifty——.

Then follow the names of the Commissioners, and that of the chief clerk, by whom the document is countersigned.

The new Commissioners, at their meeting on Saturday, had under consideration decision in reference to Messrs. Horrigan, Tuss, and Evans, of the Fifth Police District, who were tried on Friday and adjudged guilty of insubordination. Horrigan, acting as captain of the District by appointment of Mayor Wood, was suspended from duty and pay for thirty days, and Tuss and Evans were each suspended from pay and duty for ten days. None of these parties were present at this trial, but they were served with official notice of the proceedings had in reference to them.

The Commissioners will meet again, to-day, for further action.

Yesterday, as on Saturday, reports from four Wards were sent to Deputy Carpenter at his office in White-street, viz: For the Third, (Captain Hopkins,) Twelfth, (Captain Porter,) Fifteenth, (Captain Dilks,) Twenty-first, (Captain Speight.) Captain Squires reported in writing, on Saturday, to the same official, that he could not send returns from his Ward, inasmuch as jurisdiction of the Eleventh Ward Station-house had been taken from him by the old Board. It is noticeable, however, that yesterday Captain Porter, of the Twelfth Ward, sent a return to the office of Mr. Matsell also,—but it was a "blank", one, bearing only the name of the district, date, &c., and the Captain's signature. The one which he sent to Mr. Carpenter, however, had several arrests noted. The action of Captain Porter excited much remark.

The new Commissioners seem resolved to have Station-houses,—new or old. They have issued the following notice:

OFFICE OF COMMISSIONERS OF METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT, No. 88 WHITE STREET.
NEW-YORK, Saturday, May 23, 1857.

NOTICE.—The Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police will receive proposals at their office, No. 88 White-street, in the City of New-York, for the lease of a suitable tenement in each of the present police districts of the City of New York; said tenement to be of sufficient dimensions to accommodate the police force, for the lodging of vagrants and disorderly persons, and the temporary detention of persons arrested for offences, &c. By order of the BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. Carpenter, the new Deputy Superintendent, called upon Mr. Matsell, at his office, on Saturday morning, and, giving notice of his appointment, made a formal demand for the transfer of the books papers, &c., appertaining to his (Matsell's) office. The request, of course, was not complied with. Some conversation ensued. Mr. Carpenter made allusions to the provisions in the revised statutes applicable to the case. Mr. Matsell remarked, in reply:

"The Revised Statutes are a humbug. They can have no application to the case. A process of that nature would be mere boy's play, and not worth a farthing. A legislative act takes precedence of the Revised Statutes, and the new act says if the Common Council fail to provide the Commissioners with the apparatus of their office, they are to provide themselves. They look to the Legislature for their authority, and the means to exercise it.

"These books and papers are not mine, neither are they the property of the new Commissioners; they belong to the City and County of New-York. The Commissioners have no right to take them; the Legislature has no such right. This sheet of paper I hold in my hand is the property of the City and County of New-York.

"As for the Station-houses, the Commissioners do not pretend that they have a right to them, and I understand that they have already advertised for proposals for furnishing new station-houses.

"I have not had any process served upon me under the Revised Statutes, and shall not have any; the Commissioners know better than to do it; they know that it would not be worth a penny. If the new act abolishes this office, and creates a new one, it is nonsense to demand the papers of an office which no longer exists. It is like burning a paper and then demanding it."

The "contumacy" of Mr. Matsell will now be legally investigated and he positively decided by the courts.

The old Commissioners—Mayor Wood and Judge Russell—do not much an inch. They keep well "posted" upon Station-house affairs in the various Wards, and the moment a member of the Department is reported as having betrayed "insubordination" in act or word, he is promptly tried and dismissed. Three or four Policemen got walking tickets in this manner on Saturday—Theodore U. Story and Andrew Nesbit (Reserve Corps) of the Fifth Ward, Sergeant Johns (Reserve Corps) of the First Ward, and Lieut. T. C. Davis of the Tenth Ward. Neither of the accused appeared to answer, although summoned to do so. The proceedings in each case were similar. On Friday, Mr. Files received the following notice:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 22, 1857.

To Theodore W Story, Policeman, of the Fifth District:

SIR: You are hereby notified that the following complaint has been made against you by David L. Files, to wit:

Charge—Insubordination.

Specification—That said Story did, at about 11¾ o'clock A. M., May 22 inst., make the following declaration to Lieut. David L. Files, then in command of the Station-house, viz.: "I have given my adhesion to the new Commissioners. I do not recognize you as Lieutenant, neither do I recognize Horrigan as Captain, but only as Lieutenant," and that he did not recognize the old Commissioners, meaning the Mayor, Recorder and City Judge.

You will appear for trial before the Commissioners of Police, at the Mayor's office, on Saturday, the 23d of May inst., at 3 o'clock P. M., to answer said charge.
ALEX. MING,
Clerk of the Commissioners of Police.

Mr. Files next received on Saturday another document superscribed Mayor's Office, which read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF POLICE,
NEW YORK, May 23, 1857.

In the matter of complaint against Theodore U. Story, Policeman of the Fifth Police District:

Decision.—Defendant found guilty and dismissed from the Department. D. W. CLARKE, Clerk.

NEW YORK, May 23, 1857.

To THEODORE U. STORY, Policeman of the Fifth Police District:

SIR—I hereby certify the foregoing to be a correct transcript of an order and judgment by Hon. Fernando Wood, Mayor of the City of New York, on the 23d of May 1857, in the matter of complaint against you, made by Lieut. Files on the 23 l of May, 1857.
D. W. CLARKE, Clerk.

Similar documents were sent to Messrs. Davis, Johns and Nesbit, who had previously reported themselves for duty to Deputy Carpenter, who detailed Story and Nesbit for duty at the office of the Commissioners in White street.

Capt. Walling, who has charge of the Metropolitan Policemen on Staten Island appeared at the office in White-street, to report and receive further orders.

It was stated at the office in White street, on Saturday, that thirteen of the twenty two Captains had expressed themselves in favor of the new Commissioners, and that many of them would, on Monday, send their returns to Mr. Carpenter. The remainder awaited only a fitting moment to betray openly their "insubordination" to the Mayor.

The old Board have not yet taken any action in reference to the Third Ward Ward Police, two-thirds of whom, with their Captains and both Lieutenants, have declared for the Metropolitan Commission, but will do so, probably, at a special meeting to-day. The excitement in the Department continues very great, and leads to many warm discussions.

The Police Difficulties in Brooklyn—Bloodshed in a Station-house—A Captain of Police Compelled to Abdicate—The Sheriff with a Posse on Hand.

The course of Mayor Powell in Brooklyn, in ordering the Police not to obey Deputy Superintendent Folks, has already caused much difficulty, and on Saturday night last bloodshed.

On Saturday last Mr. Folks, as head of the Police in that city, sent orders to the different Districts, directing a certain number of men to be detailed on Tuesday next, (to-morrow,) to protect the children who will on that day participate in the annual parade of the Sabbath Schools.

This order was signed by the "Deputy Superintendent." In the Ninth District, Captain Miller read the order to his men, (ten in number,) when eight of them declared positively that they would obey no order coming from or through him under the new law. The expression used was, "Be jabers, an' we won't obey yez." The Captain and officer Adam Hanft attempted to reason with the men, but for logic they received blows, and both were driven from the Station-house. Captain Miller escaped serious injury by a precipitate flight in quest of the Deputy Superintendent of Police. Officer Hanft was not quite so fortunate. He was so badly beaten that blood ran from his eyes and nose, and he would undoubtedly have been killed by the mob but from the fact that, after they had got him into the street, he drew a pistol upon his assailants, who soon retreated rapidly.

The outrage was soon known by the Deputy Superintendant, who promptly ordered a posse of the First District Police, under command of Sergeant Smith, to the Ninth Ward Station house. The Sheriff dispatched Under-Sheriff Stryker, with several Deputies, intending to take possession, if the circumstances should warrant such a proceeding. The two parties named and Mayor Powell reached the Station-house about the same time. All was quiet then, and several officers there, who were engaged in the disturbance, did not "know anything at all about it." The Mayor declined to interfere. When asked if he did not intend to do something? he answered with a laugh and a "guess that it did not amount to much." At a late hour Saturday night the force detached to preserve the peace were sent home, and a sufficient guard (not the Mayor's) was left to protect the lives of such officers who are disposed to obey the State law.

Everything remained quiet during yesterday, but another outbreak is anticipated. It is threatened that many of the residents in that vicinity will participate. But it is supposed that the Deputy Superintendent has received sufficient instructions to enable him to quell any future disturbance.

To-day Captain Miller will make a formal complaint to the Police Commissioners, by whom the aggressors will undoubtedly be removed.

Officer Hanft, it is stated, would, if he dare, commence criminal proceedings against his assailants, but his life is in danger if he does, and this fact may deter him.

The character of the rebellious policemen and that of their confederates may be known from the fact that not more than one or two of them are qualified to hold office under the new law.

The order directing the Fourth District Police to turn out on Tuesday to protect the Sabbath School procession, was handed in personally by the Deputy Superintendent to Captain Powers, who flatly refused to obey it. The Deputy Superintendent then handed another order to Sergeant Waddy, directing that officer to take out the men who obey the law, (a majority in the District,) on the day of the procession.

As an incident of the times, it is stated that Mayor Powell, desiring an interview with Mr. Folk on Friday last, sent word that he wished to see the Chief of Police. Mr. Folk returned for answer that he knew of no such officer. The Mayor subsequently sent for the "Deputy Superintendent," and Mr. Folk promptly called at the Mayor's office.

It is stated also that the Mayor has given private instructions to those opposed to the law how to act in case of emergency, and that the disturbance at the Ninth District Station house, Saturday night, was the natural result of these instructions.

The Target Companies Movement.

The following General Order explains how much or rather how little importance should attach to the meeting of the Staffs of Generals Wilson and Creighton, where on Thursday and Friday night, arming in defence of Mayor Wood was resolved on. Much confusion has grown out of the mistaken opinion that Alderman Wm. Wilson, who figures in these meetings, is the Commander-in Chief of the Citizen Volunteers. The Alderman was Major General of the First Division, while the Commander-in-Chief is Henry Wilson, and he is not an Alderman.

HEAD-QUARTERS NEW-YORK CITIZEN VOLUNTEERS, May 23, 1857.

The Commander-in Chief of the Into parade of the New-York Citizen Volunteers having been published notices of meetings purporting to be held by the First and Second Divisions of that organization, for the purpose of offering the support of that body, in a military capacity, in the contest now pending between the municipal and State authorities, takes occasion to say:

That the New-York Citizen Volunteers were an organization having no other object than to combine the independent military companies of this City into one compact and disciplined corps for instruction and parade.

That no authority having been conferred upon the Commander-in-Chief and Staff, and the Generals of Division and their Staffs, but in connection with the parade of the 23d of April last, their authority and term of office were limited to that parade and its incidents.

That all necessary orders under the authority conferred upon him, will be issued as heretofore from Head quarters, by the Commander-in-Chief, through the regular channels of communication recognized in military bodies.

That the meetings purporting to have been held under the auspices of the Generals of the First and Second divisions of this body, were held without orders, consent or collusion emanating from Head quarters.

That there is no right or authority in any of the officers or members of this organization, to call assemblies thereof for political purposes, or to commit this body to any course of political action whatever.

That all political proceedings on the part of the members of the New York Citizen Volunteers, as such, are foreign to the character and purposes of their organization, and of no further force than as the expressions of the individual opinions of the persons taking part in such proceedings. By order of HENRI. WILSON, Commander in-Chief.
WM. H. DISBROW, Adjutant-General.

Republican Sentiment.

At a large meeting of the Republicans of the Sixteenth Ward, DAVID R. JAQUES in the Chair, on Friday evening, May 22, at Union Hall, the following resolutions, offered by Mr. G. G. BUTLER, were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Constitution of the State of New-York provides a mode for the expression of the will of the people, by the enactment of laws through a Legislature and an executive of their election. That it is alike the duty and the highest privilege of every citizen to honor and obey all laws properly passed. And it is no part of the power of the Judiciary to enact laws or prohibit the execution of those enacted.

Resolved, That while it is the right of every American citizen to contest the expediency and constitutionality of any and all laws, it is none the less his duty to conform to their requisitions until legally annulled, and any such course of resistance as that of FERNANDO WOOD and his supporters (civil and military) to the Metropolitan Police Bill, is treason to the State.

Resolved, That, as law-abiding citizens, we submit the adjudication of the laws recently passed by the Legislature in relation to this City, to the proper tribunal, though we have no doubt of either the expediency or constitutionality of those laws, and we do condemn the heartless and reckless conduct of the Mayor of this City, and those acting with him, in their resisting by force the enactments of the Legislature, and in manifesting a spirit of turbulent and fractious resistance to the law ill becoming a party which, under pretext of "Law and Order," insisted upon obedience to laws the most illegal and tyrannical in Kansas.

Resolved, That the City of New-York presents for the first time in the history of civilization the problem of governing, on purely Democratic principles, a metropolis of a million of inhabitants; that the task is rendered tenfold more difficult by the presence of an immense floating population, whose vote, legal and illegal, can control the City; that to the solution of this problem a well-organized police force is a matter of the first necessity, in which the people of the State, and not of the City alone, have the deepest interest, and therefore we deem it the duty of all good citizens to tender to the Metropolitan Police Commissioners, and we hereby pledge them, our undivided support in maintaining their rights under the act from which they derive their appointment.

A movement is said to be on foot for getting up a meeting of the Germans, to be held in some lager-bier saloon, in which Mayor Wood and the Common Council are to participate. Although the majority of the German population are undoubtedly against the new Police law, still they are law-abiding citizens, and we have received communications strongly protesting against the movement contemplated.

A Query for Democrats.

To the Editor of the Journal of Commerce.

The writer is a sterling conservative Democrat, has always disapproved of the "higher law" theory, when advocated by the Black Republican party; he thinks that the Metropolitan Police bill is an outrageous exercise of power by Black Republicans, unscrupulous and unjust towards the city, but if the Legislature have the power to make law, their enactments are law, however unjust, until otherwise decided by the competent authority. Mayor Wood resists the law because he thinks it will be decided unconstitutional some time in the future. The Journal of Commerce says it is a conservative paper, and takes pride in being considered so. The Journal of Commerce approves of the course of Mayor Wood. The question that the writer would ask, and which has no doubt occurred to hundreds of your conservative readers, is this: On what ground do you approve of the "higher law" practice of Mayor WOOD that will not apply to the higher law theory of the Black Republicans with equal force. Failing to secure any reply to the above inquiry, or even its insertion in the Journal of Commerce to which it is addressed, the writer asks its publication in the TIMES. L. B. C.

General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church.

THIRD DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The Synod convened at 9 o'clock, and the first half hour, as usual, was appropriated for devotional exercises.

The report from the Presbytery of Ohio was received. It set forth that although they thought the union of the first importance, they could not accept it on the proposed basis.

An address emanating from American Evangelical Christians was presented for signatures, to be sent to the Conference which meets in Berlin in September, 1857. The address asserts that the signers believe in the fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion which were agreed upon by the Conference held in London in 1846, and expresses a feeling of Christian love toward their German brethren.

Rev. R. D. HARPER read a long memorial from the Evangelical Christians of Xenia, Ohio, on the subject of "Ecclesiastical Union." It was signed with 247 names of different denominations, and evinced a strong Anti Slavery sentiment.

Gen. A. C. NEVIN, of Monticello, N. Y., moved to "put the paper on the table and keep it there." The Moderator said it would take that course.

Rev. J. B. SCOULLER, of Washington Presbytery, N. Y., called for the reading of the latter part of the report of the Committee on Missions. The report detailed the amounts to which the different Missions had been assisted for the past year, and assigned Missionaries to the several stations for the ensuing year.

The Committee of Accounts made their report and offered a resolution that whatever money may be yet due to the Synod from the estate of the late WM. H SMITH, of Henry County, Illinois, when the said estate shall be finally settled, should be placed in the hands of the Treasurer of General Synod, to be applied to the use of the Foreign Missions. The resolution was laid on the table.

On motion of Rev. Dr. MCCARROLL, of Newburgh, it was resolved that the address from Evangelical Christians to the Conference at Berlin be approved and recommended to the Synod for their signatures.

Rev. J. K. ANDREWS moved, as the special order for 3 o'clock, that the Synod go into conference on the state of Religion. The motion was laid on the table for the present.

The discussion on the proposed basis of union was then resumed.

Rev. DAVID CURRIE, of Western New-York, asserted that he was a friend of union, but not on the proposed basis. He thought the doctrines in the Testimony submitted to them fell far short of the language of their own unexceptionable Confession, and nothing was to be gained by adding to it, and he considered the explanations given in the Testimony were not clear at times. He reviewed at some length the articles to which he excepted, and gave his reasons for objecting to them. He knew that they had all been accustomed to regard the Larger Westminster Catechism as a very abstruse book, but this Testimony was a far darker book than that, and no man could read it to his edification—at least he would object to placing it in the hands of his children. He trusted that this matter would not now be hurried to an issue.

Rev. WM CONNOR, of Westmoreland Presbytery, could see nothing very objectionable in the testimony. He believed it would be a sin to defer longer the consummation of this long talked-of union, and would feel humiliated should he return to his flock and have to inform them that the Synod had rejected this proffered basis of union. It had been urged against this basis that it was inexpedient to adopt it, but he felt that they should learn their duty from the Scriptures, and not from questions of expediency, and all remote consequences should be left to God. He was sorry that the opinions conflicted with those of many venerable men in the Synod, but those opinions he had heretofore taught, and he should teach them in the future.

Rev. JOHN BRASH repudiated entirely the articles in the proposed basis with reference to Communion and to Saving Faith, and could never accept them. He was a British Abolitionist, and would subscribe to the article on Slaveholding. Slavery was a crying sin and shame, and he was prepared to unite with any church that would testify against it. He objected to the testimony on other points, also, and gave his views thereon.

Rev. MATTHEW MCKINSTRY, of the Presbytery of Westmoreland, thought that the question had been under consideration long enough. The mass of the people were in favor of the basis, and, if they had been present and heard the debate on it, they would be more favorable to it. The ministers alone had neglected its consummation. He was in favor of adopting the basis just as it stood, and wanted it voted on at once.

Rev. J. K. ANDREWS, of the Steubenville Presbytery, was fully persuaded that it was a great evil for the Synods to remain apart, and a greater evil for them to come together on this basis, which would create discension.

Rev. J. D. GIBSON was also opposed to the union on the proposed basis, and recommended that the matter be laid over for further consultation, when probably they could effect a union. He did not consider denominationalism schism, and thought that a Judah and an Ephraim might work in their own way for the glory of God.

The hour for adjournment having nearly arrived, it was proposed to extend the session for the further consideration of the subject; but after much discussion it was decided to adjourn to Monday morning at 9 o'clock.

Several of the clergy from abroad, who are here in attendance upon the Synod, occupied the pulpits of the Presbyterian Churches of the City yesterday.

New School General Assembly.

FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Thursday, May 21, 1857.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America (New School branch) met this morning, in the Second Presbyterian Church. Rev. JAMES ERLE, Pastor. The large and beautiful edifice in which the meeting was first appointed to be held, (the First Presbyterian Church,) was consumed by fire not long since, and now shows only its naked walls, which are still standing.

The Assembly convened at 11 o'clock A. M., and was opened, according to the usual custom, with a sermon, preached by the Moderator of the meeting for the previous year. The preacher on this occasion was Rev. LAURENS P. HICKOK, Vice President of Union College, Schenectady. The audience was not large, owing to the non-arrival of many of the "Commissioners" to the body till the afternoon train.

The theme of the discourse was to demonstrate the ultimate success of all God's arrangements in the world, but particularly the final triumph of the Church of God, when it shall become thoroughly organized and equipped. He argued that the Christian Church is God's institution, that all parts of this divine organization must work together according to its grand design, and that such harmonious cooperation will secure constant success. He showed that if the church should fail of such success, it would involve an impeachment of divine wisdom, that a failure here would subvert the faith of a moral universe, and that a proof of success is given in the manifest tendency to such united cooperation. The discourse was about an hour and a quarter in length, and was a very elaborate production.

At the conclusion of the church services of the morning the Assembly adjourned for dinner, and reassembled in the afternoon for the election of a "Moderator" and other necessary officers. The second session added to the attendance of the body the party who were delegates and others detained on the Erie Road by the accident at Cataraugus on Wednesday.

Rev. Dr. HICKOK called the meeting to order, and after the presentation of credentials from members, asked for nominations for the Moderatorship. Five names were successfully proposed, as follows: Rev. Dr R. W. PATTERSON, of Chicago; Rev. Dr. S. W. FISHER, of Cincinnati; Rev. Dr. SAMUEL N. BURCHARD, of New-York City; Rev. Dr. AIKEN, of Chicago; and Rev. A. DICKERSON, of Kentucky.

Dr. PATTERSON declined as soon as his name was mentioned. Dr. BURCHARD thought it was due to the West that it furnish the Moderator for this year, and as he came from the East, he felt impelled by a sense of courtesy to withdraw his name. Dr. AIKEN, of Chicago, thanked the assembly for the compliment of his nomination, but begged to decline the honor on account of the unfavorable state of his health. The two remaining candidates then were Dr. FISHER and Rev. A. DICKERSON, representing respectively the North and the South, although the election did not yield a "test vote," for a large minority of Southern members voted for the Northern candidate, who was elected by an overwhelming majority. The vote stood as follows: for Dr. FISHER, 108; for Mr. DICKERSON, 14.

The defeated candidate was the nominee of Mr. ISAAC W. K. HANDY, of Portsmouth, Va.

The assembly then proceeded to the election of two temporary Clerks. Five candidates were proposed as follows:—Rev. Messrs. SEELEY, of Albany; GRAY, of Kentucky; J. P. KENNALL, of New-York; JAMES SHAW, of Ohio; and GEORGE DUFFIELD, of Philadelphia. The result of the vote was the election of Messrs. DUFFIELD and GRAY.

The Committee of Arrangements reported that the sessions would be held from 9 A. M. to 12½ P. M., and from 3 to 5 P. M., and in the evening (when it should become necessary to hold an evening session,) from 7½ to an hour indefinite. The various Committees to be appointed by the Moderator, and usually selected on the first day of the sittings, will not be announced until to-morrow.

The usual representation of Southern members is expected, although all have not yet arrived. The head and front of this minority, however, is already here, in the person of Dr. FREDERICK A. ROSS, who has achieved the two-fold notoriety of having been for some time past the extreme defender of Slavery on the floor of the General Assembly, and of being the son of a colored woman, once a slave. He is a small and even diminutive man, white-haired, though not venerable in his appearance, with a Creole-like complexion and hair, and a perpetual good-humored smile on his face which occasionally expands into an out-and-out laugh. He is at present, perhaps, the "observed of all observers."

The Assembly has as yet transacted no important, but only some necessary, business. The topics of most public interest which are likely to come before it are, from present appearances, only two—first, the question of Slavery, particularly in its connection with the Assembly through its Southern Slaveholding Churches; and second, the question of Slavery as it affects the Assembly through the American Home Missionary Society, which recently refused hereafter to grant aid to Slaveholding Churches. It is most likely that these two questions, or this one question in its two fold aspect, will be "divided," and so discussed in order to avoid unnecessary complication in the debate. Preparations are already being made for the coming contest, which there seems to be out little desire on either side to avert; and even to-day's session has witnessed no little canvassing and counting of heads in the "lobbies," or more properly on the "side aisles."

[TELEGRAPHIC.]

SECOND DAY—AFTERNOON SESSION.

CLEVELAND, Saturday, May 23.

A report was read from a delegate to the Evangelical Consociation of Rhode Island, announcing the resolution of that Consociation to withdraw from all connection with the new school of the Presbyterian Church.

The report of the trustees of the Church Erection Fund was read.

A report from a delegate to the General Association at New-Hampshire was also read. It showed that the question of the separation of the New-Hampshire churches from the General Assembly had been discussed but postponed, and that there was a fair prospect of an adjustment of the difficulties arising out of the slavery and church extension questions.

A memorial from the Presbyterian Historical Society of Philadelphia was presented relative to a centennial commemoration of the reunion of the Synods of New-York and Philadelphia in 1758. Referred to a special committee. A similar memorial had been sent to the Old School Assembly now sitting at Lexington-Kentucky.

THIRD DAY.

Reports from various committees were read and accepted, but nothing of general interest was done. Adjourned to Monday.

The Remarks of "The Independent" Concerning the difficulty in the Church of the Puritans.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

An article on this subject in this week's Independent, is so half-jubilant and half lacrymose, as to suggest whether the organ does not blow a cracked pipes. The overture is lamentation and reproof—lamentation that the proceedings of the Monday evening meeting were reported by you and others, and that the writer (as he says) had not yet ascertained by whose approbation those doings were made public,—and reproof to the church because it did not "protest itself against the mere officiousness of reporters."

This article not having Dr. C.'s individual mark, could not come from him.

Was the author honest in his alleged reasons for lamentation or surprise? Was he ignorant of the ways and means by which publicity was secured, or of the person and persons who approbated making the doings public?

His second paragraph states the occasion of the meeting, and when, where, how and by whom it was called, giving in full the letter which Dr. CHEEVER has signed as the reason for that call and for publicly expressing from the pulpit the earnest request that all should be present, particularising females as well as males. Thus he shows freely what may be set down as publication and approbation No. 1.

Who is responsible for it? who voluntarily made it?

Down to that meeting, no one appears to have been a party to the matter excepting the signers of the letter and Dr. CHEEVER.

Your reasons have printed the letter, and if impressed as we are, must feel that it was a private communication, to a degree confidential, and, from its respectful tenor and importance, deserved a respectful private answer. Every fair mind will appreciate all that properly attaches to the violation of such confidence.

It does not appear that Dr. CHEEVER has answered it, but it does appear that after all the publicity which he gave from the pulpit of its existence, and by calling a meeting "to consider it," thus drawing a full house of men, women and others, he produced and then and there in person published the letter.

This is publication and approbation No. 2.

The Independent knew the publication was made as above, its own article shows it, and yet, as if to shift the responsibility upon innocent heads, says "whether the doings of that meeting were made public with the approbation of the church, or of any considerable part of its members, we have not yet ascertained."

But it had ascertained and so states, that a majority passed a resolution based upon that letter so made public, whereby (right or wrong?) they expressed "their determination that Dr. CHEEVER continue in his present position as Pastor."

"We shall not enter into the merits of the case until we have them upon better authority than loose and unauthorized newspaper reports." Magnanimous!

Did the author get what little he pretends to know from newspaper reports? He would have his readers believe so. Did he consider such reports loose and unauthorized? If so, why should he in anywise use them and become participes in such a wrong?—why violate the "covenant" to which he as a Congregationalist is a party?

"We are committed to no party in this matter," and "shall not enter into the merits of the case."

Let us see how this is proved by the next words, penned at the same time with this positive declaration of impartiality. Read him:

"Here was the fatal mistake of their sixteen brethren. They met in a private parlor, and assumed to settle the most vital interests of the Church, without discussion in the Church itself. They decided that the spiritual interests, both of the Pastor and people, required that the Pastor should tender his resignation; and, with this foregone conclusion, they called upon Dr. CHEEVER to resign an office which he holds by the voice of the Church of the Puritans; They shut out their brethren from their councils—they kept aloof from the Church as such, and took action imputed to dictate to the Pastor of the whole Church! They thus became a portion of the Church, and struck a blow at its very life."

Three are no trifling charges, coming from an Editor of a religious paper, who says he is "committed to no party," and will "not enter into the merits of the case." What would be thought of a man in any other calling who should thus demonstrate the truth or falsity of his assertion? Where is the proof to sustain these charges? There is nothing of it in the Independent, nor can we find it in the letter and other proceedings published.

Though not shown, yet if to have "met in a private parlor" be a "fatal mistake," there probably is no help for the signers. We think an ecclesiastical adjudication upon that and other questions of "personal liberty and freedom of speech," apparently involved in this affair, will be anxiously looked for by the public. But, Mr. Editor, it may baffle all your energy and enterprise to publish even a "loose and unauthorized" version.

May we not hope for it in time to be bound up with DRED SCOTT and Justice TANEY.

The Independent says, ex cathedra, "A church exists solely by virtue of its covenant."

In our simplicity we had supposed a church, and particularly every Congregational church, existed by virtue of something more sacred and stable than a human covenant, and that for every true church there was "a higher law."

The Independent is ambitious to be respected and obeyed as authority in such matters, and possibly will be in this instance.

What then must be the fate of the signers? They are adjudged by the Independent, without a hearing, to have committed a "fatal mistake."

Lexicographers say "fatal" means "causing death or destruction."

Is this the sentence that awaits them? But suppose in their extremity they appeal to some other tribunal, they are met by the same authority with the law that "a church entered solely by virtue of its covenant." They then may plead that the covenant and governing rules of every Congregational church are to be taken together as an entirety, as much so as the condition in a bond, and thus think to save themselves from "death or destruction." We outsiders would think this sufficient for their safety from a fearful a fate, but that those "loose and unauthorized newspaper reports" disclose a wondrous readiness to disregard and override those rules. Covenants and rules, unless fairly interpreted and honestly observed, are but a snare—a broken reed, excepting when pursued as instruments of wrong and oppression. We may not be sure therefore but that the "dictators" and "portion" which "met in a private parlor" will have to suffer some, and not be permitted to go "free from painful memories of the past," nor are we sure they do not merit it, though for reasons other than those given by the Independent.

It seems to us that, while the signers of the letter are in no degree responsible for its publication, they should rejoice that it has gone forth to their fellow citizens and the world. We had heard of it as being offensive, discourteous and dictatorial, but its perusal in your paper most agreeably relieved us from fears that they had forgotten the rules of decorum.

We do not care to enter into the Independent's difficulties with the Herald, New-York Observer, and "certain ministers of other churches in this City," presuming each abundantly able to protect his own rights.

But we must suggest our condemnation of the attempt by the aid of capitals and italics to give a forced construction to a quotation from the letter.

The letter, to every fair mind, is plain and direct, and no one disposed to do as he would be done by will or can distort or falsify its meaning. Let the matter rest.

Eldridge-street Jail.

An intimation that the readers of the DAILY TIMES are familiar with the County Jail in Eldridge-street might be deemed an equivocal compliment, and yet it is true, in so far as reading accounts of proceedings that have taken place in that building, and descriptions of noted individuals who have from time to time made it a temporary residence, can produce familiarity. But notwithstanding that, the popular idea of Eldridge-street Jail, its form and size, and peculiarities, is far from correct. The fact that it is the Jail of so populous a County as New-York, creates an impression in the minds of those who have not seen it, that it is large, and perhaps im

THE GREAT WEST.

Characteristics of the Developments in Progress at the West—Interesting Letter from Colonel Sibley.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Tuesday, May 12, 1857.

Since the last arrival of the Santa Fé and Salt Lake mails no news has reached us from those directions. The passage of emigrants into the Territories continues with increasing vigor; it now exceeds one thousand per day. We read your remarks of the cause and objects of "E. L. THAYER'S Virginia Emigrant Society" with great interest. It is the overflowing population of New-England going out for bread. With nt being biased by any prejudice for or against any peculiar geographical facts or tastes of our whole country, a candid view taken here in the centre of the basin of the Mississippi, suggests some philosophic criticisms, which I submit to you.

There is a radical misapprehension in the popular mind as to the true character of the "Great Plains of America," as complete as that which pervaded Europe respecting the Atlantic Ocean during the whole historic period prior to COLUMBUS These Plains are not deserts, but the opposite, and are the geodinal basis of the future empire of commerce and industry now erecting itself upon the North American continent. They are calcareous, and form the PASTORAL GARDEN of the world. Their position and area may be easily understood. The meridian line which terminates the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri and Iowa on the west, forms their eastern limit, and the Rocky Mountain crest their western limit. Between these limits they occupy a longitudinal parallelogram of less than one thousand miles in width, extending from the Texan to the Arctic coast.

There is no timber upon them, and single trees are scarce. They have a gentle slope from the western to the east, and abound in rivers. They are clad thick with nutritious grasses, and swarm with animal life. The soil is not sandious or sandy, but is a fine calcareous mould. They run smoothly out to the navigable rivers, the Missouri, Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and to the Texan coast. The mountain masses towards the Pacific form no serious barrier between them and that ocean. No portion of their whole sweep of surface is more than one thousand miles from the best navigation. The prospect is everywhere gently undulating and graceful, being bounded, as on the ocean, by the horizon. Storms are rare, except during the melting of the snows upon the crest of the Rocky Mountains. The climate is comparatively rainless; the rivers serve, like the Nile, to irrigate rather than drain the neighboring surface, and have few affluents. They all run from west to east, having beds shallow and broad, and the basins through which they flow are flat, long and narrow. The area of the "Great Plains" is equivalent to the surface of the twenty four States between the Mississippi and the Atlantic seas, but they are one homogeneous formation, smooth, uniform and continuous, without a single abrupt mountain, timbered space, desert or lake. From their ample dimensions and position they define themselves to be the pasture fields of the world. Upon them PASTORAL AGRICULTURE will become a separate grand department of national industry.

The pastoral characteristic, being novel to our people, needs a minute explanation. In traversing the continent from the Atlantic beach to the South Pass, the point of greatest altitude and remoteness from the sea, we cross successively the timbered region, the prairie region of soft soil and long annual grasses, and finally the Great Plains. The two first are irrigated by the rains coming from the sea and are arable. The last is rainless, of a compact soil, resisting the plow, and is therefore pastoral. The herbage is peculiarly adapted to the climate and the dryness of the soil and atmosphere, and is perennial. It is edible and nutritious throughout the year. This is the "gramma" or "buffalo grass." It covers the ground one inch in height, has the appearance of a delicate moss, and its leaf has the finaness and spiral texture of a negro's hair. During the melting of the snows in the immense mountain masses at the back of the Great Plains, the rivers swell like the Nile, and yield a copious evaporation in their long sinuous courses across the Plains: storm clouds gather on the summits, roll down the mountain flanks, and discharge themselves in vernal showers. During this temporary prevalence of moist atmosphere these delicate grasses grow, seed in the root, and are cured into hay upon the ground by the gradually returning drouth. It is this longitudinal belt of perennial pasture upon which the buffalo finds his winter food, dwelling upon it without regard to latitude, and here are the infinite herds of aboriginal cattle peculiar to North America—buffalo, wild horses, elk, antelope, white and black-tailed deer, mountain sheep, the grisly bear, wolves, the hare, badger, porcupine, and smaller animals innumerable. The aggregate number of this cattle, by calculation from sound data, exceeds one hundred million. Numerous fires ever sweep over the Great Plains; these are confined to the Prairie region.

The Great Plains also swarm with poultry—the turkey, the mountain cock, the prairie cock, the sand-hill crane, the curlew; water fowl of every variety, the swan, geese, brant, ducks; marmots, the armadillo, the picary, reptiles, the horned frog; birds of prey, eagles, vultures, the raven, and the small birds of game and song. The streams abound in fish. Dogs and demi wolves abound. The immense population of nomadic Indians, lately a million in number, have from immemorial antiquity, subsisted exclusively upon these aboriginal herds being unacquainted with any kind of agriculture or the habitual use of vegetable food or fruits. From this source the Indian draws exclusively his food, his lodge, his fuel, harness, clothing, bed, his ornaments, weapons and utensils. Here is his sole dependence from the beginning to the end of his existence. The innumerable carnivorous animals also subsist upon them. The buffalo alone have appeared to me as numerous as the American people and to inhabit as uniformly as large a space of country. The buffalo robe at once suggests his adaptability to a winter climate.

The Great Plains embrace a very ample proportion of arable soil for farms. The "bottoms" of the river are very broad and level, having only a few inches of elevation above the waters, which descend by a rapid and even current. They may be easily and cheaply saturated by all the various systems of artificial irrigation, azequieas, artesian wells, or flooding by machinery. Under this treatment the soils, being alluvial and calcareous, both from the sulphate and carbonate formations, return a prodigious yield, and are independent of the seasons. Every variety of grain, grass, vegetable, the grape and fruits, flax, hemp, cotton, and the flora, under a perpetual sun and irrigated at the root, attain extraordinary vigor, flavor and beauty.

The Great Plains abound in fuel, and the materials for dwellings and fencing. Bituminous coal is everywhere interstratified with the calcareous and saudstone formation; it is also abundant in the flanks of the monotains, and is everywhere conveniently accessible. The dung of the buffalo is scattered everywhere. The order of vegetable growth being reversed by the aridity of the atmosphere, what show above as the merest bushes, radiate themselves deep into the earth, and form below an immense arborescent growth. Fuel of wood is found by digging. Plaster and lime, limestone freestone, clay and sand, exist beneath almost every acre. The large and economical adobe brick hardened in the sun and without fire, supersedes other materials for walls and fences in this dry atmosphere, and, as in Syria and Egypt, resists decay for centuries. The dwellings thus constructed are most healthy, being impervious to heat, cold, damp and wind.

The climate of the Great Plains is favorable to health, longevity, intellectual and physical development, and stimulative of an exalted tone of social civilization and refinement. The American people and their ancestral European people having dwelt for many thousand years exclusively in countries of timber and within the region of the maritime atmosphere; where Winter annihilates all vegetation annually for half the year; where all animal food must be sustained, fed and fattened by tillage with the plow; where the essential necessities of existence, food, clothing, fuel and dwellings, are secured only by constant and intense manual toil; why, to this people, heretofore, the immense empire of pastoral agriculture, at the threshhold of which we have arrived, has been as completely a blank, as was the present condition of social development on the Atlantic Ocean and the American Continent to the ordinary thoughts of the antique Greeks and Romans! Hence this immense world of plains and mountains, occupying three-fifths of our continent, so novel to them and so exactly contradictory in every feature to the existing prejudices, routine and economy of society, is unanimously pronounced an uninhabitable desert. To any reversal of such a judgment, the unanimous public opinion, the rich and poor, the wise and ignorant, the famous and obscure, agree to oppose unanimously a dogmatic and universal deafness. To them, the delineations of travelers, elsewhere intelligent, are here tinged with lunacy; the science of geography is befogged; the sublime order of Creation no longer holds, and the supreme engineering of God is at fault and a chaos of blunders!

The PASTORAL REGION is longitudinal. The bulk of it is under the temperate zone, out of which it runs into the Arctic Zone on the north, and into the Tropical Zone on the south. The parallel Atlantic arable and commercial region flanks it on the east; that of the Pacific on the west. The Great Plains then at once separate and bind together these flanks, rounding out both the variety and compactness of arrangement to the elementary details of society, which enables a continent to govern itself with the same ease as a single city.

Assuming, then, that the advancing column of progress having reached and established itself in force all along the eastern front of the Great Plains, from Louisiana to Minnesota; having also jumped over and flanked them to occupy California and Oregon; assuming that this column is about to debouch upon them to the front and occupy them with the embodied impulse of our thirty millions of population, heretofore scattered upon the flanks but now converging into phalanx upon the centre: some reflections, legitimately made, may cheer the timid and confirm those who hesitate from old opinion and the prejudices of adverse education.

It is well established that six-tenths of the food of the human family is, or ought to be, animal food, the result of pastoral agriculture. The cattle of the world consume eight times the food per head, as compared with the human family. Meat, milk, butter, cheese, poultry, eggs, wool, leather, honey, are the productions of pastoral agriculture. Fish is the spontaneous production of the water. Nine-tenths of the labor of arable culture is expended to produce the grain and grasses that sustain the present supplies to the world of the above enumerated articles of the pastoral order. If, then, a country can be found where pastoral produce is spontaneously sustained by nature, as fish in the ocean, it is manifest that arable labor, being reduced to the production of bread food only, may condense itself to a very small per centage of its present volume, and the cultivated ground be greatly reduced in acres.

At present the pastoral culture of the American people results exclusively from the plow, and this is its amount:

Cattle of all kinds	18 378,907
Horses and mules	4 896 050
Sheep	21,732 220
Swine	30,334,213
Value	$655,883 658

It is probable that the aggregate aboriginal stock of the Great Plains still exceeds in amount the above table. It is all spontaneously supported by nature, as is the fish of the sea. Every kind of our domestic animals flourishes upon the Great Plains equally well with the wild ones. Three tame animals may be substituted for every wild one, and vast territories reoccupied, from which the wild stock has been exterminated by indiscriminate slaughter and the increase of the wolves.

The American people are about, then, to inaugurate a new and immense order of industrial production: PASTORAL AGRICULTURE.—Its fields will be the Great Plains intermediate between the oceans. Once commenced, it will develop very rapidly. We trace in their history the successive inauguration and systematic growth of several of these distinct orders: The tobacco culture, the rice culture, the cotton culture, the immense provision culture of cereals and meats, leather and wool, the gold culture, navigation external and internal, commerce external and internal, transportation by land and water, the hemp culture, the fisheries, manufactures.

Each of these has arisen as time has ripened the necessity for each, and noiselessly taken and filled its appropriate place in the general economy of our industrial empire.

This pastoral property transports itself on the hoof, and finds its food ready furnished by nature. In these elevated countries fresh meats become the preferable food for man, to the exclusion of bread, vegetables and salted articles. The atmosphere of the Great Plains is perpetually brilliant with sunshine, tonic, healthy and inspiring to the temper. It corresponds with and surpasses the historic climate of Syria and Arabia, from whence we inherit all that is ethereal and refined in our system of civilization, our religion, our sciences, our alphabet, our numerals, our written language, our articles of food, our learning and our system of social manners.

As the site for the great central city of the "Basin of the Mississippi" to arise prospectively upon the developments now maturing, this city has the start, the geographical position, and the existing elements with which any rival will contend in vain. It is the focal point where three developments, now near ripeness, will find their river port. 1. The pastoral development. 2. The gold, silver and salt production of the Sierra San Juan. 3. The continental railroad from the Pacific. These great fields of enterprise will all be recognized and understood by the popular mind within the coming six years, and will be under vigorous headway in ten. There must be a great city here, such as antiquity built at the head of the Mediterranean and named Jerusalem, Tyre, Alexandria and Constantinople; such as our own people name New-York, New-Orleans, San Francisco, St. Louis.

Respectfully, W. GILPIN.

Yearly Meeting of Friends.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The convocation of Friends, which has caused an unusual stir in the western end of the city during the past week, closed its labors on Friday evening, and the substantial Quaker yeomanry of this and the adjoining States who have made their annual sojourn among their city friends are, most of them, by this time at home on their farms. The meetings being confined to members of the Society, no reporters were present of course, but we learn that it was an occasion of unusual interest. The new meeting house, erected during the past year on a large lot extending from Race to Cherry, above Fifteenth, was occupied for the first time by this yearly meeting. It is a great improvement to that vicinity and it is one of the largest and most substantial houses of worship in the city. The separate apartments appropriated to the male and female branches of the meeting were both filled during most of the sittings, the members in attendance reached nearly 3,000 persons, and at the public meetings for worship a still larger number were present. We are informed that the proceedings were characterized throughout with great unity and good feeling, and the principles discussed, which chiefly involve the practice and testimonies of the Society, were adjusted satisfactorily to those concerned.

LITERARY GOSSIP FROM ABROAD.

Notwithstanding a political crisis in England, which invariably interferes with the publication of new and the sale of old books, a great many works of fiction, by popular authors, are in the press. The list opens with a posthumous novel of Currer Bell, to follow the Life of Charlotte Bronte, by Mrs. GASKELL. The Fortunes of Glencore, by Charles LEVER, which has been running through the Dublin University Magazine for some months, (and has been republished in LITTELL'S Living Age,) having been brought to a very melancholy ending, is announced for publication in the usual and costly three volume form. It has two original characters, Upton, a statesman, adroitly drawn, and Billy Trainor, an Irish doctor, without a diploma, but well read in medicine, surgery, the classics, and that mystery, the human heart.

Queen VICTORIA'S Prince ALBERT is about appearing as an author. He had already figured as an artist, having engraved some very passable etchings. He is President of the Society of Arts in London, and on the suggestion of Lord ASHBURTON, (son of the Special Ambassador on the Oregon question in 1842,) a subscription has been commenced for collecting and publishing the addresses, speeches and letters which the Prince has spoken or written in connection with that Society. There will be a library edition, at half-a-guinea, and a cheap edition, for "the People," at three pence each. The collection will have wide circulation, no doubt; but there is the slight drawback that Prince ALBERT is believed not to have composed his own speeches nor written his own letters and addresses. The generally-accepted opinion in London is that they are written by one of his gentlemen ushers, viz: Dr. LYON PLAYFAIR, the chemist. As the Prince is a foreigner, no one could be surprised at his distrusting his own powers of English composition.

The book called Austrian Dungeons in Italy, remarkably well translated for ROUTLEDGE'S low-priced library, excited such interest in England that FELICE ORSINI, its author, was invited to throw his experiences into the popular form of lecture. In his tour through England and Scotland he was repeatedly requested to publish an account of recent events in Italy, and is now preparing My Memoirs; The Life of Felice Orsini, written by himself. It will contain many secret State papers of importance, with a view of the state of parties in Italy, their strength, leaders, &c. It is to be published by subscription.

Noble authors are on the increase in England. Lord BROUGHAM'S Miscellanies have reached the ninth volume. Lord CAMPBELL'S concluding volume of Lives of the Chief Justices, has appeared, full of anecdote and personal recollections. Viscount DONNE lately published a cheap English grammar. The Duke of WELLINGTON'S Autobiography is said to be in the printers' hands. The Duke of NORFOLK is editing the Life of Philip Howard, Earl of Arundel, one of his ancestors. Lady CHATTERTON has a new work of fiction coming out, to be called Life and its Realities. The Vicountess FALKLAND, (a cousin of Queen VICTORIA, being one of the numerous daughters of WILLIAM IV., by Mrs. JORDAN, the actress,) is about publishing China, China, a narrative of Indian travel. Her husband was formerly Governor of Bombay, and she journeyed with him over that great Presidency, which (with Satterah included) contains over 7,000,000 of inhabitants, and upwards of 70,000 square miles.

Books of travels seem more popular in England just now, judging by the number published, than any other. The announcements of one day, by different London houses, include Dr. LIVINGSTON'S Missionary Journals and researches in South Africa; the Abbé HUC'S new work, Christianity in China, Tartary and Thibet; WILLIAM SPOTTISWOODE'S A Tarantasse Journey through Eastern Russia; and Egypt and the Great Suez Canal, a narrative of travels in Egypt, by M. BARTHELEMY ST. HILAIRE.

The two concluding volumes of the late THOMAS RAIKES' Journal are in the press. So with Sir JOHN HERSCHELL'S Essays from the Edinburgh and the Quarterly Reviews; Mr. GEORGE BORROW'S Romany Rye, a sequel to Lavengro; Miss SINCLAIR'S Russia after the War; and a Life of GEORGE STEPHENSON, the Father of Railway Traveling.

HERMANN MELVILL'S Confidence Man (republished by LONGMANS) has made a favorable impression. The Fairy Family is anonymous. Dr. W. C. PERRY will issue The Franks, From Their First Appearance in History to the Death of King Pepin, and Rev BADEN POWELL, Admiral SMITH and Mr. GRANT (who must not be taken or mistaken for JAMES GRANT, of Random Recollections notability,) are working together on a translation of ARAGO'S Lives of Distinguished Scientific Men. Of HORACE WALPOLE'S correspondence, sumptuously printed and prepared, and most carefully and accurately edited and annotated by PETER CUNNINGHAM, the second volume has appeared. It is a splendid library book, wondrously low priced.

It is currently reported in the political and literary circles of London that the newspapers—Morning Herald, Standard, and St. James' Chronicle—lately sold in bankruptcy by the assignees of Mr. BALDWIN, have been purchased by the Conservative party, (the Peelites control the Morning Chronicle,) and that a total change of writers would immediately be made. It is added, very positively, that Rev. THOMAS MOZLEY, of Guilford-street, who has written the most striking "leaders" in the Times during the last seven years, is to conduct the Morning Herald under the new proprietorship. The Earl of Derby, it is said, desires to have an organ of his own,—seeing that his Lieutenant, DISRAELI, has unlimited influence over that smart weekly, the Press. It is also reported that Dr. GIFFORD, editor of the St. James' Chronicle since 1819, and of the Standard since its establishment in 1827, is to retire from the latter journal. He has reached the ripe age of 57, and is supposed to have got past his work. But the joke is, that Rev. Dr. CROLY, five years his senior, is likely to succeed him. CROLY is a splendid writer of all work,—poetry, romance, history, biography, satire, comedy, tragedy, criticism and politics seem all one to his versatile ability.

WILLIAM LONGMAN, one of the great London publishing firm, has been lecturing to the employés of his own establishment and that of Messrs. SPOTTISWOODE, the printers, on the general appearance of Switzerland, through which he recently made a tour on foot, of which an interesting account was printed for private circulation. The lecture was wholly extemporaneous, and extremely graphic. It is not often in the old country, that publishers show themselves men of letters in this manner.

A London journal, called The Critic, asserts that Sir JOHN POTTER, who succeeded JOHN BRIGHT, as member for Manchester, actually called a meeting of capitalists in that city, after HOTHSFIELD WARDE "had published a well merited exposure of the iniquitous system in vogue in some of the Manchester warehouses, to consider what should be done towards putting down that periodical," and that Mr. ASPINALL TURNER, the other new member, actually originated the expression which CHARLES DICKENS introduced into Hard Times, that he would rather throw his mill property into the Atlantic, than give away one jot to the workmen on strike. Also, that Mr. TURNER told the workmen, during a Manchester strike, that if they did not take care, he and all the other capitalists would leave Lancashire and so ruin it. The population of Lancashire is about two and a-half millions, it must be remembered, and that of Liverpool and Manchester alone, is 800,000.

JOHN A. HERAUD, a voluminous writer in Fraser's Magazine, in its youthful days, has brought out a new edition of his epic poem, The Judgment of the Flood, long since forgotten. He has revised, and nearly wholly rewritten it. Originally, it appeared in company with The Descent into Hell, another epic, of which, when HERAUD looked JARROLD, "Have you seen my Descent into Hell?" the satirist emphatically answered "I wish I had!"

Miss DELIA BACON, an American writer, has published The Philosophy of Shakespeare Unfolded," with a preface by NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. The book, consisting of some 600 pages, of royal 8vo, is only part of what is on hand! The design of the work is to show that, not SHAKESPEARE, but Lord BACON, Sir WALTER RALEIGH, and other writers might have written what pass as the dramatic and other writings of him whom M. PONSARD, of the Academy of France, speaks of as "the divine William." Mr. HAWTHORNE'S Preface consists of nine pages, (four of which are quotations,) declaring that he thinks Miss BACON writes very well,—that it is a perilous thing for her to write against SHAKESPEARE,—and that he has not yet read the conclusion of her book, which will contain "historical proofs." In fact, Miss DELIA BACON seems to have drawn on Mr. HAWTHORNE'S good nature, for his preface shows that he really did not know what to say.

Mr. JOHN RUSKIN, whose Modern Painters announced TURNER to be the greatest artist in the world, graduated in the University of Oxford, some eighteen years ago, and is now spoken of as a suitable candidate for the vacant Professorship of Poetry. He does not present himself, but would take the dignity if conferred on him. However, opinion is not unanimous in his favor, for there has been raised the strong objection that Mr. RUSKIN, albeit an art-critic, with great power of expression, is not a poet. When he was twenty years old, he won the Newdegate prize for poetry at Oxford, (which passes for little,) and has since published only some indifferent verses, octo-syllabic measure, in an Annual. Mr. CLAUGHTON, the late Professor, is a clergyman, certainly not known as a poet. The salary is small, and the duty of lecturing on Poetry has pretty generally been shirked by each Professor. Even Dr. MILMAN, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, and author of "Fazio," and other dramatic poems, never lectured while he occupied the Poetry chair at Oxford.

Scientific Movements and Discoveries.

A HUGE BIRD.—Three fragments of the shoulder of an unknown bird was recently dug up in France. Placed and to end, they measured 23 inches—about a third larger than the shoulder of the albatros, which, of all known birds, has the largest humerus. Scientific men consider the specimen as belonging to a distinct genus, and give it the name of Pelagornis miocenus.

RUSSIAN EXPLORATIONS IN CENTRAL ASIA.—The geographical labors of the Russians in Upper Asia, have been extensive of late. Messrs. ROCHKOFF and PICHTCHOUVOFF have been exploring the Amuz; the academician BAER, with a view to the development of natural science, has been examining Lake Baikal, the valley of Manytch and the fisheries of the Caspian Sea; and lastly Messrs. ORLOFF and OOSSOLTZEFF have been exploring the great valleys of the Angra and Nertcha. The last named savant promises to furnish information relative to the southern part of Eastern Siberia, which will be the more valuable as, hitherto, the geographical knowledge of that part has been but vague.

A NEW VOLCANO.—M. SEMENOFF, a Russian traveler, has discovered a volcano in that part of Central Asia called Mantchoo Tartary. It exists in the district of Ujun-Holdongi, about 9½ miles north of the village of Tomolshin on the Nsmez, and some 15 miles from the town of Mergen. In January, 1721, an eruption occurred there, which lasted nine months; and again in May, 1722, another formidable eruption took place. This is the first account we have of these eruptions, and as the volcanoes in question are situated at a distance of over 600 miles from the sea, the hitherto received theory that the proximity of the sea is an essential condition for the existence of volcanoes, is thus proved to have been fallacious.

VELLUM PAPER.—A new method has been discovered of investing ordinary paper with many of the most useful properties of parchment. The effect is attained by merely drawing a piece of common unsized paper through a mixture of two parts of concentrated sulphuric acid with one part of water, and then immediately and thoroughly washing it in water. If the acid either exceeds or falls below the above-named strength, then the quality of the parchment paper is deteriorated. Paper thus prepared is so strong that a ring of it, ¾ inch in width, will sustain from 63 to 100 pounds. This paper, from its strength and durability is suitable for legal deeds, policies of insurance, &c.; having the appearance of vellum, it is likely to supercede the use of that article in book-binding; it will receive oil-colors, and will answer perfectly for maps and engravings.

SOMETHING NEW ABOUT THE MOON.—Professor HANSEN of Seeberg, a renowned astronomer, has recently completed a series of elaborate calculations, based on observations of the moon, which clear away some of the difficulties of the question as regards our satellite. His published results are for the most part abstruse and technical—appreciable only by astronomers; but among them occur certain matters of popular interest. He finds, for example, that the moon's centre of gravity is about 40 miles from the centre of its mass, a difference sufficiently great to make an effect. Hence, he argues, we ought to consider the two hemisphere of the moon, of which one is visible and the other is invisible for us, as essentially different with regard to their levels, their climates, and all that depends thereon. Seeing that the lines of level regulate themselves principally with reference to the centre of gravity, the hemisphere of the moon turned towards us, rises much more beyond the mean level than the opposite hemisphere; and although the former presents itself to us as a sterile region, void of atmosphere and of animal life, we cannot conclude that it is the same with respect to this latter. The mean should prevail round the edge as seen by us; and in truth we cannot say but that some traces of atmosphere do show themselves.

NEW BUILDING MATERIAL.—A species of concrete, in which ashes are a principal ingredient, has of late been advantageously introduced for building purposes in Paris. One manufacturing firm is reported to utilise most of their waste in the working up of this new material. So rapidly has this artificial stone been improved that slabs for floors are now made seven metres long by six metres wide, which, being laid all in one piece, no beams or vaulting are necessary underneath. The invention says: "I fabricate bétons agglomérés, as hard as the best stone, all the parts of a house—cellars, drains, paving flags, sinks, walls, floors, roofs, exterior ornaments, without using wood or brick. By this process the house, however large it may be, is a monolith; and this monolith equals, at least in solidity, masonry of hewn stone, and costs much less than the coarsest building in rubble."

ARCHÆOLOGICAL DISCOVERIES IN MESOPOTAMIA.—The Journal de Constantinople publishes a letter on certain archæological discoveries made by M. PLACE, the French Consul at Mosul. Of a peculiar interest are those passages in it which refer to the ruins of the edifice supposed to be the tower of Babel. The remains of this structure (of the eight stories of which two are left) afford at present a majestic sight, and are visible at a considerable distance. A square of 194 metres forms the base. The bricks of the pile are burnt from the purest clay, almost white, and covered all over with inscriptions. In the vicinity there is a spring of bitumen, flowing sometimes so abundantly that it forms a regular stream. Different jewels, intaglios, and a great number of coins, have been found among the ruins.

Books for the Blind.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

DEAR SIR: I read with much pleasure your remarks upon "Books for the Blind" in this morning's paper, and as it requires line upon line to awaken public sympathy upon any given subject, I hope you will find space for a few suggestions. To those who wish to feel the importance of books for the blind I would say, give some time to thinking of the immense amount of pleasure and profit which they who can see derive from books, and consider that this amount of pleasure and profit is doubled in the case of the blind man, because he is shut out by his affliction from all the delights of vision—instead of "the book of nature fair" he has a universal blank, and "wisdom at one entrance quite shut out." Any lover of books know that he cannot feel solitary while he has interesting reading, and what relief it would be to the blind man if he could forget his solitude in being able to hold converse with authors by reading!

If those who have the means to endow libraries and universities would consider these things, they would see an amount of blessings would flow from their beneficence which would extend as long as blindness should be one of the afflictions of humanity. Neither would the blessings be one-sided. Let the blind be well supplied with books, and from them may arise some of the best instructors in certain departments. There is no obstacle to their being preachers, orators, poets and historians, and where other qualities of the mind are fitted, their very affliction would aid them in being the closest and clearest thinkers. (The art of thinking is a knowledge yet in its infancy.)

The demand for books for the blind cannot be so large as to pay for the investment of a tradesman's capital and be sold at a low price. It is therefore necessary that funds should be supplied to our asylums for the blind, to print and distribute books for their use on the same benevolent plan as our Tract and Bible Societies. One of the most essential would be a book of instructions to those who can see, that those who have blind relatives may teach them how to read their own books.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, May 16, 1857.

WHAT IT COSTS SOMETIMES TO REPEAT "HEARSAY."—Last week, in Canandaigua, a case was brought before Judge STRONG for adjudication, which involved the question as to whether the retailing of scandal is a finable offence. It was an action for slander, brought against Mr. ENWIN A. NOAH, of East Bloomfield, by Miss SOPHIA PIXLEY, of the same town. It appeared that the defendant had circulated a report to the effect that Miss PIXLEY, while connected with a concert company known as the "Amphion," had been in the habit of occupying a bed with her brother. The only defence was that he qualified the statement by saying that he did not know, except by information received from sources which he named, whether it was true or not. The Jury rendered a verdict of $250 for the plaintiff.—Albany Argus.

Incidents of the Michigan Famine.

Correspondence of the Detroit Advertiser.

Lafayette township, composed of 11 and 12 north, 1 west, has forty families, who want to purchase provisions on a year's credit. They have not got enough food in town to last two weeks. Pine River, 12 north, 2 and 3 west, has ninety-five families—fourteen entirely destitute to-day. As many in the town north in Isabella County; some have a little money, but the provisions are not here to buy.

Sylvan township, 12 north, 4 west, has thirty one families. Many have been without bread for several days; (I will here state that I have not heard of a single private family that had a pound of pork or beef;) are living on leeks and maple-sugar. Nearly all will be able to pay within a year—very few have food, or the means of procuring it before next Fall.

Sumner has fifty families. A few are destitute of breadstuff, say four or five, and many have not enough to last one week. Those who would have had enough have divided with their neighbors, until they are out. There is not enough in town to last one week, nor potatoes enough for seed.

Arcada has seventy-eight families. One-eighth of them can get along; there is not enough to last the balance one week. Most of them have got from 40 to 150 acres of land, and some have wheat growing that looks well. Can get along for seed corn and potatoes, but must have 100 barrels of flour or its equivalent. They trade at Maple Rapids and Fish Creek.

Emerson has thirty families—twenty that must have provisions furnished them. Most of them are now living on roots and maple-sugar.

Hamilton has twelve families. Five of them may get along; the balance must be helped,—want seed corn and potatoes.

North Star has eighty families. Forty of them have not got one week's food on hand of any kind. It takes all the time of two-thirds of them to live, as they have to go a great way to work for their food, and carry it home on their backs.

We met as we were going up, an old man, coming down to Clinton county after food for his family. He stated that he had a wife and six children entirely destitute, that he had a good crop of wheat in the ground, 120 acres of land worth $5 per acre, and that he would sell 40 acres of it for $60, and take it all in provisions. There are many more similar cases. They hurried on to their lands unprepared, in consequence of the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, and the frost having cut off their last year's corn crop, they are left thus destitute.

I met men some on foot, some with ox-carts, one or two on horseback, all the afternoon, going out for provisions. Most of them look as if they had had short allowance. I called at one house: the lady came to the door and said she guessed there was more cry than want; that it was a great cry and little wool. Some people she said were always whining and making wry faces. If they would work more and whine less they would get on better. "Well," said I, "How are you in your family—have you plenty?" "We shall not starve," she replied; "we have had much hard luck this spring—lost our only cow, but our credit is good, and we bought another. We had some of the time to live on bread and molasses. We had a little meat, but we are well off to what some are further North, and we shall get through."

Mr. Cochrane's Speech in the Park, and the Police Question.

NEW-YORK, Monday, May 18, 1857.

MY DEAR SIR: I perceive that the language which I am reported to have used at the late meeting in the Park has been very generally quoted to a broader meaning than I intended, and I think than is warranted by the circumstances under which I was speaking. The subject of immediate consideration was the new Police bill. With a denial of its constitutionality was asserted the right of resisting it by means "peaceful, violent—armed or unarmed." Now this language was meant, and should be strictly limited to the circumstances which prompted it. A police force, well organized, of efficient vigilance, and of valid power, patrols our streets, and stands sentinel at our doors; private interests are protected, and the public peace is secure.

But the adherence of the City of New-York by a majority of 25 000 votes, to the principles of the Democratic Party, induces the representatives of other portions of the State, in a Republican Legislature, to attempt reprisals upon the rebellious Democracy of the City. Straightway, five Police Commissioners, created by an oppressive law, array themselves against present order and repose, and demand their unconditional surrender. To this demand should be returned a refusal, and if other means are resorted to for displacing the present police, they should be resisted by force adequate to that employed. Such a significance was intended for the language, "peaceful, violent—armed or unarmed;" and this, too, was applied to the present. Submission to the judgment of the court of last resort should doubtless be accorded when pronounced. If I mistake not, this is the course actually entered on. The result will, in my opinion, declare its propriety.

Had the opposition press really have supposed that the broader doctrine was meant, instead of denouncing it, they should have accepted it as an accession to their principles. Under such circumstances, it is, perhaps, due to my own position to explain, that however determined against an unconstitutional law, I am not yet of the Republican faith—that the judgments of the highest courts in the land may be subverted by the popular arm.

I am, very respectfully yours,

JOHN COCHRANE.

A Negro-Whipping Resulting in a White Man's Murder.

From the Savannah Republican.

Mr. J. WOOD, Proprietor of the Ogiethorpe House, at Brunswick, was deliberately murdered by CHARLES MOORE, Marshal of that town, Saturday night last. The circumstances are briefly as follows: MOORE whipped a negro belonging to Mr. WOOD the afternoon of that day, whereupon a slight altercation took place, the latter considering the boy as undeserving the punishment. The matter passed off, and was thought nothing of on WOOD'S part. About 9 o'clock that night WOOD, in company with several gentlemen, was sitting at a table in the front room of the hotel, when MOORE entered and remarked: "WOOD, we had a quarrel this evening, when I was unarmed; I am now prepared for you." WOOD immediately arose from the table, and remarked: "CHARLIE, we did have a slight difference, but I have thought nothing of it above, and regard the matter as forgotten." As soon as these words were spoken, MOORE drew a pistol and deliberately shot WOOD through the heart. The latter started from the room and reached the passage, when he fell and expired immediately. MOORE left the house and immediately disappeared. The Mayor was soon on the spot, and offered a reward of $1,000 for the arrest of the murderer, but up to the last accounts he had not been taken. We have learned these facts from a gentleman who was in the house when the dreadful affair occurred. Mr. WOOD was an excellent and most amiable man, and left a wife with several small children.

JUDGE VONDERSMITH, THE FORGER—A DISTRESSING CASE.—It was reported yesterday that Judge VONDERSMITH had been released on $7,000 bail, having been originally committed by Judge KANE, in default of $35,000. Upon inquiry we found the rumor untrue, though there are efforts being made by his friends to have the bail reduced, with a prospect of success. The Judge is still a prisoner in the Debtor's Apartment of Moyamensing. In connection with the present condition of this alleged criminal, we might here state that Mrs. VONDERSMITH died at Lancaster, on Sunday afternoon, after a painful and protracted illness. She had been very ill for some time previous to the arrest of her husband, and when on that occasion he bade her a final farewell, she was scarcely conscious of what was transpiring. She was generally in delicate health, and recent domestic troubles, no doubt, hastened her death. The death scene, which occurred under peculiarly distressing circumstances, was rendered still more painful by the dying wife and mother giving premature birth to a child a few moments before her dissolution. Her brother, Dr. JOHN LEONARD, had been committed to prison for thirty days, the day previous, for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, but was released through the intervention of friends, in time to see his sister die. Her husband and the father of her three children, all old enough to realize their situation, lying in prison in Philadelphia, charged with a high crime, and the cries of the children for parents both lost to them, altogether presented a scene of sorrow and distress rarely witnessed by human eye. The house in which the family resided is subject to a lien of $7,000, with three years' interest, which the Government holds as an indemnification of the forfeited bail, and the children are therefore left not only orphans but homeless. When the information of his wife's death was communicated to him yesterday, by a gentleman from Lancaster, a Mr. SHOEMER, he appeared deeply affected, and shed tears. During the whole of last night he constantly walked his cell, and was frequently heard to moan. The decease of Mrs. VONDERSMITH appears to have been a powerful blow upon his spirits. There are no less than fifteen bills of indictment pending against the Judge for fraud and forgery upon the United States Government, and if tried and convicted upon all, his term of imprisonment could be made to reach one hundred and fifty years!—Phil. Jour., May 19.

TEHUANTEPEC ROUTE.—We learn that the Directors of the Tehuantepec Transit route met with much success yesterday, in disposing of the bonds of the Company. The amount required is $100 000, and, when this is obtained, no more bonds will be issued. A large portion of this sum has already been taken, and those who desire to make investments will have but a few days left them.

To day a large sea steamer leaves this city for Manzillar, freighted with materials for building warehouses, bridges, &c. One of the contractors goes out in her. In a few days other vessels will leave with materials for the same destination, on one of which will go a competent engineer. The gentleman who will likely be selected to-day, to fill this important post, is well known to the people of this city and the State, and possesses all the qualifications requisite for such a position.

We are informed, too, that private advices from Washington give the Company every assurance that the contract for carrying the mail will be given them as soon as the road is in a condition to transport it with safety.

There is, therefore, every reason to believe that the route will soon become of the "first caste of the sea," through which, when considered, will realize much of the gorgeous land and the isles of the sea.—N. O. Delta, 13th.

NEWS BY THE MAILS.

A very interesting project was broached at a recent meeting of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce—the opening of a new steamer route to the Gulf of Mexico. EDWARD BATES explained the proposed measure. He had learned that a former owner of the Mississippi River, named the Baron Maochac, below Baton Rouge, had been navigable, with five feet of water in its channel, until the period of the siege of New Orleans, and had been used, both by the pirate LAFITTE and by the British naval commanders, for communicating with the interior of the country. Gen. JACKSON had rendered it impassable by sinking boats and other obstructions, and the deposits of the river soon entirely closed its channel. It was believed that it could be reopened to navigation, and if so, a most important and very beneficial change would result in St. Louis steam communication with the Gulf.

Prince Edward's Island is entirely composed of carboniferous sandstone, the surface generally level and well watered. The climate is milder than in the surrounding British colonies, and the soil fertile, being excellently adapted to wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, &c., which with lumber, fish, cattle, firewood, &c., are the principal articles of export. In 1851 the value of the exports of the Island amounted to $667,860, and the imports to $1,083 260. The shipping includes the value of vessels sold to Great Britain and Newfoundland, amounting to $251,536. The total value of articles imported from the United States in that year was $77,858, the whole of which except to the value of $3,200, were carried in British bottoms. The articles exported

The Bowen & McNamee Slander Suit.

SUPERIOR COURT—Special Term.—May 23.

DEFENDANT'S POINTS—MR. O'CONOR'S SPEECH—CHARGE TO THE JURY—VERDICT FOR THE PLAINTIFF FOR $4 500.

Richard G. Fowles vs. Henry C. Bowen.—Long before commencing proceedings on Saturday, the Court-room was densely crowded with spectators, and hundreds were obliged to leave, being unable to get within hearing distance.

Mr. Ewers first submitted the following points for the defendant:

DEFENDANT'S POINTS.

1. That the words are not actionable of themselves.

2. That they are not actionable as being spoken of the plaintiff in respect of his business or employment, and that the tendency of the general imputations to affect him in the business or employment in which he was engaged does not alter their actionable quality.

3. That, not being actionable of themselves, no recovery can be had, except for such special damage as has been alleged and has been proved as the natural and necessary consequence of the words spoken.

4. That the defendant is not responsible for the course specially adopted and pursued by the house of C. M. Wood, and to verify the truth of the suspicions of the plaintiff excited by the statements of fact by the defendant to Cole, on the subject of the personal effects taken by the plaintiff with him from New-York, but for any fault or injury therein to the plaintiff the person or persons acting in the same are alone responsible; and that, for the publicity given by the plaintiff himself to the matter the defendant is in no manner chargeable.

5. That the measure of damage is pecuniary, and to compensate the loss of employment, if any, occasioned to the plaintiff as a consequence of the words spoken; that no such loss of employment has been shown in connection with C. M. Wood's house, who discharged him on their independent judgment of their own interest, formed prior to the speaking of the words, and no proof has been made of subsequent efforts to obtain employment and failure to obtain it in fact, much less in consequence of the words spoken.

6. That the words spoken were a privileged communication, and no action can be sustained for the same, unless express malice be proved.

That neither the statement in writing in the name of the defendant's firm given to the plaintiff by some one of the firm, on his leaving their employment, nor any verbal statement to the same purport, made at or about the same time, is evidence of malice or ill-will at the time of giving the same, but to the contrary.

That the Jury cannot draw an inference of malice in the privileged communication from its disagreement in tenor from the previous statements, such disagreement being more naturally referable to the truth and good faith of the privileged communication, and to error or indulgence in the previous statements, than to malicious falsehood of the latter communication, and to deliberate and careful judgment in the former.

That if upon no new fact or no new ground of opinion intervening between the statements made upon the plaintiff's leaving the employment of defendant's firm and the privileged communication an inference of malice could be raised from their disagreeing tenor, that the new ground of consideration and suspicion concerning the plaintiff coming to defendant's knowledge, and affecting his judgment, not only justified but required the honest and candid statement by defendant to Cole of his then present opinions of the plaintiff, and the grounds of such then present opinion.

7. That the defendant's privileged communication to Cole having been expressly confined to Cole, the only consequence of injury to the plaintiff therefrom, would be in its effect upon the plaintiff's situation with C. M. Wood, and if the defendant is not prosecuted in that communication from responsibility for its injurious consequences, those consequences are limited to the effect on the plaintiff's relation with the firm of Wood, and the proof shows those relations were not at all affected.

7. That all the publicity following and injuries therefrom, if any, are chargeable upon the plaintiff himself.

8 That the whole proof shows a careful and considerate observation by the defendant of entire privacy in his communication, and of scrupulous statement of the grounds of his opinion, and an express exaction of secrecy from the party to whom the communication was made, and that no public or general slander or defamation of the plaintiff having been made, nothing in the case justifies (if by law allowable) the Jury in finding aggravated vindication of exemplary damages.

That in this action the damages can be only compensatory of the special loss and injury flowing naturally from the words spoken by the defendant, and whether malice be found or not by the Jury, the damages cannot be aggravated, vindictive or exemplary.

That it was incumbent upon the plaintiff, and in his power, to give measure of his pecuniary loss from having Wood's employ by showing the rate of his compensation here or elsewhere, and that no such proof having been given, in the absence the Jury can give only nominal damages.

That on the proofs as it stands, whatever was deemed by plaintiff adequate compensation for his loss of, or ill-treatment in, his place with Wood has been adjusted in his settlement with Wood or Hopkins.

Mr. O'Conor, for the plaintiff, then commenced summing up, as follows: Gentlemen of the Jury—This is a case which will be remembered by most of the present generation in our great metropolis, while they live. In the multitude of more interesting matters that are daily presenting themselves—more interesting in a physical point of view—whether this case will go down to posterity in the remembrance of the people, matters but little to us. It is a case, however, remarkable in all the circumstances surrounding it. It is remarkable in the matter of the defense—if there can be said to be any matter in it. It is told you that the action is one which the law does not favor, yet, in this particular, I do not agree with your informant. I do believe that the law does favor, and most eminently favor, the vindication of that which, of all possessions, is the most precious—reputation. Yes, there is one thing better, but that is something divine. The possession of an approving conscience is more valuable than reputation, but an approving conscience may be seen to be of the other world; reputation is a being of this world, altogether worldly, but of worldly things, of worldly treasures, I pronounce it the most estimable.

Where is the man in this Court that will dare rise and deny that assertion? What is more estimable? Is it the possession of marble palaces, or to be the master of an army of clerks and the owner of great wealth? Where is the man that would say that he would rather his neighbors spoke ill of him than give up the enjoyment of such honors? Where is the man so base—where is the man so shameless, that would not rise up and say he would give up life itself rather than have one half his neighbors call him a scoundrel, though the other half stood by him. What is life without reputation?

That away!

Man is but gilded loam or painted clay.

The only protection the law does give is this very action. Is it no crime to trample upon the reputation of any man? I may go through this community and slander every one of the Jury, and you have no remedy but in such an action as this. It is not criminal. He who steals your purse will be punished by the criminal law, but if he slanders you, you must go before twelve of your countrymen.

There is another remedy, which, if resorted to, would have sent the defendant before his Maker.

Mr. O'Conor spoke of the circumstances in which the parties were placed, and then referred to the comments which had been made in the City papers on the case. He continued: something has been said about articles in the newspapers, but I am not responsible for what they may choose to say. If a man will commit an act of outrage toward another, he must expect the reprobation of mankind, and to be amenable to Courts of Justice; but the party injured is not to be restrained from seeking justice of his adversary, because of any comments which may be made by the public Press or elsewhere.

Mr. O'Conor then proceeded to give the reasons for not introducing more evidence to sustain the charges made by his counsel in his opening. In reference to the alleged counterfeiting of the glove labels, and the other charges, he remarked that he had expected and intended to have proved the facts from the defendant's own witnesses, but as none were produced, of course they were unable to fulfill their promises. And why did the defendant produce no witnesses? Were there none to be had? Where is that marble palace—that pale sepulchre which stands in Broadway, with its army of clerks who were witnesses on the last trial? no one of them produced. Of course we cannot prove, except on cross-examination of the witnesses for the defence, the internal workings and acts of that establishment.

From this subject the counsel branched off to the law of slander which he expounded, and recited the facts applying to it at great length. He thought there was a great discrepancy in the statement made by Mr. Bowen, and the letter which his firm gave Mr. Fowles. The plaintiff went into the store an innocent young man, and the effect of a two-year unprecedented in that great establishment, was to turn him out, according to Mr. Bowen, "a notorious liar." A great author has once written, "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb." So did the common law give its protection to men according to the measure of the protection that they need. The millionaire needs no protection—but the poor clerk, the humble shopman and the trader, needs the protection of his reputation, which, as he had said in the outset, is the most valuable of all things. Slander is its greatest enemy. The breath of slander is poisonous. The poet says:

Slander is its breath
Out-venoms all the worms of Nile;
It rides upon the posting winds,
No man can see it—no man can feel it—no man can appreciate its operation or tell of its effects.

Mr. O'Conor concluded his remarks by discussing the merits of the case, and asking the Jury to render such a verdict as would be approved by their conscience and their country.

THE CHARGE.

After a short recess, his Honor proceeded with a very lengthy charge to the Jury, occupying an hour and fifty minutes in delivery. The following is its substance:

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: We have now reached that stage in the progress of this trial at which it becomes my duty to commit the case to your consideration for disposal, under instructions which should guide your deliberations, and in their appropriate application, control the conclusions which you will draw from the evidence laid before you. Counsel for the respective parties, though like ourselves, sworn ministers of the law, whose office it is to assist in the administration of justice, governed, as we believe, even in apparent conflict of duty, by a worthy purpose to secure justice, and no more than justice, between those whom they represent, may yet be excused, if, in the ardor with which they advocate the cause and promote the interests of their respective clients, they also share largely their feelings and exhibit somewhat of their prejudices. If, on their part, there be anything of exaggeration—any needless warmth in characterizing the cause or the conduct of the adverse party—any over estimate on the one hand, or undue depreciation of the testimony on the other, or any appeal to considerations which the evidence does not disclose, or which may not properly influence your deliberations, these may yet be imputed to a worthy zeal that seeks only what is right, though greatly biased by a natural and almost necessary sympathy with the prejudices and it may be the passions of their respective clients. We, gentlemen, are charged with no advocacy of the peculiar and partizan views of either plaintiff or defendant. We have no passions nor prejudices to indulge or gratify; and if there be any feeling or motive in our breasts that is not founded in a desire to render equal and exact justice between the parties, according to the laws under which we live, or that is not suggested by an impartial consideration and a just appreciation of the evidence in the cause before us, it is our duty, and, by the oaths we have taken honestly to discharge that duty, we are bound to dismiss it from our minds. Justice is to be awarded to the poor man or the friendless, or the stranger, if his rights have been violated or he has suffered wrong; not because he is poor or friendless, or a stranger, but because his rights are to be vindicated and his wrongs are to be redressed. And whoever is prosperous or wealthy, or high in rank or in social or other position if he be charged without just cause, is to be protected and defended; not because of his wealth or station, but justice and the law demand it. The observations, or, perhaps, I ought to say, allusions of counsel have made it seem to my mind fitting and proper that I should make these suggestions, and, governed by such views, you will, I feel assured, address yourselves to the consideration of the case before us; and I need hardly add that, in that consideration, you are not at liberty to take into view anything but the evidence, with the inferences which in your judgment are warranted by it, and the rules of law which I am bound to give for your guidance. Statements of counsel not sustained by proof—speculations resting in conjecture, suspicion or possible belief which is founded in anything other than what has been testified, or given in evidence on this trial have no place in the jury room, nor any part in the deliberations in which you are to engage. Confiding in your intelligent appreciation of the testimony, your impartial desire to give to it its just weight, and only its legitimate and proper influence, and relying on the fulness and accuracy of your memories refreshed as it has been, and assisted to proper conclusions by the observations of counsel, I shall not deem it necessary to recapitulate the details or comment with any minuteness upon its bearing on the issue between these parties, except so far as may be necessary to illustrate the law by which the case is governed, and enable you to make an intelligent application of it to the testimony. While the determination of the fact is your province, it is my necessary and especial duty to state the rules upon the application of which to those facts the rights of the parties depend—by which you are to be governed in considering the evidence, and in subordination to which you are to render your verdict; and if I add that those rules should be carefully observed and adhered to by you, I say only what your own good sense will assent to as a just discrimination between your responsibility and your duty and that of the Court, and as furnishing the only rule of safety, uniformity and certainty in the administration of justice. The issue between these parties consists in allegations; first, on the part of the plaintiff, stating, in substance, that the plaintiff had been in the employment of Bowen & and McNamee, in this City, as a clerk; that on the 1st day of January, 1852, he entered into the employment of the firm of George M. Wood, merchant, doing business in Cincinnatti, Ohio, and continued in their employment until discharged (as afterwards stated.) That, while in such latter employment, the present defendant spoke of the plaintiff to Mr. Cole, a member of the firm of George M. Wood, certain false, scandalous and defamatory words, (which have often been read in your hearing, and which in this stage of my instructions I need not repeat.) That the plaintiff, at the time of such speaking, was a dry goods clerk and salesman; that the words were spoken of and concerning him in his said occupation, and for the purpose of inducing the belief, and did induce a belief, that he had stolen personal property. (The allegation of the speaking of the words is reported as occurring on another date, and in the presence and hearing of divers persons; but this it is not necessary to notice, as no proof has been given that the words were spoken by the defendant more than once.) That the words were uttered by the defendant with the intent to injure and defame the plaintiff, and that by reason of such speaking the plaintiff is greatly prejudiced in his good name, fame, credit and reputation, and was suspected of being a dishonest man and a liar, and unworthy of confidence, and that he was in consequence discharged from the employment of the said firm of Geo. M. Wood as such clerk, and was then and there deprived of the gains and profits of the said employment, and in consequence thereof has since been unable to obtain any employment, and that he has sustained damage to the amount of $2,500. And secondly, on the part of the defendant, in which by way of answer to the plaintiff's statement, he sets out the period of the plaintiff's employment by Bowen & McNamee—denies that the plaintiff entered into the employment of the firm of Geo. M. Wood on the day alleged, or that he continued in such employment until discharged; denies the speaking of the words of and concerning the plaintiff on or about the days stated to Mr. Cole, or in the presence and hearing of any person; and (by amendment of the answer,) he denies that at the time of the alleged speaking of the words the plaintiff was by occupation a dry goods clerk and salesman, and that they were spoken of him in his occupation as such clerk and salesman, or for the purpose of inducing the belief, or that they did induce a belief that the plaintiff had stolen personal property. He denies that the alleged words were spoken with a view to injure or defame the plaintiff, or that he was prejudiced thereby in his name, credit or reputation, or suspected of being a dishonest man, or a liar, or unworthy of confidence, or that he was discharged in consequence, or deprived of the gains of such employment as clerk, or was injured or has sustained any damage. The answer further avers that all the conversation had by him with Jacob F. Cole was a privileged conversation, &c., and that the plaintiff, while in the employ of Bowen & McNamee, did become such a notorious liar that the said firm could place little or no confidence in him. The issue thus raised between the parties, and the evidence which is relied upon in support of the allegations of the plaintiff and defendant respectively, render it necessary that I should give you instructions adapted to the case in two aspects, to be separately considered by you. Although the speaking of the words of the person named (a partner or sharer in the profits of the firm of Geo. M. Wood) is put in issue by the answer, the speaking is testified to by the witness, and there being no contradiction, it is not on this trial contested by counsel, but for the purposes of the trial is to be deemed proved. And although there is an allegation in the answer that "the plaintiff while he was in the employ of Bowen & McNamee became such a notorious liar that the firm could place little or no confidence in him," the defendant has preferred to submit the case to you upon the plaintiff's evidence, without giving any testimony in support of this allegation. It seems, therefore, in the view material to say, in respect to the words, the truth of which is so alleged, that, if true, no action can be maintained for the speaking of them. If, then, the words charged were spoken by the defendant of the plaintiff, and they are actionable, (either by reason of their proper force and meaning, or the particular relation to the plaintiff in his business or calling, in which they were uttered, or by reason of the consequences which resulted from such speaking,) then the inquiry arises whether the defendant had lawful occasion for so speaking—by which I mean an occasion which, under the particular circumstances, the law recognizes as sufficient justification, and was the speaking of those words within the privilege which such occasion gives? The two distinct aspects of the case to which I refer, are suggested by the claim that, in this case, the communication made to Mr. Cole was made upon a proper and legal occasion, and was therefore in its nature a privileged communication. The other relates to the nature and effect of the words spoken if shown not to be privileged. Was the communication privileged? I advert to this aspect of the case before considering the other, because it will be most convenient to you (as it seems to me) to consider it first in the order of your deliberations; for if you should find that the communication was privileged, your deliberations may stop there. In that case the defendant is entitled to your verdict. If the circumstances under which the words were used to Mr. Cole were such that it became either the duty or the right of the defendant to inform Mr. Cole of his honest belief respecting the truthfulness, or honesty, or deness of the plaintiff for the business in which he was employed by his firm, then the communication was in its nature privileged and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, unless the evidence satisfies you that what the defendant said was not the expression of his honest belief upon the subject, but was prompted by malice. But if you find that he did not believe them when they were uttered (and no explanation is found showing that they were uttered in good faith) it will be presumed that they were spoken in malice. Confidential communications made to an employer, upon his application for information respecting the character, conduct and fitness of a servant, clerk or other employe, are in their nature privileged. So, also, if the relations existing between the party speaking and him to whom the communication is made, are such that good faith towards the latter requires the communication to be made, if true, the communication is in its nature privileged, although not solicited, but made voluntarily by the speaker; and this relation exists between two employers, when one has employed a clerk in reliance upon the recommendation of another; or even when such a recommendation has been given, and has been received by the party, and he has taken the clerk or servant into his employment. If, then, in this case, Bowen & McNamee gave a letter of introduction or recommendation, importing that Mr. Fowles was worthy of confidence, and that letter was exhibited to the house of Geo. M. Wood, and that firm employed the plaintiff, then, on ascertaining that fact, it became lawful for Mr. Bowen to communicate to that firm whatever in his good faith, he believed to be true, which affected the conduct or character of the plaintiff. Facts sufficient to constitute the relation which I have described between Mr. Bowen and the firm of George M. Wood, have been given in evidence, and I therefore charge that, under the circumstances proved, the communication made by this defendant to Mr. Cole was in its nature a privileged communication. And where this appears the plaintiff has not done enough to entitle him to recover when he has proved the speaking of these words. He has not proved enough when he has shown that the words spoken are not true, or even when their truth is not set up or proved by the defendant. He must go further, and satisfy the Jury they were spoken maliciously. Unless this is done the defendant stands protected by a rule which is founded in the reciprocal obligations due between man and man in the affairs of business as well as of domestic and commercial life. He is presumed to have spoken in good faith under a belief that what he says is true, and if so he is not liable to an action. The plaintiff is, therefore, required to go further, and show that the defendant did not speak the words in good faith, believing them to be true. I have been appropriately said of communications of this nature, they are not to be beset with actions of slander. When the relation exists which I have described, in which either the interests of the speaker require that his belief should be disclosed, or in which the duty to the person spoken to in fairness requires, by reason of the interest of such person to have the information, and he applies for it, or is placed in a position to be misled by a previous recommendation, interests of society and the requirements of business forbids that an honest belief should be withheld, or that any obstacle should be interposed to its frank, free and confidential expression. And this brings me to add, in conclusion, upon this aspect of the case, that it is for you to say upon the evidence whether the plaintiff has satisfied you that the communication here complained of was made in bad faith, without believing, at the time it was made, that it was true.

I have already suggested that I should not review or comment upon the evidence in detail. It will suffice to say that the evidence relied upon as showing that the words relied upon were maliciously spoken is found in the letter bearing the signature of the firm of Bowen & McNamee, given to the plaintiff after he left their employment, (under date of Dec. 15, 1851;) and the testimony of Mr. Carter to what was stated to him in answer to his inquiries, and the letter to John Shillett is further relied upon for the same purpose. It is urged that the tenor and meaning of those letters and that statement are so inconsistent with the truth of the words complained of, that the defendant did not believe the latter when he spoke them. Before determining the weight of the letters, you are to be satisfied by their evidence, so that you may find that the defendant knew their purport; not admitted because written by defendant's partner, but because I deemed it my duty to leave to you the evidence whether they were written with the knowledge or assent of defendant to their purport. I leave that question to your determination. In considering it you will take into view the language of the letter and of the statement to Mr. Carter, giving to them their natural and ordinary signification, they are neither of them evidence of malice or ill will at the time they were given, but indicate the contrary. But you should also take into view the evidence tending to show that before the conversation with Mr. Cole, their suspicions or doubts in regard to the honesty of the plaintiff were raised by hearing that he had left the City with six or eight heavy trunks; for, if the subsequently acquired information so influenced his judgment that he then became sensible of the imprudence and impropriety of having given a letter of recommendation, and doubted Mr. Carter's doing so; i. e. if for any reason, he had come to the honest belief that what he said was true, that belief not only justified him in making a true statement of his then belief, but the grounds of his opinion. And, upon the whole evidence bearing upon this question of malice, if you find that there was no bad faith on the part of Mr. Bowen in saying what he did to Mr. Cole, but that he believed what he said to be true; or, if you find that it is just as probable (notwithstanding the evidence relied on by the plaintiff) that Mr. Bowen spoke the words in good faith, believing them to be true, as that he did not, then, and in either case, it is your duty to find for the defendant. In that case you will have no occasion to recall what I have further to say in relation to the other aspect of this case. The words spoken are, then, to be deemed words in the privileged—to be treated as a privileged communication—and your deliberations will be terminated. But, if, on the other hand, the matter contained of is found by you not a privileged communication—and so far as relates to the mere question of the defendant's liability you will consider the subject as if the question of privilege as a full protection to the defendant were out of the case. By that I do not mean that even in such case the whole circumstances are not to be borne in mind should you come to consider what damages ought to be awarded to the plaintiff, but that those circumstances will not be regarded as furnishing to the defendant a protection entitling him to your verdict, if, upon the grounds remaining to be considered, he is liable. I proceed, then, to notice the other aspect of the case, which becomes material if the communication was not privileged. When not so protected the liability of the defendant depends upon two questions: first, whether the words used are actionable of themselves, that is, of such a character that an action will lie or be sustained by mere proof of the speaking of the words; and if not, then second, whether the words spoken injuriously affect the character of the plaintiff, and thereby produced special damage which the plaintiff has alleged in his complaint and proved on the trial. Words are actionable if they impute to the plaintiff a crime, or if they are spoken of the plaintiff in his particular trade, business or vocation, and import that his character and conduct in that trade business, or vocation are such as unfit him for or render him unworthy of employment therein. They must relate to his trade or business, and "touch" his character, tending to injure it in that particular; and if they are not spoken of the plaintiff in respect of his business, they are not actionable of themselves, although the tendency of the general imputation is to effect him in his business or employment. If words are used which are actionable, in other sense than indicated, a plaintiff is prima facie entitled to recover when he has satisfied a jury by competent evidence that they are spoken of him by the defendant. From the speaking of such words the law premises that damage has been sustained, and entitles a plaintiff to compensation, unless the defendant on his part overcomes the claim by establishing a defence. Assertions which are false and injuriously affect a plaintiff's character, though they do not fall within either of the classes stated, may become the ground of action and of a recovery by a plaintiff, if in consequence of the speaking the plaintiff sustains actual damage—and no alleges in his complaint such actual design and proves to the satisfaction of the jury the damages which he has so alleged—and in such case he is entitled to recover for such speaking no other nor greater damage than he has alleged and proved. But here, also, his right to recover is defeated by facts amounting to a defence. And as before such defense is complete—if those words spoken are true, or if the communication is privileged—the importance of attending carefully to the distinction between words which are actionable of themselves and those which become so only because of the effect which they produce by causing special damage, will appear in the further consideration of the question of damages. Some rules it is proper to give on this subject for your guidance. Words, in general, and when there are no circumstances attending the speaking indicative that they were not so used, are to be taken and understood by the Jury, and to be construed by the Court, according to their ordinary natural and and obvious meaning; and where there are surrounding circumstances or further conversation, these are to be taken into view—the words are to be construed as the person to whom they were used would naturally and obviously understand them, under the circumstances and in connection with the purpose with which they were spoken. If the words, either as they stand alone or in connection with all the surrounding or attending circumstances, are ambiguous and susceptible of various interpretations—in one of which they impute crime; in another of which they relate to the plaintiff's trade or business, and injure his character in that trade or business; in another of which they neither impute crime nor relate to and affect the plaintiff in his trade, but yet relate to and injuriously affect his general reputation—it is for the jury to find, with all the light that can be gathered from the evidence, how they were used, and were designed and calculated to be understood. The portion of the words here complained of, which calls the plaintiff a notorious liar, does not impute crime to him, and they are not, therefore, actionable on that ground. You have, then, to consider the residue, and say whether those words, in the sense in which they were designed and calculated to be understood, imputed a charge that the plaintiff had embezzled or stolen goods. If they did, when reasonably and fairly construed, with all the light that is given you, then they are actionable of themselves and upon that ground. If they were used, and were under all the attending circumstances, including the explanation given at the time, calculated to be understood as a mere expression of a suspicion that he had embezzled or stolen goods, or had obtained them in some other dishonest manner, then they are not actionable of themselves, nor unless the plaintiff has, in consequence of the expression of such suspicion, sustained the special damage which he has alleged. The other portion of the words complained of is—"Mr. Fowles is such a notorious liar that we could place little or no confidence in him." Were these words used and calculated to be understood as imputing to the plaintiff connect as clerk which, if true, was injurious to his character in that station to such an extent that he was not entitled to confidence in that character, then they are actionable, and (if not justified) the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages without any other proof. On the other hand, if they imputed to him the vice of lying, and notoriety as a liar, in the sense that there has been a general reputation, without any particular reference to his character or conduct as clerk, then the plaintiff can recover for this only such special damage as he has alleged and proved, and generally in relation to the whole communication and to each of its parts. If there is no imputation of crime, and if, as used, and obviously and naturally understood, with the aid of all the facts and explanations them before the minds of the parties, or given on the subject, it was not said in regard to his particular vocation and his conduct therein, in reference to his fitness or worthiness of the confidence necessary in that relation to his employer, it is not actionable of itself. If it was, then, if it imputed to him conduct which was tended to injure him in that vocation, it is actionable, and proof of special damage is not necessary. If the communication, then, was not privileged, and if the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon any of the grounds suggested, the remaining question is, what damages is he entitled to recover? The defendant is not responsible for any illegal acts of Mr. Hopkins or the house of G. M. Wood, nor for the particular mode adopted and pursued by them, to verify the truth of the suspicion excited by the defendant's statement in regard to his troubles. For them the plaintiff cannot recover compensation in this action. He has his redress against them if he has not obtained or done something to debar himself from sealing it. The defendant is not responsible for the publicity given to the matter by the defendant himself—that publicity was, so far as it was the plaintiff's own act, his own fault or imprudence, and for that or any injury resulting, therefore he cannot recover in this action; and if you find, under the instructions I have given, that the words complained of are not within the description of words actionable in themselves—neither imputing crime nor spoken in respect of the plaintiff's business or employment—then the plaintiff's recovery should be limited to the actual damage alleged in the complaint and proved on the trial. The only special damage alleged is, that he was, in consequence of the words spoken, discharged from the employ of the said firm of Geo. M. Wood, and was then, and has since been deprived of the gains and profits of the said employment, and has since been unable to obtain any employment. The loss to be compensated in such case is the pecuniary loss; but no witness testifies that he was discharged, and no proof is given or offered that he has been deprived of employment. If, therefore, you find that the words used are not actionable of themselves then the plaintiff has failed to prove the facts which alone makes the words actionable, and the defendants are entitled to a verdict. On the other hand, if the words are actionable of themselves, I have already said the plaintiff is only bound to prove that they were spoken of him by the defendant. The damages are peculiarly within your province to determine. It should be done with a single purpose to do what is just between the parties upon a deliberate and impartial consideration of all the circumstances proved before you. Compensation for the actual injury received is the first and main object to be attained, and damage on this ground is in this action to be judged of, where no specific damage is shown, by considering the ordinary and natural consequences of such imputations; and there you should stop, unless you find that the words were uttered by the plaintiff from actual malice, in bad faith, and knowing or believing that they were not true. If you so find you are not confined to a mere compensation, but in your sound discretion may add such further sum, by way of example, as is just, in view of the more aggravated character which the act then assumes. And where a defendant states in his answer that he will prove it true, but fails so to do, it is to be considered as an aggravation of the wrong. In judging of this branch of the subject, as upon the whole subject of good faith, consider the previous letters, (if written with his assent and knowledge of their purport); the statement to Carter; the views giving to them a limited construction, claimed by defendant; all the evidence which to your mind tends to prove that there was no ill will towards the young man in the defendant's mind; the fact that he imposed secrecy (which, though it does not justify, may tend to mitigate the wrong); the extent to which he explained the grounds of the opinion. But if, notwithstanding these and other considerations that have been urged upon you, you still find that the words were spoken in bad faith, with a malicious motive to injure when he did not believe what he said to be true—then, as before said, you are not confined to making the compensation to which the plaintiff would be entitled if no such malice and bad faith existed. Guided by the directions I have given—aided by the observations of the counsel for the respective parties, and moved by the single purpose to render justice, and only justice, between these parties, I trust and believe, gentlemen, that you will be able to agree upon a verdict which shall accomplish that end.

The Jury then left the room, and the counsel settled the exceptions which were to be taken to the charge. After an absence of about an hour, the Jury returned with a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing the damages at $4,500.

A stay of proceedings was granted, to enable the defendant to appeal. We understand that he will appeal on exceptions taken, and on the ground of a verdict contrary to evidence.

CRIME IN NEW-YORK.

The Negro Dorsay to be Hung—Gallagher, of Tammany Hall, slightly sentenced,—Arneson set at Liberty for Manslaughter.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before the City Judge.

The Court-room was crowded on Saturday to its utmost inch of space. The passages and stairways were crowded. The excitement which congregated the public, was the sentence of death on the negro Dorsay, for the Worth street murder, by the City Judge RUSSELL. Before the sentence was passed, Mr. Busteed, the Corporation Counsel, who was assigned by Judge RUSSELL to defend the prisoner, addressed the Court. He said:

The duty of determining the propriety of taking such cases as this up to a higher Court for the purpose of review, is one always of difficulty, and in this instance great delicacy and responsibility are superadded to the difficulty. After consulting with the learned public prosecuting officer of the county, and agreeing entirely with the views he has expressed to me as to the propriety of taking such a step on the prisoner's behalf, and after very considerable reflection given to the subject by myself, I have arrived at the conclusion not to ask for a review of this case by any higher Court. I am satisfied that the Jury was tried this case were, equally with the Court, impressed with the sense of the awful responsibilities which gathered around the discharge of the several duties assigned to us in the conduct of this case, and in the termination of its final proceedings. And although there may or may not have been legal merit in any exception taken upon the trial to any ruling or to any part of your Honor's charge, I am entirely satisfied that the deliberation and attention which it received from the Bench and from the Jury, and the entirely fair and honorable manner in which the prosecution, if it may be called one, was discharged by my learned friend the District Attorney, that no review of a merely technical objection ought to be made the ground-work for putting the county to the expense and the duty of another trial in a capital case, when so much deliberate and solemn attention has been already bestowed upon it. I have arrived at the conclusion that rather than take that step it will be my duty, as it is my intention, to apply to the Executive of the State for a commutation of the death penalty in this case to such imprisonment, either for life or for a term of years, as the highest executive officer of the State may see proper to name. I believe I am authorized in the supposition that in this application I will have the aid of the District Attorney, who has humanely and intelligently discharged the painful duty which belonged to him in the management of this prosecution. With this view I shall not further trespass upon the time and attention of the Court, but leave it to perform, what I am sure must be the saddest, as it is the most solemn, duty that can be assigned to any human being—that of passing a sentence which shall deprive another human being of his life.

Judge RUSSELL then passed sentence on DORSEY, who manifested the greatest indifference throughout the whole proceedings. The Judge said:

John Dorsay, you have been indicted, tried and convicted of the high crime of murder—you have had a fair and impartial trial, and have been ably defended by the counsel assigned to you by the Court. The verdict of the Jury was founded on evidence so strong as not to admit of a doubt of your guilt. You have forfeited your life to the violated laws of the country. Let me advise you to consider your situation, to review your past life, and to devote the short space of time that you have to live in endeavors to make your peace with God, whose mercy is equal to His justice, and to apply every moment of your remaining days to contrition and repentance. What remains for me is the most painful part of my duty; it is to pronounce that sentence which the law has ordained for a crime of this magnitude. The sentence of this Court is that you be taken back to the place from whence you came and there incarcerated, and on the seventeenth day of July next, you be hanged by the neck until dead. And may God have mercy on your soul.

Judge RUSSELL while pronouncing this sentence suppressed any indication of feeling. The negro politely bowed to him, went gaily from the court room, and said to the crowd which followed him to the Tombs, "Three cheers for the Kingdom of Heaven; I am going to God."

Peter Arneson, who pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the fourth degree, for shooting one of a gang of rowdies who attempted to enter his premises by force, was discharged by Judge RUSSELL, with those remarks:

"Affidavits have been placed before the Court showing not only your previous good character, but demonstrating that the circumstances in this case justified you in a measure in the course you pursued. No set of men or rowdies have the right to force an entrance into any citizen's house, no matter what kind of an establishment he may keep, without his consent; and if they do, the citizen has a right to repel them by force. In consequence of these facts being shown I shall suspend judgment."

Daniel Gallagher, convicted for assault and battery with intent to commit a rape on a girl 14 years of age, was sentenced by Judge RUSSELL to one year's imprisonment in the Penitentiary, and fined $100. Gallagher was a member of the Tammany Hall Nominating Committee, and took an active part in the election of Judge RUSSELL and Mayor Wood.

Robert Phillips for bigamy, was sentenced to two years in the State Prison.

Recorder SMITH sentenced Elijah Hunt, the wigmaker, of the Bowery, who caused the death of Mrs Lawson by abortion, to four years in the State Prison. And thus the May term closed.

MALPRACTICE ALLEGED OF A DENTIST.

Edward Corbet vs. E. & S. Preterr.—This action was brought to recover $500 for alleged malpractice in the pulling of the plaintiff's tooth. The tooth, which was a bicuspid, was pulled by an employe of the defendants' in January last. It was alleged on the part of the plaintiff, that in the operation his jaw-bone was broken, in consequence of which two of his molar teeth were loosened so much that he was forced to have them extracted afterwards; and that he was confined to his bed and suffered much pain for several weeks in consequence.

The plaintiff insisted that the bone was broken, and necrosis followed. The defendants said that the small pieces which the other side alleged were pieces of the jaw bone, were nothing but slivers of the alveolar.

Dr. Hart, a witness for plaintiff, testified that he had attended the plaintiff and was positive that his jaw bone had been fractured. Drs. Parker and Belcher, witnesses for defendants, testified to having examined the plaintiff and both had come to the conclusion that the bone was not broken; they said also there previous disease in the jaw-bone was often followed by effects similar to this case. The case was severely contested on Friday, and on Saturday morning the plaintiff abandoned the suit.

The Burdell Estate.

Before A. W. Bradford, Surrogate.

In the matter of the Estate of Dr. Burdell.—A motion was made Saturday morning on behalf of Dr. Burdell's relatives, to take out a commission to examine a witness in California, named Whitehead C. Hyde, upon an affidavit of Mr. Charles Edwards, which sets forth that Mr. Hyde was expected to prove that he had been for the past two years engaged to be married to Mrs. Cunningham, and that they had kept up a correspondence conformable to such a relation between them up to the 10th of December, 1856—a month and a half after the date of the alleged marriage. Mr. Edwards states that his information is derived from the friends and family of Mr. Hyde.

Mrs. Cunningham's counsel then put in Mrs. Burdell's and Mrs Hyde's affidavits.

Lucada Hyde, widow of Bernett Hyde, of No 9 Hicks-street, Brooklyn, aunt of Whitehead C. Hyde, swore that the had been absent from this State twenty-one years, and for the last eight years resided in California.

That deponent had known Mrs. Burdell, formerly Cunningham, for more than 22 years; that she knew when she was married to Mr. Cunningham, more than 19 years ago; and that from the time deponent was a small girl up to the 1st of February last, she never saw or heard anything against her character as a lady or a virtuous woman.

Mrs. Hyde also deposed that Mrs. Cunningham told her last May or June that she expected soon to be married to Dr. Burdell; that she never heard anything of her alleged engagements to W C Hyde from his family or him, with whom she was in constant correspondence.

Mrs. Burdell's affidavit was also introduced. She swears that the testimony for which a commission is sought is, as she is advised and believes, wholly immaterial. That she has not seen Mr. Hyde for more than twenty years. That at the time of the murder of Dr. Burdell she was under no contract or engagement to marry Mr. Hyde. That no engagement to him existed during her marriage to Dr. Burdell, and that since the 28th of October she has written him no letter, and but three or four prior to that time, and those upon business relative to the affairs of her former husband, George D. Cunningham.

These affidavits having been read, Messrs. Dean and Clinton opposed, and Messrs Tilden and Edwards supported the motion. The Surrogate rendered his decision, denying the motion, upon

NEW-YORK, MONDAY, MAY 25, 1857.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Union has an article on the Diplomatic appointments, in which applicants for those prominent berths are warned that nine out of ten must be disappointed, while all are cautioned to preserve patience, the time of the President being so much engrossed that he can scarcely do justice to half the demands that are made upon him.

The reports from the famine district in Northern Michigan continue to come in, painted in colors which are vivid and startling. Whole neighborhoods are suffering for lack of the necessaries of life, and provisions are transported by heads of families for many miles, the prices asked for which are met by notes payable a year hence, or the cost met by mortgages upon the property of the parties. The Relief Committees formed in Detroit and elsewhere are taking active measures to relieve the distress.

As anticipated, Mr. MATSELL refused, on Saturday, to surrender his office or anything appertaining thereto to Mr. CARPENTER, the Metropolitan Police Commissioners' Deputy Superintendent. Both Police Boards met Saturday. The new one suspended Messrs. HORRIGAN, (acting Captain,) FILES and EVANS from pay and duty, the former for thirty and the latter for ten days each,—each being adjudged guilty of insubordination. The old Board dismissed Lieut. DAVIS of the Tenth Ward, Sergeant JOHNS of the First Ward, and officers STORY and NESBIT of the Fifth Ward, for "insubordination," in avowing a preference for the new Commissioners

The difficulties in the Police Department culminated in Brooklyn, Saturday night, in an open outbreak in the Ninth District Station House. The Superintendent of Police issued an order which the Captain read to his men, but they refused to obey it. Some words followed which resulted in a fight. The Captain (Miller) and officer Hanft, who are in favor of the law, were driven from the Station-House, and Hanft was severely beaten, and it is thought would have been killed if he had not drawn a pistol.

The Commander-in-Chief of the Citizens' Volunteer Soldiery publishes his card showing that the target companies arming for resistance to the Police Law, is really a matter in which the companies or their true representatives have no hand

The celebrated case of FOWLES vs. BOWEN was finished on Saturday. Mr. O'CONOR made a very eloquent appeal to the Jury in behalf of the plaintiff. His Honor rendered a charge, about two hours in length, and the Jury, after an hour's absence, returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $4,500. The former verdict, it will be remembered, was $6,000. The defendant stated his intention to appeal, on the ground that the verdict was rendered contrary to the evidence. The case has excited much interest, and has attained great celebrity on account of the high social and business standing of the defendant. There was no proof, however, introduced on this trial of the frauds in counterfeit labels, &c., alleged against BOWEN and MCNAMEE.

In the Court of General Sessions, on Saturday, (Judge RUSSELL, presiding,) the negro murderer, DORSAY, was sentenced to be hung on the 17th of July. Dr. HUNT, for manslaughter, by means of abortion, was sentenced to the State Prison for four years. ARNESON, for manslaughter, was set at liberty, and GALLAGHER, for an aggravated assault on a girl 14 years of age, with intent to commit a rape, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for one year, and fined $100. GALLAGHER is well known at Tammany Hall about election time.

A Convention of Spiritualists assembled in this City at Mechanic's Hall, No. 14 Fourth-avenue, on Saturday morning, and were in session all day yesterday, without bringing their labors to a close. They are under the chairmanship of Miss ELIZA KENNEY, of Salem, Mass., and have had a great many abstruse papers read, which were dictated by the Spirits.

The Cricket match between the Yonkers Club and the second eleven of the New-York Club, the first of this season, was played at Hoboken on Saturday, the 23d inst., and resulted in the New-Yorkers beating their adversaries' score by forty-three runs. The day was fine, and there were quite a number of spectators on the ground.

A young man named HENRY GREY, of Mulberry-street, was drowned in the East River, opposite Randall's Island, yesterday, by the upsetting of a boat while on a fishing excursion with his father and brother-in-law.

The Real Nature of the Police War—Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

The Journal of Commerce in its issue of Saturday last closes what we cannot avoid styling a very flagitious attempt to sustain Mayor WOOD in his attempt to resist by force a law of the State in advance of any judicial action impugning its validity, with the following paragraph:

"If possible, the laws of the State and the laws of the City, also, should be obeyed; the authorities of the State, and the authorities of the City also. But suppose it becomes to be, as in fact it may be, and in part is, a conflict of jurisdiction between the State and City—between the State laws and City laws—between the State authorities and City authorities—in a matter where the citizen feels that the City's chartered and constitutional rights are invaded; feels that the State laws are a usurpation, and that if they prevail, the City is subjugated. What then? We cannot say what. We have no advice to give to the citizen in such a dilemma, except that he must try to do right, according to the best light he can obtain."

The Journal's advice is not dangerous. We concur in it heartily. But the statement on which it is based embodies the radical and fundamental falsehood by which the Journal and other partizans of Mayor WOOD endeavor to vindicate and justify his conduct. It assumes that the contest is between State Laws and City Laws—that the Old Police organization is the work of the City authorities, while the New one is the work of the State authorities; that Mayor WOOD is at the head of the Old Police by virtue of certain City legislation, which it is his duty as a City Officer to maintain and defend against usurpations and invading encroachments of the State Legislature. This is the pretext upon which popular favor is demanded and popular support invoked, for the action of Mayor WOOD. He is represented as the champion of City Law against State Law. If the new Commission succeeds, says the Journal of Commerce, "we are a conquered people!"

This pretext is utterly false. It has not the slightest foundation in fact. There is no such conflict between City and State as is alleged. On the contrary, both parties are acting solely and exclusively under and by virtue of State laws. Mayor WOOD himself, claims to be the head of the Police Department,—not by virtue of any City law, for the City has made no law upon the subject,—but by virtue of a law enacted by the State Legislature in 1849.

Our readers are aware that the rival claimants for authority over the Police Department are two Commissions,—the one consisting of the Mayor, Recorder and City Judge, which held their authority prior to the enactment of this new law last Winter,—and the other consisting of Mr. DRAPER and his associates, appointed in pursuance of that law. Now, both these Commissions are alike created by State laws. There is no difference whatever between them in this respect. The former Commission was created by the law passed April 11, 1849, as the following extract from its language will show:

"The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

ART. III. § 1. The Mayor, Recorder and City Judge shall constitute a Board of Commissioners for the trial of officers, policemen and doormen of the Police Department: and all officers, policemen and doormen shall be appointed by the same Board, in the manner herein provided.

§ 3. The Mayor, Recorder and Chief of Police of the City and County of New York shall constitute a Board of Commissioners to prescribe rules for the discipline, conduct and government of policemen, which shall be binding, under penalty of removal or suspension.

§ 7. All ordinances, parts of ordinances, resolutions and acts now in force, and inconsistent with this act, shall be, and the same are hereby repealed.

§ 8. This act shall take effect immediately."

This is the law by which our City Police has been governed and controlled for the last eight years. It is the only law which ever gave Mayor WOOD a shadow of authority over the Police Department. And it was enacted by the State Legislature at Albany and became a law without being submitted to the popular vote, without any action of the Common Council, or any action of any kind from the people or authorities of the City. Yet it was never denounced as a "usurpation." It was never resisted, either by Mayor WOOD or the Journal of Commerce, as a conspiracy of the State against the City. The authority of the State to pass such laws was never questioned, nor was its jurisdiction over the Police regulations of the City ever brought into question before. Indeed the Police Department of the City has always been created, organized and governed, by virtue of State laws. The Statutes are full of such enactments. Any one who will look into the Manual of the Common Council, just issued by City authority, will find reprinted in its pages half a dozen State laws establishing, regulating and changing the Police of New York City. One was passed May 7, 1844, for this specific purpose and is entitled "An act for the establishment and regulation of the Police of the City of New York." Another was passed amending this, May 13, 1846. Still another March 30, 1848. And then in 1849 came the law creating the Police Commission of which Mayor WOOD is the head, and the authority of which he still claims the right to hold.

Now all the State has done by the new law of last Winter, which is so fiercely resisted, is simply to change the Police Commission. By the law of 1849, that Commission was to consist of certain men:—by the law of 1857, it is to consist of certain others. The principle of the two laws is precisely the same. Both create a Commission and prescribe the method of its appointment. In the one case it is to consist of certain officers designated by the law itself. In the other, it is to consist of certain men to be appointed by the Governor and Senate. We admit that there is a difference in the modes provided for their appointment, which may prove to be technically and legally of some importance to the validity of the law. But this difference does not touch the principle of the law itself, nor does it give the slightest shadow of a pretext for the absurd denunciations of the law by the Mayor and his partizans. Both laws and both Commissions rest alike upon State authority. There is no such conflict between State and City as is alleged. If the New Commission is thrust upon the City by the State Government at Albany, so was the Old one. If one is a usurpation, so is the other. If submission to the authority of the one makes us a conquered people, so will submission to the other also. Every particle of official power which Mayor WOOD is now using to resist State law, is conferred by State law upon him. If the State has no right to make laws for governing the City Police, then Mayor WOOD has no right to be at the head of the old Police Department,—for it is State law, and nothing else, which puts him there.

The contest now going on in the City is thus seen to be—not as the Journal of Commerce represents it, between City law and State law,—but simply between one State law and another,—between the State law of 1849 and the State law of 1857. Mayor WOOD stands by the former, in spite of the latter. He is compelled to assert the right and power of the State to pass the one, in order to resist its right to pass the other! He cannot deny the jurisdiction of the State over the City Police, for it is under that jurisdiction, and by virtue of it, that he claims the authority which he persists in exercising. It will strike ordinary minds as a little singular that the State should have the right to enact one of these laws and not the other. And it certainly is strange that men who profess to be conservative and in favor of obedience to law, should find anything in the trifling difference of detail between these two laws, to justify the forcible resistance to the execution of either which the Mayor meditates and which the Journal of Commerce attempts to justify.

ADVANCE WAGES TO SEAMEN.—The Committee of the Chamber of Commerce to whom the subject of abolishing the system of advance wages to seamen was referred, have not yet made a report; but the shipping merchants have anticipated them and made a practical movement in the matter. Several of the largest shipping houses have signed a paper, agreeing not to give the customary month's advance after a certain date, and as a compensation they offer to pay higher wages than are paid when the advance is given. The present is a most favorable time to commence this important experiment, and we trust it may prove successful. Shipping business is dull, freights are low, and sailors are more readily obtained than they have been in many years, so that if it be possible ever to make this radical change in the manner of shipping seamen, which has been practiced for more than a hundred years, it can be done now. Like many other great reforms, it is the first step which is the most difficult to be taken. If a sufficient number of sailors can but once be found who are in so independent a position that they can go to sea without the customary pay in advance to enable them to "square the yards" with their landlords, the difficulty will all be over. But in order to establish the new system there must be a complete revolution in the character of Jack, who will not go to sea while he has a shot in the locker, and yet cannot remain on shore; his first concern, therefore, on being paid off is to get rid of his money, so that he can be off to sea again. The proposed change will convert Jack into a sober and prudent person, who will always be under the necessity of keeping money enough in his pocket to discharge all his obligations; and the great danger is, that in making this change in his character, he may be so much changed that he will be qualified for taking care of himself on shore, and will not go to sea at all. We are anxious to see how the new system will work; but we have misgivings that, however desirable it may be, it will not prove quite successful.

An Interoceanic Ship Canal.

When Lieutenant STRAIN, of the United States Navy, returned from his ill-starred expedition in search of a ship-canal route across the Isthmus of Darien, he denounced the scheme as utterly impracticable—a dream never to be realized. This was a serious damper to the ardor of those progressive spirits whose attention had been turned to the subject, and who had believed that the path had been pointed out by which so important an artery of commerce might at some day be opened to the world. The revolution of public feeling was as decided and general as the disappointment, when all the bright anticipations growing out of the proposed enterprise were thus rudely brushed away; and those who had been the most ardent supporters of the ship canal theory prior to STRAIN's expedition, were the most disheartened when its results were made known. Even Dr. BLACK, of London, who as the associate and agent of such men as Sir CHARLES FOX and a company of substantial English capitalists, had come to this country and induced our Government to join that of Great Britain in a reconnoissance to verify previous explorations of the proposed route, made by private enterprise—even he returned to England disheartened and deeply mortified.

Still there were those who did not despair of accomplishing this, the greatest enterprise which has commanded the attention of any age. Dr. BLACK, we remember,—while acknowledging the uselessness of attempting then to resist the current of public opinion adverse to the feasibility of the project—was free to say to his friends, that Lieut. STRAIN had missed the route pointed out by the English Engineers GISBORNE and FORD, and suffered every conceivable hardship in consequence of an attempt to cross the Isthmus by a line which was in fact nearly parallel with the coast. It seemed impossible that the distinguished English Engineers above-named could have been so utterly mistaken when they made a report in 1853, confirming, from actual survey, one previously made by a Dr. CULLEN in 1849–50 and 51. Either these three gentlemen must have been guilty of intentional deception, or Lieut. STRAIN did miss altogether the route designated by them. There is no other alternative to the proposition, for the country described by either party is entirely different in every essential respect from that described by the other. Nevertheless, the cold bath which the Canal project received at Lieut. STRAIN's hands, gave it a chill from which it is only just beginning to recover.

A few weeks ago, Dr. CALDWELL, an Assistant Surgeon in the United States Navy, attached to the frigate Independence, stationed at Panama, made a private reconnoissance of the Pacific slope of the supposed route, his report of which corresponds with GISBORNE's observations with remarkable accuracy. The Doctor had no difficulty in following the track laid down by GISBORNE from the Gulf of San Miguel on the Pacific to the summit of the mountain ridge of the Isthmus, and a point from which the Atlantic was clearly visible; and like him, he expresses the opinion that a ship canal is practicable—that the dividing ridge to be overcome is not much, if any, over 150 feet in height, and that a canal only 24 miles long may be found amply sufficient. Thus, again, public attention is attracted to this great enterprise, and we may expect it to be agitated until the question of its feasibility is definitely settled by an official exploration which shall command public confidence, and be accepted as a competent arbiter between conflicting opinions. Upon the importance of the proposed work to the United States and to the whole commercial world, it is unnecessary to dilate. That has been long conceded by every reflecting mind.

We suggest that the Secretary of the Navy will render a public service, and perhaps attract laurels to his own brow, by attempting once again the solution of this long-discussed problem. It will not require a large outlay, and the service can be well performed by a party of volunteers from our squadron now lying idle in the Gulf of Panama. A small expedition, well equipped, and provided with the necessary implements, might settle the question within three weeks after leaving the deck of the Independence. That volunteers for such a service will be abundant, need not be questioned; and Dr. CALDWELL, who has earned the right to command the expedition, has given the best evidence of his readiness to lead. One surgeon in our Navy, at least, has made his fame immortal by contributions to scientific and geographical knowledge; and it perhaps remains to Dr. CALDWELL to place his name alongside that of the lamented KANE. We submit that the Secretary of the Navy will earn the hearty approbation of the whole country by giving him the opportunity to try.

Meantime it will be remembered that Congress, at its last session, authorized an exploration to verify private surveys heretofore made of a ship canal route via the Atrato and Truando Rivers. This project originated with Mr. KELLY, of New-York, who exhibits a series of apparently perfect maps—the results of his own instrumental surveys—upon which the feasibility of the enterprise is made to appear as reasonably certain as the opening of a new street or avenue. Whether its cost is likely to be too great for accomplishment, is another question to be settled by capitalists after the physical difficulties have been overcome. It is to be hoped that the President will avail himself of the discretion reposed in him to either prove the accuracy of these maps or expose their fallacy. That in future years the avenues of commerce between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans will be almost exclusively via the narrow Isthmus of Panama either by railroad or ship canal, or both, scarce admits of a doubt—for in no other way can commerce be so economically served, all things considered. For both canal and railroad there will be abundant patronage, let their facilities of transacting business be extended beyond any possible present estimate. The trade by that route is only just beginning to develop itself. Two years ago it was all in one direction. Then nearly everything transported across the Isthmus, except specie, went from this side to the Pacific, and rates of exchange were largely in favor of New-York. Already the new trade coming this way, which since that date sprang into life, has reversed the current, and to-day a draft on Panama is worth a handsome premium. This is but the small dropping before the shower. If we only open our arms to receive it, and make judicious efforts to encourage it, we are destined at no distant day to attract a trade via the Isthmus, from South and Central America, Australia, the Indies and China, far exceeding in value that we now enjoy with all the world beside. This is no idle day-dream; its reality must impress itself vividly upon every man who will study the map of the world, and reflect upon the present tendency of trade development. Let us not be blind to this great interest, and lose the golden glory which awaits our gathering, by criminal indifference to the means through which it is to be secured.

Who shall take Care of the Boys?

One of our cotemporaries has expressed an opinion that no Chief of Police will do his duty to New-York who does not diminish the population of the City within a fortnight by at least twenty thousand heads. The proposition is sanguinary, though perhaps not wholly unsound, for the maxims of Doctor SANGRADO, rejected by all modern physicians of the morbid individual man, do not seem to have become wholly inapplicable in the treatment of the body politic. At least they have nowhere quite fallen into discredit—and in a case of disease so desperate as that of our municipal organization, it might be worth while, were it at all practicable, to try the depletive process suggested by the Tribune.

But the continual reapplication of a remedy so severe is certainly not to be desired; and while we are casting up the arguments for and against its immediate administration, it may be just as well for us to give a thought to some potent prophylactic which may insure us against a future necessity of the like sort.

Kill the twenty thousand adult rascals who are supposed by the Tribune to constitute the true infection of the State, and you leave ripening for the gallows twenty thousand more who will be clamoring for annihilation before the lapse of another Instrum. What are we to do with these? If they were young wolves now, or cub bears, there would be no difficulty in the case at all. As with the old so should we deal with the young, and prescient of coming mischief, strangle the incipient criminals in their cradles, or rather in the straw and the mire amid which their infant iniquity is dandled into dismal strength. But they are neither young wolves nor cub bears. They are human children—ragged, dirty, premature, horrible, delighting in idleness, ignorant of decency, prone hurrying to perdition—but still human beings, bearing about with them all the salutary chances of human nature—foredoomed it would seem, indeed, to ruin—yet not by you nor by us to be seized and damned before their time.

We cannot kill the twenty thousand intending burglars, murderers, thieves and vagabonds who swarm in the back slums and the alleys of our gorgeous capital. Can we do nothing else with them? If the worst use possible to which you can put a man be to hang him—may there not be some better use for a boy than to stifle, starve or beat him out of the world?

So imperative is this question, so solemn, so piteously pathetic at once and so tremendously practical, that if the Anniversary week, which has just passed, had brought no other good to light than the good news that earnest and clever people all over our country, are thinking, talking and working out a solution for it, we might well be patient under the floods of twaddle and palaver with which the congregated wisdom and volubility of the rural districts and the metropolis have been drenching us. The movement on behalf of Juvenile Reformation alone would redeem by its importance the much abused name of Philanthropy. Issues of infinite value are involved in its successful prosecution, and it is of the highest consequence that it should be carried on in the broadest light of public discussion, and confided only to the best informed and most devoted men.

It should be understood, in the inception of every undertaking from which a result of good to this cause is expected, that the first condition of success in the management of a Reformatory Institution, is character in those who control it. The best organized societies will be inefficient—the most sagaciously-constructed plans will be fruitless, unless the right men can be found to undertake from the beginning the execution of these plans. The simplest experience of domestic life is sufficient to prove the truth of this. Whether the parental relation, under the best conditions, shall be a curse or a blessing to the child, depends absolutely upon the personal value of the parent. How much more important, then, is the quality of the disposition and the will to which we are to intrust the discipline and the development of hundreds of young natures less untutored than wrongly tutored—less ignorant of good than familiar with vice? The master of a Reformatory must combine in himself all the traits which are demanded of the most exemplary of mortals in the most difficult of situations; he must possess the mild and patient resolution which gives the skillful physician control over the gusty and passionate madman—the quick and subtle perception of the criminal lawyer or the detective policeman—the self-sacrificing zeal and genuine tenderness of the Christian missionary. Where are we to find such men? That they exist among us is not to be doubted, for they have been found in all ages, and among every people. But one does not meet them at every corner. And yet without them, the bravest enterprises of the most ardent philanthropists in this behalf cannot possibly prosper. This point, then, must not be lost sight of. It must receive the immediate attention of the energetic and humane persons who have interested themselves so warmly in behalf of the desolate and desperate boys.

The work demands such men in America, as is the Count DE METZ in France. This heroic person has demonstrated in his own career the irresistible power for good which resides in character. He it is to whom the French Reformatory at La Mettraye owes its superiority over all other institutions of the sort.

Seventeen years ago M. DE METZ put off his judicial robes, and devoted himself to the sacred task of extirpating the crime which it had so long been his function to repress and to punish. He obtained the coöperation of the King, LOUIS PHILIPPE, and of a personal friend of his own, the Viscount DE COURTEILLES, purchased an extensive property near the city of Tours, and began his work. Starting with the cardinal principle that human beings do not naturally prefer filth, squalor and the prison to cleanliness, decency and orderly freedom, he founded his institution in the likeness of the family, constituting himself its head, and assuming the duties of that position with an affectionate earnestness, sincerity and zeal not unworthy of Apostolic times. Into the details of his system it is not, of course, our present purpose to enter. We seek only to impress upon the public mind a fitting sense of the importance and the efficiency of the spirit in which this truly great man has administered his trust. Abandoning the society in which his rank, his culture and his merits had secured for him a brilliant and delightful place, and spurning the common temptations of ambition, M. DE METZ has given the best years of his life to La Mettraye. He has lived there through all these years, leaving his post only when called from it to carry the principles he had so triumphantly vindicated into other parts of his own country and of Europe. He has established a truly paternal relation between himself and the successive generations of children who have passed through the wholesome ordeal of the Institution—he has inspired his assistants and disciples with something of our great qualities. He has governed his small armies of outcast children as the scions of the happiest families are governed, by the equal sway of affection, by the stimulus of honor, by the wholesome sense of shame. In a word, he has lived among these children for now twenty years, in the unwearied practice of every virtue which can make the name of father dear, and the name of ruler venerable. And what is his reward?

From the day of its foundation to January, 1856. La Mettraye received 1,984 children, of whom 876 were orphans; 463 illegitimate; 408 children of convicts; 116 foundlings; 304 deserted by step-fathers and step-mothers. All of these children were taken from the prisons of France, and most of them, as will be seen, were homeless.

At La Mettraye these children have been fed, clothed, educated to honest industry, and to the sentiments which become reasonable beings. Out of more than a thousand who have been sent back to the world, and over whose career a watchful eye has been kept by the Institution which they are taught to consider as their Mother, the number of relapses into evil courses of life has never risen to eight per cent. Of the dismissed children, now grown to man's estate, 421 are farmers; 301 are tradesmen; 249 are soldiers; 69 are sailors in the Navy. Eloquent as these statistics are, the short and simple annals of the Institution glow with incidents more eloquent still.

During the inundations which last year desolated the regions bordering on the great rivers of France, the province of Touraine was an especial sufferer. The Loire overflowed its banks and laid waste whole departments. The city of Tours was flooded, and its most populous quarters were nearly submerged. M. DE METZ came to the rescue with his colonists. These youths, who but a few years before had passed under the ban of the law as outcasts and plunderers, Ishmaelites of modern civilization, were foremost in the work of gallantry and honesty. So great were the services which they rendered in the protection of life and property that the municipal authorities, as soon as the danger was passed, hastened to acknowledge them by striking off a medal, which was presented to these boys in the name of the grateful city. A single incident of the time will show the spirit which M. DE METZ has infused into these young hearts. While the peril was at its height, a party of the lads of La Mettraye were refreshing themselves after their labors. One of them held in his hand a bottle of wine which he was about to serve to his comrades, when a workman, probably driven beside himself by the excitement of the scene and by his own sufferings, snatched it from his grasp. The indignant bystanders instantly fell upon him, and taking away the wine, restored it to the boy, who immediately filling a glass, handed it with a smile to the discomfited laborer.

A similar feeling actuates those who may fairly enough be called the graduates of this incomparable foundation. One of these, for instance, a Sergeant of Zouaves, having distinguished himself by singular gallantry in the Crimea, received a commission as Lieutenant and the Cross of the Legion of Honor. The Cross was accompanied with the sum of 500 francs, always given as the honoraires of the distinction. This sum the grateful young hero, himself not over-burdened, as will be imagined, with worldly goods, immediately transmitted to LA METTRAYE, with a request that it might be employed in doing for some other hapless child of Parisian poverty and sin, what LA METTRAYE had done for him! Facts like these, which might be multiplied almost indefinitely, are more eloquent than any words in praise of the man who has perfected and vivified the system which makes them possible. Not less eloquent are they in demonstration of the importance of individual influence to the success of such an institution. And we quote them here, as of our personal knowledge, in the hope that they may not be thrown away upon the magnanimous and right-minded persons who are preparing themselves to establish among ourselves new LA METTRAYES to save for the future of our own Western cities the vast fund of life and energy, of human affections and intellect and activity, which, without the angelic intervention of such instrumentalities as these, must be wasted upon the service of selfishness and of sin, of private misery and of public mischief.

The Price of Blood.

We often see insinuations, and now and then have plump assertions, from Southern writers and orators, to the effect that many of the wealthy families of the Free States are living on the profits of the African slave trade which was carried on by their ancestors. It is not a matter of the least importance whether this be the case or not. There are, no doubt, a good many men at the North who would willingly enter into the slave trade at the present day, if the superior virtue and intelligence of the country did not condemn that inhuman business, and by making it unlawful prevent bad men from engaging in it. It seems that Ex-President TYLER, in his address at the Jamestown Festival, in Virginia, recently alluded to this matter, and twitted the Northern States with the old story of the ancestors of the present generation having made money by importing negroes from Africa. If they did their children have made all the amends in their power by freeing the slaves which their ancestors bequeathed them. They could do no more, nor have condemned more strongly the acts for which they were not responsible. We have not read Mr. TYLER's speech, but the Baltimore American says of it:

"We have reason to know that some of the most pious of our Abolition friends now enjoy the comforts of palatial mansions, handsome incomes, and superb seaside estates which owe their origin to the same 'profits of blood,' and in some instances, where the slave-trade with its attendant horrors of the 'middle passage' is the source, the figure might be heightened as our friends referred to sometimes heighten it, and these mansions and estates might be said to be cemented and watered with 'blood' itself. An instance of this kind is recalled by Ex President TYLER, in his recent address at the Jamestown celebration. He said he had knowledge of the fact, that the marble palace of Stewart, in New York City, was built upon the sale of three thousand slaves who had been sent to New-York to be emancipated."

We do not quite comprehend this allusion to Mr. STEWART's "palace." If 3,000 slaves were ever sent to New-York to be emancipated we cannot conceive by what possible process the profits of the transaction could have been transmuted into STEWART's marble store. Mr. STEWART happens to be an enterprising Irishman, who has made a large fortune by legitimately buying and selling calicos, ginghams and moire antique. Out of the profits of his business he has built his so-called "palace," and the orator at Jamestown must have been imposed upon most shamefully by somebody who told him the story about the 3,000 slaves.

The Black Hole on Eldridge-street.

The practice of incarcerating witnesses to secure their attendance at a trial is utterly indefensible. It is one of the barbarous relics of mediæval law that, to our disgrace, we have still preserved. It has been always fallaciously upheld on the plea that the public good required it; but public good can never be advanced by an indifference to the rights and liberties of private citizens. It may be of the greatest importance that a particular criminal should be tried and convicted; but we hold it to be highly improper, and false to every principle of Right, that gross injustice should be done to some dozen individuals in order to prove the guilt of one. This is but carrying out, with a vengeance, the old Jesuitical axiom of doing evil that good may come—of justifying the wickedness of the means by the righteousness of the ends—a principle wholly repugnant to the spirit of our laws. We are told, and we are ready to receive it as sound doctrine, that it is better that ninety-nine guilty men should escape, than that one innocent man should be punished; but in the matter of imprisoning witnesses, we act upon the principle that it is better that ninety-nine innocent men should be punished than that one guilty man should escape.

It is bad enough when witnesses are thus deprived of their liberty, but when, in addition, they are thrust into such a pestiferous hole as Eldridge-street Jail, the practice becomes inhuman. None of our readers, we venture to say, perused the account, as published in Saturday's TIMES, of the death of EUGENE GRELET in that prison, without the liveliest emotions of sympathy for the unfortunate victim, and of shame that such a state of things, as the Inquest revealed, should be permitted to exist among us. The deceased was detained as a witness in the French Extradition Case in default of the enormous bail of $500,000! The room occupied by the unfortunate young man was long and narrow, with one heavily barred window which could only be lowered an inch or two for the purpose of ventilation. In this room there were nine beds, and it will require no vivid imagination to conceive the state of the atmosphere in which the occupants were compelled to exist. Nor can the fact excite any wonder that the witness GRELET, who entered the prison in perfect health, was after eight months' incarceration carried out to his grave. There is no doubt but that his death was hastened, if it was not altogether caused, by the loathsome atmosphere of the place in which he was confined. He appears to have received proper medical treatment and attention from the jailor, but though his removal was frequently urged as the only means of saving his life, it was either neglected or refused by those who had authority in the matter. So he died.

Now this case requires a closer investigation than it has yet received. Eldridge-street Jail is notoriously unfit for the purposes of a county prison. Jury after Jury have made this representation. Convicts and criminals would be entitled to more consideration than are now shown to witnesses whose only offence is an inability to command exorbitant bail. Looking at the deplorable condition in which the prisoners of Eldridge-street Jail are condemned to live, we must infer that the case of GRELET is not the only one of sickness, suffering, and perhaps of death, that has originated there. But the history of this one case is surely enough to stimulate every exertion for the removal of such a disgrace from our City. If we must continue to imprison witnesses—and we protest against the pretended necessity—let us at least treat them with common humanity.

THE VALUE OF A MURDERER.—The Gregorian correspondent of the Boston Traveller, writing from this City, says:

"But while thousands of dollars fail to find a murderer, who is not worth much when he is found, pure and lovely pearls are found gratis in the placid waters of the Passaic River, in our vicinity, &c., &c."

But there is a fallacy in the reasoning of the Traveller's correspondent, which some astute readers may not be able to discern. It is a great mistake to suppose that a murderer is not worth much when he is found. That is just the time when he becomes valuable. A murderer at large is certainly not worth much; but quite the contrary. The wolf that our brave PUTNAM slew in his den was a "pestilent varmint," and not worth much while he was committing his ravages, but when he was caught he was worth so much that the man who found him was canonized for dragging him from his den. The man who murdered Doctor BURDELL will be worth so much to the whole community, when he is found, that we cannot afford to let him go at large. Perhaps Governor KING and the Common Council think with the Traveller's correspondent, that a murderer is not worth much when found, and that may be the reason why they do not offer a suitable reward for the discovery of Dr. BURDELL's murderer.

Decease of a Journalist—Death of the Editor of the "Irish American."

It is our painful duty to record the death of PATRICK LYNCH, Esq., whose name, associated with Irish affairs, has long been familiar to our readers and his countrymen throughout the Union. Mr. LYNCH has for some years been editor of a weekly newspaper, The Irish American, which, though strongly partisan in its tone—defending everything "Democratic," as well as everything Irish with earnest zeal—has been marked by a degree of moderation in temper, and of fairness in tone, to which most of the partisan journals of the day are strangers.

Born of parents in the middle walk of life, near Croome, County Limerick, Ireland, in the year 1812, Mr. LYNCH was first intended for the medical profession, and studied many years in the hospitals both of Dublin and London, evincing more than ordinary talent and receiving from his preceptors in different colleges the highest honors in their gift. But his antipathy to surgical details, or rather his strong inherent devotedness to art, literature, and the excitements of political life, finally determined him to quit a profession at war with his sensibilities and instincts; and taking service under O'CONNELL during the halcyon days of the Repeal agitation, his pen soon raised him to a position of great local importance and he was appointed Editor of the Limerick Reporter, one of the ablest and (under his direction) most progressive of the journals on the side of the "Liberator."

At length, on the public secession of the "Young Ireland Party" from Conciliation Hall, it was found that the views of Mr LYNCH did not correspond with those of the proprietors of the paper he was then conducting: and in the first month of January, 1816, while the famine was just beginning to cast its dark shadow over the island of his nativity and affection, he joined the Limerick and Clare Examiner, a semi-weekly journal, over whose columns he had full control, and in which he could speak his full thoughts and sentiments without subserviency to the views or interests of any individual whatever.

But these, though his most important labors, formed only a small part of the writings through which he sought to influence the opinion and destinies of his country; he corresponded extensively with the Dublin and all other journals in favor of the repeal of the legislative union between Great Britain and Ireland; and his letters in the Tipperary Vindicator will long be remembered for their vivacity, good humor and sound sense.

In terms of warm personal regard with WILLIAM SMITH O'BRIEN, JOHN MITCHELL, THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, JOHN O'MAHONY, MICHAEL DOHENY, and the other prominent leaders of the secession, or "physical force" movement,—he, nevertheless, maintained an attitude of perfect independence, asserting (as has since been confessed by both sides) that both were a little in the wrong, and pleading earnestly that some conciliatory course should be adopted for the sake of their common country. This plea was unheeded—JOHN O'CONNELL still miserably aping his father's dictatorial prerogatives, and the hot hearts and hot heads on the other side—stung almost to madness by the famine, whose ravages were everywhere around them—feeling little disposed to recede from the violent counsels in which they saw, or thought they saw, the speediest hope of redress.

Finding himself thus isolated in a struggle, because his good sense could not submit to the extremes of either side, Mr. LYNCH came over here in the Fall of 1847, and soon achieved a respectable position as contributor or correspondent to many of the daily and weekly journals of this City. Some humorous sketches of his, designed to illustrate the characteristics of his countrymen, created a very favorable impression; and, though they have since been censured by interested parties, as "libels on the Irish name," their fidelity and wit have obtained general recognition, nor can they properly be denounced as "libels" until CARLETON'S Traits and Stories, so universally and deservedly popular, are censured with a heavier punishment.

In the year 1849, Mr. LYNCH having acquainted himself with the spirit and resources of his adopted home, and joining partnership with Mr. W. L. COLE—who will still, we understand, carry on the paper for the benefit of Mr. LYNCH's family—commenced the publication of the Irish American, a weekly issue devoted to the instruction and amusement of the Irish in America, and naturally inclined to the support of the Democratic Party, whose claims to the Irish vote Mr. LYNCH at all times advocated with learning, ability, and a moderation to which we have had some unhappy contrasts. This paper, partly from the congenial talent which the editor diffused through its columns, and partly from being cheaper than any other journal in the same interest, soon distanced competition, and attained a circulation more than double that of any other Irish paper in the United States. Mr. DOHENY gave it the aid of his pen, under the signature of "Publicola," and Mr. JOHN O'MAHONY, the best Irish scholar of the day, was just about completing his arrangements for establishing a purely Irish department, in the Irish tongue, devoted to the history, antiquities, and poetry of his native land, in its columns.

Personally Mr. LYNCH was a most amiable man, and enjoyed the respect of his brother journalists and all who knew him. His social qualities made him welcome in the best circles of literature and art, and his shrewdness in political matters recommended him to the favor of Mr. BUCHANAN, in whose opinion he stood high, and who will feel in his death the loss of a faithful friend and more than commonly devoted partisan.

It only remains to be said that he died of that disease to which men of thought and intellectual labor are peculiarly subject, to wit: congestion of the brain—the result of over-excitement and protracted study. He died at the very moment when about to enter on the enjoyment of a position and fortune which his talents and perseverance very eminently deserved. He will be buried this morning from his residence in Fourth-place, South Brooklyn; and the funeral cortege will doubtless give some evidence of the estimation in which he was held by those who knew him best, and can best appreciate the loss they have incurred in the change which, let us hope, "is gain to him."

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—The entertainments for to-night are "The Rent Day," and "The Rights of Man." The former is one of the best dramas in the English language, the latter is a novelty produced on Saturday, and played to night for the second time. It is a well written two act piece, almost destitute of plot, but having a natural progression towards matrimony, which after all answers all the purpose of plot and reality. There is an excellent part for Mrs. HOEY, a gay widow mewed up in the narrow confines of a country house; for Miss GANNON, who pouting protests against the rights of man; for Mrs. ALLEN, who demonstrates in a bewitchingly wicked way how utterly absurd it is to expect those rights in the married state; for Mr. LESTER, who makes love in a way calculated to be satisfactory to the best regulated families; for Mr. DYOT, a jealous husband, tenacious of his rights, but always bamboozled out of them, to the intense satisfaction of every one; and for Mr. REYNOLDS, who, from the commencement, is clearly predestined to marry. These characters mingle together in an every day way, talk pleasantly, get jealous, make it up and marry. After which they deliver an old-fashioned epilogue, and the curtain comes down.

The piece is a pleasant little affair, admirably duped for this house, and the company which make it so attractive. The author, Mr. S. V. LELAND, has not aimed for brilliancy, and consequently, has avoided dullness. The dialogue is well distributed, fluent, and natural, and the delineation of character much above the average. Altogether, it is a delightful little piece, and, acted as it was on Saturday night, cannot fail to have a run.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—The spectacular drama of "Faustus" will be repeated during the present week. To-night, the innumerable gas burners in the theatre will be ignited by GARDNER'S Galvanic-Electro process. The experiment is an extremely curious one, and cannot fail to delight the audience.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—To-night is the farewell benefit of that excellent danseuse, Mlle. ROBERT. The programme is long and attractive. "Evolutions on the Tight Rope." "Flora and Zephyr." "The Coopers." "New Hungarian Divertissement." "The Italian Brigands."

BURTON'S THEATRE.—Young HENGLER—a gentleman whose reputation hitherto has been confined to the tight rope—appears as Hamlet in SHAKESPEARE'S play of that name. The farce of the "Clockmaker's Hat" is the afterpiece.

LAURA KEENE'S THEATRE.—A new comedy, called "A Bird in the Hand is Worth Two in the Bush," will be produced here to night, followed by the spectacle of "Variety."

BARNUM'S MUSEUM.—To-night, KOTZEBUE'S play of the "Stranger" will be presented. In the afternoon a great variety of entertainments.

PURDY'S NATIONAL THEATRE.—"The Wild Knight," "Salmagundi" and "The French Spy" are up for to-night.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—This famous company of Ethiopian delineators produce a grand, original, musical, magical and semi-burlesque spectacle, called "Aladdin," to night. It has been a long time in preparation, and will, we are assured, exceed any of the BUCKLEYS' previous efforts. The usual amount of pure minstrelsy will also be given.

Personal.

GOTTSCHALK'S health is not improved by his visit to Cuba. A letter from Havana in the New Orleans Picayune, says: "His health has improved but little under the genial climate, and it was feared that his disease, the consumption, approached a fatal termination."

RACHEL talks of returning to New-York, to pass a month or six weeks; but her health is so feeble that it is considered doubtful whether she will ever leave Cairo.

Another disappearance is related in the Newark papers. Mr. GEORGE KINGSLAND, aged 30, a son of Gen. KINGSLAND, of Belleville, N. J., started for New-York on Monday week, and has not since been heard of. He had a considerable amount of money with him.

Signor GUIDI, the well-known tenor and music teacher, has lost his voice by severe illness at Chicago.

The emeute between Dr. GUILMETTE and the Pyne and Harrison Opera Troupe is the talk of Boston. The Boston Bee tells an interesting story of the cause of this very unmusical discord:

The circumstances of this legal warfare, as given to us by reliable authority, are as follows: Mr. GUILMETTE, a "singer of bass notes," was formerly a member of the Pyne and Harrison Opera Troupe. His engagement was for six months' service at a stipulated sum. After singing four months, he refused to comply further with his contract unless his salary was increased to double the amount agreed upon. This was denied him, and the contract severed. By this arrangement the troupe lost many fine engagements already announced, and experienced a loss of some hundreds of dollars. Just before Miss PYNE left New-York, Mr. GUILMETTE trusteed $418 of her money which had been deposited in one of the banks rewing his claim upon a charge of $325 for medical services. This money of course has to remain in custody of the bank until the claim is legally decided. It would seem that this sum would be sufficient to satisfy the demand, but not so. On Monday evening the writs were issued in $500 damages, and yesterday Mr. HALLSEN was arrested in $600 damages,—all for medical services, no doubt,—making the sum total trusteed and claimed $1,924.

The Turf for 1857.

UNION COURSE, L. I.—TROTTING.—Saturday May 23, Match $300, two mile Heats, in harness.

S. McLAUGHLIN b. g. Gen. Darcy	1 1
H. WOODRUFF g. gray mare	2 2
Owner h. g. Andrew Sheehan	drawn.
Owner r. g. Captain Henry	drawn.

Time—5:22—5:17¼.

Darcy had this race all his own way, and went as steadily as clock work through, while the mare was dancing from the start to the finish, of the first Heat. The second Heat she trotted finely, but Darcy proved the better nag.

UNION COURSE, L. I.—TROTTING.—Friday, May 22, Purse and Stake $1,250; Mile Heats, best 3 in 5, to wagons

D. PIFFER br. g. Brown Dick	2 1 1 1
H. WOODRUFF b. m. Rose of Washington	1 2 2 2

Time: 2:31¼—2:32½—2:32½—2:32½.

This was one of the most beautifully contested races ever witnessed, and caused the most unbounded excitement among the backers of the horses. The betting was in favor of Brown Dick, previous to the start $100 to $60. Before starting the second Heat, Rose was the favorite $150 to $50. The same nags come together again on Monday.

About 10 o'clock Sunday morning an accident happened at the Union Course, Long Island, from two parties meeting each other with fast horses and skeleton wagons. One horse, a valuable one, was killed on the spot, and his wagon broken to pieces; the other horse was supposed to be much injured. Mr. THOMAS HALEY, one of the drivers, was much hurt. Dr. WOOD, of Jamaica, being sent for, found the patient suffering from a severe incised wound on his body, and from several contused wounds on his limbs.

SKULL-CRACKING.—Quite a business was done in skull-cracking in the Thirteenth Ward on Saturday night. A young man named HENRY FOSHING made an attack upon Policeman ABBOTT, who attempted to arrest him for disorderly conduct. The officer tapped FOSHING on the head with his club, in order to relieve him of his superfluous animal spirits, after which he took him to the station-house, where Dr. KIMBARK dressed his wounds. Yesterday morning, Justice BRENNAN locked him up for assault upon the officer in default of $500 bail.

Soon afterwards, a man named LUKE TIGH was "brought in," bleeding from scalp wounds inflicted upon him by Policeman NELSON. TIGH, it seems, was raising a disturbance in the tailor store of MOAVOY & BROTHER, in Grand, near Suffolk-street. Officer NELSON interfered, and attempted to arrest TIGH, who resisted and struck him. The locust was then brought into play, and TIGH was subdued. He gave bail yesterday, before Justice BRENNAN.

The same night DENNIS MURPHY and his wife ELEN were taken to the Thirteenth Ward Police Station by officers CONKLIN and YEGAR. DENNIS was suffering very severely from wounds on the head, inflicted with a tumbler by his wife, whom he attempted to beat. A physician was called.

FATALLY STABBED ON A STATEN ISLAND FERRY BOAT.—A desperate fight occurred last evening on board the Staten Island ferry-boat Josephine on her trip from the Island to this City. Knives were used, and three men were stabbed—one of them a hackdriver named THOS. QUINN, fatally. QUINN was removed to the City Hospital. No arrests were made. It is stated that the man who stabbed QUINN is known by the name of "Mosey."

The Staten Island ferry-boats, especially on their return trips towards evening, have been all this season scenes of the most disgraceful rowdyism.

NATIONAL AMERICAN COUNCIL.—The American District Conventions have selected delegates to the National Council, which meets at Louisville, June 2. Two sets of delegates were presented from the Ninth Ward. In the Fourth District Convention there were six ballots cast, but in all the others the choice was unanimously made on the first trial. The following are the delegates and alternates chosen:

Dist. Wards.	Delegate.	Alternate.
2...1, 2, 3, 5, 8	Thos. McKnight,	G. A. Barney.
4...4, 6, 10, 14	T. H. Wainwright,	Robt. Beatty.
5...7, 13 & Winthrop	G. A. Buckinghnm,	G. C. Deane.
6...11, 15, 17	Daniel Bowley,	R. L. Lorimer.
7...9, 16, 20	A. M. C. Smith,	J. B. Pollock.
8...12, 18, 19, 21, 22	John L. Riker,	Jas. Owens.

QUARANTINE COMMISSIONERS.—The Quarantine Commissioners held a meeting, Saturday afternoon, at their rooms, No. 23 William-street. The injunction being dissolved the Commissioners can now proceed with their business. The contract for 2,400 running feet of fence, at $7,974, was signed by the parties. DODSON & LEWIS, and the contract for the three hospital buildings by JAMES ANKATELL, for about $3,500 each. The bids for the pier will be announced to-day. The arrangements for the sick are to be completed by the 20th of June. To-day the Commissioners will decide on the location of the four buoys, according to the chart of the Harbor Commissioners, after taking the opinion of a competent pilot.

DROWNED ON SUNDAY IN THE EAST RIVER.—HENRY GRAY, of No. 175 Mulberry street, his son GEORGE and JAMES HOLMAN, his son-in-law, hired a boat yesterday at Harlem bridge to go fishing in the East River. When opposite Randall's Island the parties rose to change seats when the boat suddenly capsized, throwing the occupants into the water. Young GREY senior, and HOLMAN clung to the bottom of the boat and hallowed for help. The old man relinquished his hold of the boat twice and sank, but each time on rising again was caught by his heir by his son in-law—who supported him until aid arrived. The body of the younger Mr. GREY has not been recovered.

The Spiritualists in Conference.

On Saturday, at 10½ o'clock, some eighty persons met in Mechanics' Hall, No. 14 Fourth-avenue, to organize a meeting, in pursuance of the following notice, which had been published in one of the Spiritualist organs in this City:

CONFERENCE.—A Conference of practical Spiritualists will be held at the Mechanics' Institute Lecture-room, No. 14 Fourth-avenue, on Saturday and Sunday, 23d and 24th instant, commencing at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Addresses may be expected from JOHN M. SPEAR, ELIZA J. KENNEY, S. C. HEWITT and others.

Mrs. S. C. HEWETT, of Boston, announced that by a special enactment of the spirits, the duty of presiding over the Convention would devolve upon Mrs. ELIZA J. KENNEY, a renowned practical Spiritualist of New-England. Mrs. KENNEY came forward, returned thanks for the honor conferred by the spirits, and earnestly appealed to her brethren and sisters to labor zealously for the advancement of Spiritualism. She then read a portion of Scriptures, and followed that with a written invocation, which she said was transmitted to her by departed friends.

The President then announced Miss C. HINCKEY and I. S. SHELDON, of Boston, as Secretaries of the Conference; and Miss FAY, of New-York, and Miss C. HINCKEY, of Boston, as a Financial Committee; after which she announced the programme of discussion for the session as follows:

1. What relation does Spiritualism bear to other moral and religious efforts?
2. What do intelligent persons in the spirit-life desire to do on this earth?
3. Have spirit persons associated for benedicent purposes?
4. What is the special mission of women at this eventful epoch?
5. Is it possible to generate a higher order of existence than has yet appeared on this earth?
6. In what ways, if any, can persons combine their efforts for humanitary purposes?
7. Have persons in the spirit-life unfolded any models of their purposes and their plans?

Mrs. BANER, of New-York, then read a paper on progress, which she said was transmitted to her from the spiritual world. It dealt in generalities, and advised nothing specific.

Mr. T. S. SHELTON, of Boston, followed with a paper on the relations of Spiritualism to other moral and religious reforms, which was discussed by Mrs. HEWITT, Mr. D. C. GODDARD, of Chelsea, and Mr. J. M. SPEAR, of Connecticut, until the hour of recess.

At 3 P. M. the Conference reassembled.

The second question of the programme was announced as in order for discussion, when Mr. HARNES, of Connecticut, a sleeping medium, groped his way to the stand—sound asleep, to all appearances—and made a lunicious speech on the political wickedness of the country. The legitimate subject was discussed briefly by Mr. GODDARD and Mr JOHN ONY, when an adjournment took place to evening.

At 8 P. M., immediately upon reassembling, Mr. SHELTON read—first, a paper on the future destiny of this earth; and next, one on Commerce, prepared while in the abnormal state by Mr. SPEAR. Mr. OTIS commented upon the last. "Commerce," he said, "would yet feed the hungry, and clothe the naked, at a reasonable and living price, so that the products of the earth should come to the consumer at first cost, instead of going through the hands of and enriching so many speculators." He explained that to the Church, as seen and explained by Mr. SPEAR, had been first developed to him in three different spheres of usefulness, then at seven, and then lastly at twelve. Our Christian Church came seven forms of social life, indispensable and absolute to the form of love. The first was the development of Commerce, as the great head of the Church."

Mr. HEWIT also approved the doctrine of the paper.

Mr. IRA B. DAVIS said he was in favor of the plan proposed, but he had very little hopes of the success of the project. The same thing had been tried in the City in 1857, and went on for some time very successfully, but was finally broken up. It was not the men that was wanted, but the money, in order to carry out the project.

Mr. OTIS asked what was the cause, Mr. DAVIS; now what was the real cause of discontinuing the operation?

Mr. DAVIS—The cause was this: That, not having sufficient means to carry on the operation, we were obliged to place confidence in somebody, and that very confidence destroyed it. We selected a man who had been tried—a man who had come from the other side of the water—a man who had been trained in the school of reform, and a man in whom it was said that you might place any amount of confidence: and yet he tricked us. The business was started on a capital of $500, which it took several years to raise.

VOICE—What amount of money do you think it would be requisite to have to carry this plan into execution?

Mr. DAVIS—About $10,000, I should judge.

Mr. GODDARD followed in support of the plan.

Mr. STEPHEN P. ANDREWS next proceeded to favor the project, and welcome his Boston and New-England friends to New-York. He was glad to see all who were engaged in so great and noble a cause as the propagation of Spiritualism. Adjourned.

SUNDAY PROCEEDINGS.

At 10 o'clock the Conference reconvened. After reading the Scriptures, and an invocation to the Spirits, the President announced as the first subject of discussion: "The Special Mission of Women at this Epoch."

Mrs. FARNHAM, a young woman, and but lately converted to Spiritualism, read a paper on marrying, emphasizing its ills as at present observed.

Mr. FARNHAM consumed the remainder of the morning session in a long speech upon the same topic.

The afternoon meeting was crowded to excess. After the opening exercises Mr. SHELDON read another paper dictated by the medium Mr. SPEAR on the "order of creation." It was practical and plain. It went in for the improvement of all useful plants and animals and no less of the human species, and no less materially and physically than morally. It favored the organization of exhibitions or fine healthy children and model parents as likely to improve our kind.

Dr. YOUNG, of New York, supported the doctrines of the paper. He was occasionally interrupted by an intruder who was quieted at last however.

Dr. WELLINGTON, who also argued in favor of the proposed system, in illustration of his theory that there was a spirit directing the movements of every man, told the story of a rustic couple who, about a year ago, came to this City from the West, and by direction of the spirits, who had never seen a spiritual paper. The woman, some years previous, had, by divine or spiritual inspiration, when told to travel about one hundred miles distant through the wilderness, where she would find an individual who had been an invalid for years, whom she was to rub with her hands until he should be healed, she started on her journey, and having reached the place described, found the man as she had been foretold, who was an unbeliever in spiritualism. She told him of her errand, and after some persuasion, he was induced to permit her to perform the office for which she had been sent, and accordingly commenced rubbing him with the palm of her hand until he was able to leave his bed, and walk upright, and attend to his business. This act soon became so public that her name and fame spread far and wide, until she had more than she could attend to, until she herself became an invalid, and was obliged to seek for health in the East.

Recess was now taken to evening.

They met again at 8 o'clock—evening.

Miss C. HINCKLEY, one of the Secretaries, read an address on the new order of things which spiritualism is to introduce. There would be, among other things it averred: 1. A community of feeling, and frankness in dealing with each other. If one were in want, his need would be shared by all—the interest of one would be the interest of all.

2. If one of this communion should make a mistake or commit some act of indiscretion, the indiscreet person would not be loved the less; it would not be placed among crimes, but attributed to want of judgment; as sisters and brothers they would lovingly give counsel, or set the weaker person right.

3. There are certain general wants to be supplied, such as entertainment, fuel, clothing and shelter. By mutual counsel and assistance, they would provide each other what was needful for the body.

4. The children would be intrusted to one of the self forgetting sisters, who would place them in companies, where they would receive the highest moral, spiritual and religious culture.

5. There would be a just and intelligent combination of persons in the marriage relation; these, divested of selfishness, cannot come together for self-gratification—cannot be moved by a desire to satisfy the lower propensities for ease or convenience, because in the very best sense they are one; and when by any series of events there may come to be a diversity of feeling, a separation will be, but there will be no jar, no discord, because the word mine shall have been erased, and ours written upon all things. It is this condition of freedom, this purity of soul, which shall bind heart to heart, and make them in every respect one. 'Tis a narrow view to say even "my child," "my husband," "my wife." Persons will not combine seeking their own, but the highest good of each and all. Legalism will be unknown, and true conjugalism will take its place.

6. There will come a willingness to labor without hope of fee or reward, and yet love's labor will always yield a rich harvest.

7. A willingness to continue in the mortal body, or to depart therefrom, and they who have combined for high and holy purposes will say, amen, "so let it be."

Happy, thrice happy will it be, when those who understand the relations existing between persons in the spirit life, and the earthly condition, that their efforts may be combined, that their may be union—interchanges—interblendings.

The address concluded by proposing the establishment of an office in this City for a centre of conference and cooperation.

Mrs. WICKER addressed the meeting upon the special mission of woman in the present epoch, and she was followed by Mr. S. P. ANDREWS, HENRY CLAPP, JR., and others.

Rev. CHARLES SPEAR announced that to day there would be a new system of architecture, a new system of government, and new plans of motive power explained and illustrated, which had been revealed by the spirits. An electrical machine of curious construction, was set in motion at the close of the meeting, which excited some curiosity. The meeting adjourned to 10 o'clock this morning.

THE MORMONS.

A New Acknowledgment of Mormon Doctrine.

In a sermon delivered by Elder ORSON HYDE, at the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, the marriage of Jesus Christ was distinctly set forth as a part of the Mormon belief. The sermon is reported in the Deseret News of March 18. Elder HYDE said:—

It will be borne in mind that once on a time there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee; and on a careful reading of that transaction, it will be discovered that no less a person than Jesus Christ was married on that occasion. If he were never married, his intimacy with Mary and Martha, and the other Mary also whom Jesus loved, must have been highly unbecoming and improper, to say the best of it.

I will venture to say, that if Jesus Christ were now to pass through the most populous countries in Christendom with a train of women, such as used to follow Him, fondling about him, combing his hair, anointing him with his precious ointment, washing his feet with tears, and wiping them with the hair of their heads, and moreover, or even modest he would be mobbed, tarred and feathered, and rode, not on an ass, but on a rail. What did the old prophet mean, when he said, (speaking of Christ,) "He shall see his seed, prolong his days, &c.?" Did Jesus consider it necessary to fulfill every righteous command or requirement of his Father? He most certainly did. This he witnessed by submitting to baptism under the hands of John. "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness," said he. Was it God's commandment to man, in the beginning, to multiply and replenish the earth? None can deny this, neither that it was a righteous command; for, upon an obedience to this, depended the perpetuity of our race. Did Christ come to destroy the law or the prophets, or to fulfill them? He came to fulfill. Did he multiply, and die to see his seed? Did he honor his Father's law by complying with it, or did he not? Others may do as they like; but I will not charge our Saviour with neglect or transgression in this or any other case.

At this doctrine, the long-faced hypocrite and the sanctimonious bigot will profanely cry blasphemy! Horrid perversion of God's work! Wicked wretch! He is not fit to live! &c. &c. But the wise and reflecting will consider, read and pray. "If God be not our Father, grandfather or great grandfather, or some kind of a father in reality, in deed and in truth, why are we taught to say "Our Father who art in heaven." How much soever of holy horror this doctrine may excite in persons not impregnated with the blood of Christ, and whose minds are consequently dark and benighted, it may excite still more when they are told that if none of the natural blood of Christ flows in their veins, they are not the chosen or seed of God. Object not therefore too strongly against the marriage of Christ; but remember that in the last days, secret and hidden things must come to light, and that your life also (which is the blood) is hid with Christ in God.

Abraham was chosen of God for the purpose of raising up a chosen seed and a peculiar people unto his name. Jesus Christ was sent into the world for a similar purpose but upon a more extended scale. Christ was the seed of Abraham, so reckoned. To these, great promises were made; one of which was, that in Abraham and in his seed, which was Christ, all the families of the earth should be blessed. When? When the ungodly or those not of their seed should be cut off from the earth, and no family remaining on earth except their own seed. Then in Abraham and in Christ, all the families and kindreds of the earth will be blessed—Satan bound, and the millenium fully come. Then the meek will inherit the earth, and God's elect reign undisturbed, at least, for one thousand years.

A DEFENCE OF POLYGAMY.

In the same discourse Elder HYDE defends polygamy as follows:

It is true that the people of Utah believe in and practice polygamy. Not because our natural desires lead us into that condition and state of life; but because our God hath commanded it, and wishing to comply with that, as well as all others of his commands, we are as we are. We also wish to be counted Abraham's children, to whom the promises were made, and also with whom the covenants were established; and being told that if we are the children of Abraham, we will do the works of Abraham, we are not a little anxious to do as he did. Among other things that he did, he took more than one wife. In this he was not alone; for this example was copied by most of the ancient worthies and others who succeeded him under the same everlasting covenant. Even the wisest and best men—men after God's own heart, entered the most deeply into this practice. Nor was this practice limited to the days of the Old Testament.

THE MORMONS A PERSECUTED PEOPLE.

Again, Brother ORSON says, in regard to the allegations against the Mormons:

"Are we everywhere spoken against? Is almost every newspaper and journal, with a thousand and one anonymous letter writers, pouring forth their spleen, animadversions and maledictions upon the Saints in Utah? Do they wish and intend to blow up a storm—a tempest to burst upon our heads with all the fury of the combined elements to sweep us from the face of the earth? Or secretly and under cover do they intend to rig a purchase to pray upon the peace and happiness of the Saints who have fled from the face of the "serpent," unprotected and unredressed, to this desolate land, to which no other people would come until after we came and killed the snakes—built the bridges—proved the country—raised bread and built houses for them to come to? A tender where no other people can or will dwell should the Mormons leave it!

Why this hatred and ill-will against you? What have you done to provoke it? We have rebuked iniquity; and, in some instances, in rather high places. But the the real cause is explained by our Saviour: "Ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hate you."

Remember that God not only rules the storm, but visits the secret chambers. He can hush the storm, and say to the winds, "Peace, be still," and catch the fowler in his own snare.

The professed purity of this generation will not allow the institutions of Utah to exist unmolested, if they can devise any scheme to disturb them."

SERIOUS ACCIDENT AT THE BRICK CHURCH.—Saturday morning while two gentlemen were standing on a portion of the foundation walls of the old Brick Church, which had been recently undermined, the wall fell downward, precipitating them a distance of fifteen or twenty feet upon a heap of stones. One of the gentlemen was severely bruised, and was immediately conveyed to his home in a carriage. The other, Mr. RITCHIE, of Boston, the owner of the lots on the site of the old Church fronting on Beekman-street, was attended to Lovejoy's Hotel, where he is stopping, and had the blood and dust washed from his person. He received some cuts and bruises, but was not seriously hurt. No bones were broken in either case. Several persons had a narrow escape by this fall. At 2 o'clock the corner wall, that has been standing alone for a fortnight past, was thrown over to the great delight of a great crowd of spectators. The undermining had been carried as far as was deemed safe. The workmen then rigged a long shore under and against, and by means of a jack screw gave the whole mass a cant that brought it slowly but beautifully to the ground. It is a marvel worth recording that so few mishaps have come of the demolition of this tall and solid old Brick Church.

HUDSON RIVER AND ERIE RAILROADS.—The Summer arrangement of the Hudson River Road goes into effect to-day. The following is the arrangement for the departure of the trains:

The Summer arrangement of the Erie Road also goes into effect to day. The way train will run as usual, but the express train for Dunkirk and Buffalo will run hereafter at 8 A. M., 11 A. M. and 5 P. M.

Marine Matters.

DISASTER TO A NEW-YORK SHIP.—Advices from Shelburne, N. S., by telegraph on Saturday, state that the passenger ship Robert L. Lane, of New York, from Liverpool with 600 hundred emigrants, struck on Brazil rock, off Cape Sable, on the night of the 21st inst., and backed off again in a leaky state. About 300 women and children were put on board a schooner at sea, and were carried into Shelburne, on Friday evening, all well. By hard pumping, the ship also reached Shelburne on Saturday, with loss of rudder and with other damage.

The location of the sunken wreck of the bark Byron, in the Lower Bay, is to be designated by a buoy. See notice to Mariners.

The immense iron steamer, the Great Eastern, it is announced, will sail from Milford Haven, as there is no other harbor in Great Britain with sufficient depth of water to accommodate her. The dock and storehouses for her use, at Portland, are in preparation.

☞ POWERS' Greek Slave, which was drawn at the Cosmopolitan Art Union, by Mrs. KATE GILLESPIE, of Virginia, is to be sold, at the Merchants' Exchange on the 23d of June.

☞ On Saturday a man by the name of RONNELLS was arrested for obstructing a street in the Fourteenth Ward. He will doubtless be fined. He had appropriated about one-half of the street to his own especial benefit. Mr. RUNNELLS, by the way, is only one of a thousand offenders in this way.

Coroners' Inquests.

DESTITUTION, DESPAIR, SUICIDE.—A Scotchwoman, a widow, aged 28 years, committed suicide yesterday, at the house No. 144 Elm street, occupied by one EDWARD HENRY and others. An inquest was held upon the body by Coroner HILLS. In the pocket of deceased was found a piece of paper addressed: "To those that may find my body after death," upon which was written the following:

"The reason of me comiting this rash act in taking my own life, I was living with Judge GAWTREE, in Connecticut, and left the week before Crismas, and came to live or hord with Edward HENRY; he and his wife made me take drink and spen all my money. They also robed me of all my clothes and turned me out of doors, and I went to work; and the second time they enticed me to com back again, and robe'd me again, like wise breaking my carieter. I have no friends heare, so I lay my death at their door.

MARGRET REID A. BERRY."

Several occupants of the house were examined.

A physician, who was present, said the paper from which one of the witnesses said deceased "had taken something" was labeled arsenic, and he believed from external appearances and the history of the case that the deceased came to her death by taking arsenic.

The Jury rendered a verdict of "Suicide by taking arsenic."

DEATH FROM BURNS.—The young man, EDWARD FOLEY, who was so badly burned on the 9th inst., in the stable No. 64 James street, in which he was sleeping, when a fire broke out therein, died on Saturday, at the New-York Hospital. The Coroner held an inquest on the body. A verdict was rendered in accordance with the facts. Deceased was a native of Ireland, and only 17 years of age.

LONG ISLAND.

THE SHEEPSHEAD BAY RAPE CASES.—JACKSON, who was sentenced to State Prison for 10 years on Saturday last, will be taken to Sing Sing to-day. During his confinement he has been visited almost daily by his wife, who furnished him with little necessaries to render his position as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. It is rumored that Mrs JACKSON was much imposed upon before Sheriff STEVENS took charge of the jail, by those then in charge, who demanded of her a fee of twenty-five cents before they would permit her to enter the jail. No one supposes that Sheriff BURSON was knowing to those transactions. JACKSON has spent in his defence nearly all of his money, having left only about $600, which sum his wife proposes to take to the Western country, purchase a small farm and build up a home in the hope of again being joined by her husband. Her devotion during this trial has excited the sympathy of many people, and a subscription has been started to enable her to carry out her plan of securing a home in the West. The stevedores have taken the matter in hand, and she will undoubtedly be made comfortable.

The complaining witnesses—CATHARINE SULLIVAN and JANE BULLION—will be discharged upon their own recognizances to-day. The former goes with a brother in New-York, and the latter to her relatives in Baltimore.

There are four more parties connected with this outrage, who remain untried.

FOUND DROWNED.—The body of an unknown man, apparently a sailor, was found in the water at Fox's Dock, Brooklyn, yesterday morning. Deceased was 5 feet 8 inches high, long hair, laid on top of head, and had on a thick blue shirt, a white cotton shirt, overalls, dark pants, drawers, gray stockings, and thick boots. Coroner REDDING will hold an inquest to-day, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

☞ J. R. STAFFORD'S OLIVE TAR is a concentrated extract which is applied and inhaled; it is the only fluid that contains electro-magnetism, which it imparts to the system, increasing its vitality, enabling it to expel pain and disease. STAFFORD'S OINTMENT and POWDERS cure all diseases of impure blood. The Ointment is made of J. R. STAFFORD'S Olive Tar, diluted with mutton tallow. The Powders are a new combination of sulphur and iron with sugar of milk; the taste is agreeable; they do not sicken nor purge, but act directly upon the blood. The following are the names of a few well known persons who have used the above, and who commend their use as indicated, for diseases of the throat, lungs, nerves, muscles, joints, skin, &c.:

MONDAY, May 25—A. M.

The Foreign Trade at the port of New-York for the past week amounted, in the Import entries, including the Dry Goods table in our last paper, to $2,723,745, against $3,280,535 the week ending May 24 last year. The Exports of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods were $1,625,573, against $1,608,969 the corresponding week last year. The direct Export of Specie, principally in Spanish Coin to the West Indies, amounted to $359,167, against $222,723 the same week in 1856. The Boston steamer cleared on Wednesday for Liverpool with $1,066,000 in Gold, principally for New-York account, against $774,000 in the same direction by the corresponding steamer last May. The steamer Arago, from Havre, brought in $185,000 in Spanish Coin, and the Sub-Treasury disbursed over the receipts of the week $222,981; the balance standing on Saturday P. M. $13,556,264, against $13,778,645 at the close of the previous week. The foregoing movement, without reference to the interior exchanges, shows an apparent difference of $1,011,786 against the Bank reserve; but as the last average of $12,543,674 was probably a rising one at the close of the previous week, the statement to be made up this afternoon is not expected to average below $12,000,000. An increased export movement is looked for the present week, as two direct steamers sail for Europe on Wednesday and Saturday, while on the other hand the half-monthly California packet of May 5, with a million and a half or two millions of bullion, will be due by Thursday or Friday. The Money market ruled easy through the week, as well for discounts as at call, and considerable balances were held over by private lenders on Saturday for want of employment. General trade is dull, and new enterprises, except in the way of City building improvements, are neglected. Mercantile payments at Bank are met with remarkable punctuality, notwithstanding some real complaints and much unreal croaking are heard in regard to the financial condition and trade of the Northwest. Foreign bills show very little change: London, 109¼@109⅝; Paris, 5.18¾@5.17½.

According to the official Custom House record of the Foreign trade at New-York for the calendar months of April, and one summary, by months, from the beginning of the current fiscal year, 1st July, 1856, to the 1st inst., which we published a few days since, the Import of Foreign Merchandise at this port for the ten months (exclusive of foreign coin and bullion,)

Amounted to	$187,105,000

Total to date	$199,654,352
Against same time in 1856	172,395,164

By the same tables the Exports of Domestic Prodnce and Miscellaneous Goods, including Foreign goods reëxported—

Total to date	$73,914,149

The Stock Exchange during the past week was active in the dealings, and fluctuating and unsettled at the close in prices; though most of the interest and excitement shown on the list were confined to four or five descriptions. Toward the end of the week, the contest on Southern Michigan Common Stock became quite animated, the Speculators against the market putting out large contracts at very wide differences from the cash price where their own options, at 30 or 60 days were accepted, while the Bulls, encouraged by the striking confidence recently manifested by the large and highly responsible proprietary of the Road, in relieving its finance of all appearance of embarrassment, purchased freely for the advance. Since the second board on Wednesday the sales have been ex privilege, the privilege counting from 4 to 6 ₰ cent., according to the relative value put upon the new guaranteed stock for which an exchange of one-fifth, or 20 ₰ cent. of the old, has been made. The sales of the latter, on Saturday, were over 6,000 shares, the cash stock being scarce at 61 ₰ cent., while the Bears were eager sellers at 60 ₰ cent., seller 30 days, and 59@58¾ ₰ cent., seller 60 days. On the other hand, the latter class of operators have been more than successful in breaking down New-York and Erie shares, which sold, for the first time in three years, largely below 40 ₰ cent., the decline to 36 ₰ cent. on Friday having carried down a broker who had been representing some heavy contracts for outside buyers. This failure was made known on Saturday afternoon, when the usual panic slaughter, in settlement of the contracts of the party, was gone through with. The lowest point touched was 32 ₰ cent., from which the price almost immediately rallied to 34 ₰ cent. The market for other Railroad stock was made to sympathize with this movement to the extent of ½, and in one or two instances 1 ₰ cent. The fluctuations of the day and week most remarkable are:

Among the Stocks not actively dealt in, Pacific Mail Steamship advanced 5@6 per cent, closing at 71, ex-dividend, and the shares of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road went down to 95 per cent. Panama, Rock Island, Delaware and Hudson and Pennsylvania Coal all firm, and ½@1 per cent higher; Galena and Chicago dull, a few shares selling at 97¾ on Saturday. The Shorts in Illinois Central had several times to pay 140 per cent. cash to make their deliveries, though subsequently renewing their contracts for another turn, seller 30 or 60 days at 137@136. There was much borrowing of several other Stocks to make deliveries at the close of the week. The general market left off unsettled, prices recovering from the panic at the opening of the Second Board. The present week promises another exciting time.

The Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad Company have just issued their ninth Annual Report for the year 1856, including the estimates for the current year. From this document and some explanatory notes derived from the officers of the Company, to the present date, we learn that the cost of both sections of the work—one only of which was operated up to near the close of last year—is

In Capital Stock	$3,076,814
Funded Debt	3,837,900
Together	$7,814,614
Loan on $30,000, Beever Co. Bonds	20,000
Total	$7,834,614

Represented by

Construction	$6,949,910
Equipment	694,990
Real Estate, Cleveland	190,240—$7,835,140

We understand the present floating or unfinished debt of the Company to amount to less than a hundred thousand dollars, and this sum not yet due: certainly a favorable feature in a concern involving nearly eight millions. On the face of the balance sheet, as it stood the 1st January, the miscellaneous or unfunded accounts of the Company pro and con., stood:

To contractors, and for ties, spikes, &c	$117,780
Bills for iron, equipment, &c	217,658
Balance of income account	19,760
Together	$355,198
Balances due from other roads	$135,123
Beaver Co. Bonds, margin	10,000
Bills, materials, &c	209,550—$354,673

Thus making the general balance sheet:

Dr. funded as above	$7,834,614
Miscellaneous	355,198
Total	$8,189,813
Cr. cost of road	$7,835,140
Miscellaneous	354,673
Total	$8,189,813

The two divisions of the Road are known as the main Cleveland line, 97 miles, and the Ohio River or Wheeling Extension, 94 miles. The former only was operated in 1856. The Extension was not opened through until the close of the year. It was built chiefly by local subscription, County and individual, and the stock made free of dividend until completion. The earnings of the year 1856 were, therefore, as near as may be, on a cost,

In Funded Debt, paying 7 ₰ cent	$2,590,000
Capital, payable in Scrip	2,140,000
Together	$4,640,000
Gross Traffic	$629,972
Expenses	298,630
Net Earnings	$331,342
Income Balance from 1855	35,986—$367,328
7 ₰ cent. Interest on $2,590,000	$174,856
9 ₰ cent. in Scrip on $2,140,000	192,712—$367,568
Income Balance to 1857, as above	$19,760

The Extension subscriptions now become common stock, and that part of the debt incurred in the extension of the line to Wheeling is also made common, and both included in the foregoing general balance-sheet.

The future policy of the Company will be to pay Cash Dividends. With the full and efficient working of the extended line, (which can scarcely be appreciated until after the first half of the present year,) the Board of Directors estimate for an average gross revenue of $100,000 a month, justifying, at the low rate of expense at which the line is operated, an income to the stock of 8 ₰ cent. ₰ annum. Thus far in 1857 the relative earnings have been—

	1857	vs.	1856.
January	$42,417		$32,969
February	42,876		22,933
March	55,847		32,625
April	85,273		51,473
Total for four months	$225,913		$130,005

The management of the Company is under the Direction of CHARLES W. ROCKWELL, President, JAMES T. SOUTTER and GEORGE H. KELSEY, of the Bank of the Republic, and BENJAMIN C. LEE, of JAMES LEE & Co., Bankers, all of New-York; H. C. KINGSLEY, of New-Haven; Z FITCH, J. F. CLARK, JAMES FARMER, and HENRY W. CLARK, of Cleveland; JOSHUA HANNA and WILLIAM M. LYON, of Pittsburg, and S. BRADY, of Wheeling. The Dividend terms of the Company are half-yearly, July and January.

The well-known cashier of Messrs. DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co., Mr. A. N. LEWIS, who has been in Wall-street over 20 years, and Mr. THEODORE STOUT, also with Messrs. D., S. & Co. since the commencement of their business, have just established themselves as Loan, Exchange and Stock Brokers, and will issue in a few days the following strong card of recommendation. They have certainly the best wishes of all their friends for success.

NEW-YORK, June 1, 1857,
DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co.'s BUILDING.

We beg leave to announce to you that we have formed a copartnership under the name and firm of A. N. LEWIS & THEODORE STOUT, for the transacting of a General Banking Business, including the negotiating of Loans, Foreign and Domestic Exchange, Mercantile Paper, the buying and selling of Stocks, Bonds, &c. Our experience in the house of Messrs. DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co. from the commencement of their business until the present time, to whom we take pleasure in referring, affords us peculiar advantages for conducting the business we propose. Particular attention will be given to orders for the purchase and sale of Stocks and Bonds and Foreign Exchange. Collections made on all parts of the country upon the most favorable terms. In addition to the above reference we present, by permission, the following: J. T. SOUTTER, Esq., of the Bank of the Republic; JAMES BARNES, of the Merchants' Exchange Bank; WILLIAM B. ASTOR, Esq., and Hon. WM. KENT, of New York; EBASTUS CORNING, Esq., of Albany; and CHAS. H. FISHER, Esq., of Philadelphia.

We omitted, at the proper time, to state that the new Artizens' Bank, having filled up its capital of $600,000, has been admitted to the Clearing House.

The New-York excursionists for the opening ceremonies of the important line of railway between the cities of Cincinnati and St. Louis, will leave here on or a few days after the 26th inst., to be at Cincinnati by 3d June. The occasion will no doubt prove as interesting as the event it is to commemorate is important to the trade of the Great West. The cities of Charleston, South Carolina, and Memphis, Tennessee, have just celebrated a similar event in the railway connections of the South and South West. The Ohio and Mobile line, to connect the Lakes of the Northwest, with the Gulf ports of the Southwest, by joining the Illinois Central at Cairo, is being slowly but prudently built, and thus far mainly by local aid. The last report shows 197 miles out of Mobile in operation, and a large amount of work accomplished on the upper sections, of which 242 miles are ready for the iron. The expenditure, thus far, is $8,340,429, derived from

Capitol paid in	$3,155,129
Not revenue of the road	493,143
Sold of Alabama and Tennessee	1,691,710
Unfunded debt of the Company	1,994,959
Sale of lands and lots	1,965,489
Total	$9,340,429

Mr. J. SMITH HOMANS, of the Bankers Magazine, No. 162 Pearl-street, has just issued a third edition of his valuable Manual for Notaries Public, with the latest statutes and decisions in all the States on the subject of Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes. The new law of New York on Days of Grace, is copied on page 208 This act, we may add, in reply to the inquiry of a correspondent, attaches only to sight bills and to all post bills or checks on banks and bankers doing business under the banking laws of New York. It will not attach to bills of exchange or post checks on private bankers, like DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co. or WINSLOW, LANIER & Co., although drawn by banks or bankers doing business under the banking laws of this or any other State. Bills drawn at two months date run to the end of the two calendar months embraced within its time, whether 59 days as in February and March, or 62 days as in July and August; and if not made on banks or bankers within the law, carry the usual three days' grace.

A correspondent calls attention to a singular blunder, not to say hull, which is going the rounds of the press, about the Mint Coinage. The paragraph assumes that the new silver coins will be kept "from exportation and absorption for manufacturing purposes," because they are made to bear a legal value five or ten ₰ cent. "below their value as metal." Our correspondent says he finds the paragraph in the Herald. Very likely.

The April receipts of the Pennsylvania Railroad, says the Philadelphia Bulletin of Saturday, are large, though not equal to those of April last year. The following is the statement:

From freight	$328,380 77
From passengers	163,745 89
Total	$492,126 56
Same month last year	549 645 61
Decrease 1857	$57,538 75

The same journal remarks of the new banking capital erected in Pennsylvania:

The increase of the banking capital of this State, authorized by the Legislature that has just adjourned, is shown in the following statement of the new banks chartered:

	Capital.
Union Bank, Philadelphia	$500,000
Corn Exchange Bank, Philadelphia	500,000
Commonwealth Bank, Philadelphia	500,000
Union Bank, Reading	500,000
Iron City Bank, Pittsburg	500,000
Allegheny Bank, Allegheny	500,000
Catasauqua Bank, Catasauqua	400,000
Kittanning Bank, Kittanning	300,000
Tioga County Bank, Wellsboro	200,000
Bank of Pottstown, Pottstown	200,000
Central Bank, Hollidaysburg	300,000
Pittston Bank, Pittston	200,000
Beaver Bank, Beaver	150,000
Jersey Shore Bank, Jersey Shore	100,000
Crawford County Bank, Meadville	150,000
Lebanon Valley Bank, Lebanon	200,000
Bank of Shamokin, Shamokin	150,000
Bank of Chester Valley, Coatesville	100,000
Eighteen new Banks	$5,510,000

In addition to this, the capital of several existing banks has been increased about a million of dollars; so that, without including several new Savings Institutions, whose capital we are not informed of, we make the new banking capital of the State amount to | $8,510,000
Add former banking capital | 23,675,000
Present Banking Capital of Pennsylvania | $30,095,000

Cincinnati Money and Stock Market.

From the Circular of Hewson & Holmes, May 20.

There is very little variation in the general aspect of the Stock market, as compared with last week; transactions have been more limited and prices have hardly been sustained.

Little Miami shares have not been in as active request as usual, with sales at 94@96. Hamilton and Dayton is quiet, with sales at 65. Indianapolis and Cincinnati shares have sold at 63. The earnings of this road for April were nearly 12 ₰ cent. in excess of the earnings of the same month last year; this, in view of the general falling off in the earnings of nearly all Western roads for April, is doing remarkably well, and ought to give the friends of this Company increased confidence in its securities. Ohio and Mississippi shares have been sold at last week's currency. We note sales of Ohio Central shares at 15, Dayton and Western at 20, and Farmers' Bank of Kentucky stock at 120.

In Bonds the movement has been very steady. We report the usual amount of sales without variation from our last quotations.

Money affairs are slightly easier, but borrowers still have difficulty in placing any but first class names.

The weather in the past week has been dismal, affecting prejudicially all kinds of business. Vegetation is a month later than usual. We have now, however, the indications of seasonable weather.

VOL. VI.....NO. 1773 NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1857. PRICE TWO CENTS.

AFFAIRS IN UTAH.

Interesting Letter from Judge Drummond—Interference of the Mormons with the Courts of Law.

WILLARD'S HOTEL, WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Friday, May 22, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

MY DEAR SIR: In your valuable paper under date of the 20th inst., I find a communication over my signature under date of May 4, 1857, from Chicago, Ill., in which I make reference to an affidavit of Mr. H. A. WATSON, which was inclosed with the communication, that had special reference to that want of fidelity which seems to characterize many of the American latter-day clergy, and Elder FERRAMORZ LITTLE in particular—as Mr. WATSON had been a member of this peculiar and new-fangled Divinity, he was only so well prepared, from a real knowledge of the scenes behind the curtain where the treasonable degrees are conferred, called Degrees of Endowment, to speak from the Record; since it was that the affidavit of Mr. WATSON was sent for the sole purpose of setting Elder LITTLE in proper light on the subject of his relation and direct duties to the "Latter Day Saints," but from cause or reason to me unexplained, the communication was inserted and the affidavit omitted. Now, I wished you to insert both the communication and affidavit at the same time, for the reason that the one is an essential part of the other.

In connection with these lawless and treasonable creatures now inhabiting Utah Territory, it is proper for me to make an explanation for the benefit of the many readers of your paper, in relation to the breaking up of the Court in Salt Lake City in February last past.

Some of your correspondents from Salt Lake, in speaking of the unblushing impudence of HOSEA STOUT at the time Judge STILES' Court was adjourned for him by an armed mob, said that "Mr. STOUT was the attorney for the Government, appointed by the authority at Washington." This is not the fact; Mr. STOUT never was appointed by the President, but after Gen. HOLMAN, of Iowa, returned from Utah, Mr. STOUT was at different Terms of Court appointed United States District-Attorney pro tem., by express order of the Court, but it is true that in A. D. 1855 Mr. STOUT got up an application for the office of United States District Attorney for Utah, which petition was signed by Gov. BRIGHAM YOUNG and A. W. BABBITT, and was also presented to Judge KING, Gen. BURR, Dr. HURT and myself for our signatures, but after we explained to Mr. STOUT the fact of there being a secret oath-bound organization in the Mormon Church to resist the execution of the laws and federal authority in Utah Territory, together with the further fact that the Mormons were hostile to the then Administration and President PIERCE in particular, that it was useless for him to make the application, as he would not succeed, and that if he did get the appointment that he could not fully discharge his duty to the Government, country and laws of Congress, for the simple reason that he had again and again sworn in Mormon Lodge Rooms to do all in his power to thwart the ends of the law save those of the Mormon Law, or Higher Priesthood; and that, as we were severally advised, and believed, that such was the true state of the case, we could not, in justice to President PIERCE, the Democratic Party, nor to ourselves, recommend him for the office; and that he was doing a great wrong to ask for an office which he had sworn in advance not to execute with fidelity, but to resist and destroy, if possible to do so; whereupon Mr. STOUT concluded that his oath of office as an Elder in the Church, and his duty to the Church as a faithful member of the "Danite Band," was wholly irreconcilable with that of any office in the gift of the Federal Government, and that, as he could not absolve his allegiance to the Church and "Denite Band," it was highly improper for him to hold the commission of Attorney for the Government in Utah Territory. Indeed, Mr. STOUT, as well as J. A. KELTING, A. P. CHESLEY, W. M. WALL, T. S. WILLIAMS, W. A. HICKMAN, ALMERIN GROW and JOSEPH L. HEYWOOD, all lawyers, never pretended but that their oaths in the lodge-room where they receive endowment degrees, were more binding upon them than the oath of office as Attorneys-at-Law, and frankly said that the sole object of being licensed attorneys was to carry the parchment with them when they went into Gentile communities or into foreign countries as missionaries, as evidence of good character at home, and at this day there are two of those Mormon lawyers now in foreign countries as Mormon Elders, preaching Mormonism, to wit ANDREW J. STEWART and ALMERIN GROW, who were suspended from the practice of the law in Utah Territory by the federal Judges for base and dishonorable conduct in their profession, and to rebut this the Mormons have suspended General BURR, who is the pink of honor.

The present Government Attorney for Utah Territory is Hon. JOHN M. HOCKADAY, who is a gentleman of fine sense, a good lawyer, a ripe scholar, and a bold, fearless and faithful man, and above all and over all, faithful to the Constitution of his country and laws of the land. But, as Mr. HOCKADAY has been harassed for years by those Mormons, and at last by the most unjust and outrageous manner cheated and swindled out of his princely fortune by those land pirates, I fear that he too will resign his commission and cease his official labors, which would be disastrous to the new Judges who may go there under the present Administration. I frankly bear testimony to the honesty and integrity of General BURR, Surveyor-General of Utah Territory, of Hon. GARLAND HURT, the Indian Agent, as well as of Mr. HOCKADAY, having seen all those gentlemen repeatedly placed in the most fearfully dangerous situations in their official as well as social capacities while in that desperate community, and in each and all cases found them equal to every crisis and emergency. I certainly would be guilty of rank injustice did I not most fully give to each of those gentlemen full credit for their high toned courage, good sense, and strict regard for the positions they severally occupy in public life, and have no hesitation in saying that the removal of those men would be followed with disastrous consequences to the country and the Administration, and at the same time that their lives are in hourly danger at the hands of a band of lawless assassins the most cruel on earth.

I am, respectfully yours, W. W. DRUMMOND.

Mr. Watson's Affidavit.

The following is the affidavit referred to in Judge DRUMMOND's letter. It was accidentally omitted upon the publication of the former communication:

State of Illinois, County of Cook, ss.—HIRAM A. WATSON, being first duly sworn on oath, says, that he is well acquainted with FERRAMORZ LITTLE of Great Salt Lake City in Utah Territory; that this affiant was once a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, (commonly called Mormons) and lived in Great Salt Lake City for near three years, during which time he took three endowment degrees in the Church, and that he knows from the oath and secret organization in the Mormon Church, that Mr. LITTLE as well as all other male members of the Church of the same degree and standing in the Church, have taken such oaths and obligations as to bind them to obey implicitly in the form of Government in the United States that is enjoined with Judge W. W. DRUMMOND, the Judge in Utah Territory, how soon the letter of resignation in effect, and that from what he knows of Mormonism I can fully vouch for much that Judge DRUMMOND charged against the Mormon hierarchy of treason, and that from what he has heard from reliable information he believes the allegations true; that he knows FERRAMORZ LITTLE to be sworn under the laws of the country, and that said LITTLE is bound by his oath to the Mormon Priesthood to contradict the charges and statements of Judge DRUMMOND, as well as all other Federal officers, otherwise Mormonism, be they ever so true, or forfeit his life to the hands of Mormon assassins for failing to contradict the statements of Gentiles, and that the said LITTLE has often aided and abetted in the commission of murders at the request of his brother-in-law, BRIGHAM YOUNG, and that it is a part of the church-duty, of the whole Church, to murder and put out of the way all who may question the authority of the Church, or disobey the will of BRIGHAM YOUNG; and that the secret organization of the Church is one of determined hatred to the American people, and particularly to the Constitution and laws of the United States; and that Mormonism teaches a Church member neither to obey nor respect any man in office or authority under the laws of the United States, or any of them, unless that officer be a Mormon, and that he is bound to execute the will of the Church, and disobey the law of the land, or lose his life according to the law of the Mormon Church, and further this deponent saith not.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of April, 1857. H. A. WATSON.

W. L. CHURCH, Clerk of Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois.

Col. Thomas L. Kane on Mormonism.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

As this young man KANE is still laboring in the dark, still willing to believe a lie, it may not be amiss to inquire why it is that he now gratuitously and voluntarily asks to be heard by the present Administration before his bosom friend, and mild, meek, and humble Christian companion BRIGHAM YOUNG, is removed from the office of Governor of Utah. Not satisfied with the fraud and imposition perpetrated on FILLMORE'S Administration in writing the strongest possible indorsement of YOUNG'S honesty, competency, and devotion to the Constitution, all of which was proven wholly untrue, even now, when the whole country is excited and agitated with the oft-repeated wrongs and multiplied crimes of BRIGHAM and his Danite followers, this same young man again writes to the President, and asks to be heard in behalf of the Mormons. He again proposes to enter the witness stand upon general Mormon principles, and deny the many charges preferred against them, not by one man only, but to invalidate the evidence of not only all the officers under both FILLMORE'S and PIERCE'S Administrations, (save those who belong to the Church,) but to enter a special denial as against all the emigrents who have passed by Salt Lake en route to California, and who have been robbed, plundered, and otherwise ill-treated. It is said that consistency is a jewel, and in this Col. KANE seems determined to be consistent in thus giving a good character to the Mormons generally, and to BRIGHAM YOUNG in particular. But while it is highly commendable to be consistent, is it not equally as commendable to be truthful and honest? If so, what honesty is there in Col. KANE'S now taking the witness stand before the people of the United States and testifying to that about which he is most cruelly ignorant? Has he been in Utah Territory for four years? Has he been an eye-witness to anything going on in Utah since he left there? Certainly he would not risk his standing for truth and veracity by affirmatively answering these questions. Then would it not be wholly gratuitous for him to take the bold ground that because he is the advocate and friend of Mormonism his word is worth more than the evidence of all the witnesses who bear incontestible evidence of the Treason and high-handed rebellion now existing in Utah, and which really has existed for twelve long years in the bosom of that church.

But did not Col. K. know that BRIGHAM YOUNG was a fugitive from justice at the time he so highly recommended him for Governor of Utah? He says he was with the Mormons at Nauvoo; if so, did he not know that his friend YOUNG had been indicted for making and passing the current coin of the United States, in the United States District Court of Illinois, Hon. Judge POPE presiding? If he answers that he did not know it, he certainly shows a degree of ignorance in bearing unqualified evidence of good character without a knowledge of the record. But he can easily resort to the usual Mormon plea of Gentile persecution, and say it is false, and that he does not believe it.

Again, he says: "BRIGHAM YOUNG drove an ox-team, and carried a sick child in his arms to Deseret." Let us remind him that here his memory is again at fault, and call his attention to the fact that a man by the name of THOMAS S. JOHNSON had the honor of driving a fine carriage in which BRIGHAM YOUNG rode to Deseret.

While it is true that Col. KANE was cajoled and fed and pampered by the Mormons at Nauvoo, and a town called "Kanesville" in honor of the distinguished youth, and he invited to visit "the peaceful valley of the Mormons," that he might be sent as Delegate to Congress from Utah or Deseret; it is equally true that there were many others who have had as extensive opportunities of seeing the Mormons in their true light as Col. KANE, and whose opportunities for years last past have been positive and direct, while the Colonel's information has been of a very doubtful character, to say the least of it. Then why does he insist upon arraying himself in direct opposition, not only to the facts, but in direct opposition to the records of the country? Certainly nothing but a blind and fanatical zeal for a false doctrine, and false devotion to false believers, could induce him to take such a course.

Upon the examination of his writings he will find that he has positively denied that Polygamy existed in, or was a cardinal doctrine of, Mormonism. Again, he has said, "I not only meant to deny that the Mormons in any wise fall below our own standard of morals, but I will be distinctly understood to ascribe to those of their number with whom I associated in the West a general correctness of deportment above the average of other communities." In the same lecture he refers to his associations with H. C. KIMBALL and Dr. WILLARD RICHARDS in particular. Now, Sir, I venture the assertion that Col. KANE would not introduce those men or either of them to any gentlemen of refinement, for the very reason that they were so coarse, vulgar and ill-bred in their appearance and conversation as to directly insult the dignity of any gentleman, and Col. KANE well knows the fact. As soon as he lectures the President on his duties on Mormonism, I may refer to him again, but trust the necessity will not exist.

Recapture of Children Stolen by Mormons—Elder Pratt in Custody.

From the St. Louis Evening News, May 19.

About two months ago we published an account of the kidnapping of several children by the Mormons at New-Orleans. The father was absent at the time in California, and the mother, who had been deluded by the Saints, lent herself to the infamous scheme by which her own children were to be ruined. The kidnappers started with the children from New Orleans to go through Texas, Arkansas and the Indian Nation to the Salt Lake trail, but were fortunately intercepted by the father, who, having heard of the affair, had returned, and started in pursuit of them. The following letter is from him to his friends in this city, and gives some of the particulars of the arrest:

FORT GIBSON, CHEROKEE NATION,
Monday, May 7, 1857.

DEAR FRIENDS: I have just arrived from a scout in pursuit of which I succeeded in coming up with ELEANOR and the children, and have taken the children from her by force. I have placed ELEANOR in charge of the United States Marshal, and have succeeded also in arresting PRATT, who is now in the guard house of the Fort. The United States Marshal will start with the prisoners for Van Buren to-morrow, and I will, by a different route, in company of Captain CARLTON and lady, leave with the children for the same place. I directed PRATT and Lady, on charge of ELEANOR—in stealing the children on the children, which kidnapped, to be taken up again. This is the only way I could reach them in these Territories. When I left before the United States Commissioner at Van Buren, I mean to have PRATT arrested for the benefit of justice from St. Louis, Mo., and get a requisition from the Governor of Missouri for him. You are fully posted. See SABONI and inform me forthwith of the best manner of proceeding.

Thank God for the goodness. Yours truly,

H. H. McLEAN.

WHAT THE COUNCILMEN THINK.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM—May 25.

Before Hon. Justices Roosevelt, Mitchell and Peabody.

DECISION OF THE GENERAL TERM—THE LAW CONSTITUTIONAL—OPINIONS OF THE COURT.

Fernando Wood vs. Simeon Draper et al., Police Commissioners.—Yesterday the General Term decided this case, and rendered the following opinions. Justices MITCHELL and PEABODY agree in declaring the law constitutional, while Judge ROOSEVELT dissents. The facts are already too well known to require further relation.

MITCHELL, Chief Justice—In the argument of this case there was scarcely any (if any) difference of opinion as to the rules by which the Constitution of our State is to be interpreted. The rule under the Federal Constitution is inapplicable. That instrument was framed with the view to confer only certain defined and limited powers on the General Government. General legislative power was not given to Congress, but special powers only, and those carefully enumerated in 17 subdivisions. To is alone would have limited it to those enumerated powers and such as were necessarily implied from them; but, so jealous were the people at that time, of the Federal Government, that among the amendments proposed at the first session of Congress under the Constitution, and afterwards adopted, was the one declaring that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, were reserved to the States respectfully or to the people." The reverse rule applies to the State Legislature. There must be some body in which a power of legislation shall reside competent to meet all the varied and changing wants of the community—and unlimited except by such restrictions as may be specially named. He, therefore, who would sustain the power of Congress to do any particular act, must find in the Constitution of the United States the clause which gives the power—but when a law is passed by the State Legislature, it is to be presumed valid until some clause in the Constitution of the State is pointed out which forbids it. The language of the State Constitution leads to the same result. It is that "the legislative power of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly." This alone includes all power of legislation without restriction, except such as is found in the same instrument, or results from the higher authority of the Federal Constitution and of Congress in certain cases. This restriction on the power of the Legislature may be either express as in the prohibition to sell the Canals or the Salt Springs, or to give or loan the credit of the State as in other instances—or it may be implied as when it is declared that "the Executive power shall be vested in a Governor"—the Legislature cannot take away that power from that officer or vest it in another. So when it is declared that "Sheriffs, Clerks of Counties, including the Register and Clerk of the City and County of New-York, Coroners and District Attorneys shall be chosen by the electors of the respective counties"—no act of the Legislature can sanction another mode of election or appointment to these offices. And accordingly it cannot be, and was not disputed, that the clause providing—that all county officers, whose election or appointment is not provided for by this constitution, shall be elected by the electors of such cities, towns and villages, or of some division thereof, or appointed by such authorities thereof as the Legislature shall designate for that purpose"—(Art. 10, Sec. 2)—"by requiring such officers to be appointed or elected by the local authorities," negatived the power of the Legislature to prescribe any other mode of election or appointment; and it would follow, if the officers appointed under the act now under consideration are (as the plaintiff contends) county officers, and do not come within the next clause of the same section of the constitution, that their appointment is void. That section is as follows: "All other officers, whose election or appointment is not provided for by this constitution, and all other officers whose office may hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people, or appointed, as the legislature may direct. This clause expressly re-establishes in the legislature full power to direct the mode of appointment of all officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by the Constitution; and also of all other officers whose office should be thereafter created by law. If the Police Commissioners are not County Officers, or if the offices which they fill, have been created since the Constitution took effect, and did not exist before, the legislature had unquestionable power to direct the mode of their appointment as it saw fit. Whether the law be expedient or inexpedient, the judiciary cannot inquire, but must obey it as all other citizens must. Thus far, there is probably no diversity of opinion.

It was said in the argument by one of the counsel, but not pressed, that the police patrolmen were to be appointed, so that certain persons among them should be the police for the City of New-York, certain others for Kings County, certain others for Richmond, and certain others for Westchester County, and hence it was urged that the police were County officers. But the act is not so—it creates one Metropolitan Police District, consisting of those four contiguous counties, and creates five Commissioners of Police, who, with the Mayors of the cities of New-York and Brooklyn, constitute a Board of Police, and authorizes this Board to appoint a superintendent of police and police patrolmen and other officers—"for the whole of the said the Metropolitan Police District, and authorized to do duty in any part thereof, without regard to residence or party lines." All that is local about the force is that the Board of Supervisors of the County of New-York, is to determine how many shall be appointed as a quota of the patrol force, to be paid for by said county—the Common Council of Brooklyn how many shall be appointed as a quota to be paid for by that city—the Supervisors of the towns of Kings except those of Brooklyn, how many shall be appointed as a quota to be paid for by those towns—and the Supervisors of Richmond and Westchester, respectively, how many shall be appointed as a quota for those counties, and to be paid by them respectively. But the whole control of the whole police force, the designation of the persons to act in any part of the district, and of the number so to act, and of the times and places when, is under the control of the Board of Police, and of their Superintendent and other officers appointed by it. (§ 6.) The district is to be divided into precincts, without regard to County or Ward boundaries, and one inspector or captain of police and four sergeants are to be assigned to each precinct. (§ 10.) They may be assigned from day to day or from month to month; they are not appointed for a particular precinct; they (like military officers) are assigned to a particular station, to remain there only so long as the head of the department may see fit. Each county is to furnish its quota of the fund necessary to pay the body of police, but it is not to pay it to or for any particular part of that body, but it all passes into the treasury of the State, and is thence to be obtained for the general purposes of the act. (§ 17.)

It is true that the duties to be performed by this police force have heretofore been performed through county or town or ward officers. But there is nothing in the Constitution which prevents the Legislature in its sound discretion from transferring the performance of those pertinent duties from one class of officers to another. At common law, and at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, in short, if not all the counties, the Sheriff was, in some somewhat, head of the police, and it was his special duty to preserve the peace. He is an officer who is recognized by the Constitution, and whose election is there specially provided for, yet that part of his duties could unquestionably be taken from him and be performed by others, as by the Mayor of a city, or the head of police. Nor does the Constitution declare or necessarily imply that duties which had formerly been part of the duties appertaining by the laws as it then stood to a particular office, should always remain either as appurtenant to that office, or to some other office of equally limited local extent. The office of Sheriff could not be stripped of all its duties, and those duties be all transferred to another officer, but this implied prohibition applies as well to a new officer within the same county as to a new officer whose power should extend to several counties. In neither case could a transfer be made of all the duties to officers who shall have control over several counties, as it is to make it to one who shall be limited to a single county. The language of the constitution was not adopted by the framers of the constitution without discrimination as to the words they used. It is that "all county officers—all city, town and village officers," shall be elected or appointed, &c., by the local authorities. It is not that all the duties theretofore performed by those officers shall be thereafter performed by county officers. But knowing and intending that the Legislature should regulate the duties of officers as it should find expedient from time to time, the framers of the constitution left to the Legislature unrestricted power in that respect. It might be that the conductors of railroads would become so negligent of the safety of passengers, that fines and penalties would not be a sufficient means of protection, and it would become necessary to have a police officer accompany each train, to see that the needful regulations were observed. It might also be that the property carried on those roads would be so frequently stolen, that it would be expedient to have an officer attend each freight train. If so, it would become the duty of the Legislature to afford that means of protection to the citizen and his property; and the most effectual means of accomplishing it might be to organize a Police force, to be appointed by commissioners, with superintendents under them; and it would be necessary to appoint them, not for a single county, nor by the local authorities, but by some body of men who should have control over the whole route of the road, as per the Erie road, or our great Central road, or the Hudson River road, or the Harlem and Albany road. A similar necessity might arise on our canals. River thieves on the waters around and in the vicinity of the City of New-York have long been complained of. They may extend their depredations (and it is said they have) to the neighboring counties. An ordinary Police force is inefficient against them. The most efficient means to overcome them might be a force of men appointed for New-York and its neighboring counties, with one head and equal power in every part of the district. The Constitution shows no design to cripple the Legislature of its power of affording such a remedy. In all these cases the force would be, as this is, a police force; yet it would not be unconstitutional, although the officers were not appointed for or by local authorities. The poor were at one time supported by towns, the overseers elected or appointed for those towns. That responsibility was in some cases shifted from the separate towns to the whole county. As yet, it has not been extended further as a general rule. Can it be that if it should become expedient in some instances, to constitute two or more counties into one district, for the poor of those counties, and to have the overseers elected or appointed for the whole district, this could not be done? If the power may be exercised in any of these cases then officers—for new districts comprising several counties—although performing duties formerly performed by officers of counties and towns, "are officers whose offices are created by or the adoption of the Constitution" within the meaning of that instrument, and they may be elected by the People or appointed as the Legislature may direct. Then in the case also there being officers for districts not before known, although performing duties formerly performed by county or town officers, may also be appointed as the Legislature has directed. The illustrations he claimed with all propriety might be furnished and others are referred to in the defendant's points in acts already passed) show that there were good reasons why this power should have been allowed to the Legislature, and that it is thus either the probable intent of the Constitution—and as the power is within the express and liberal words of the Constitution—which applies to all offices therein created, and this office was thereafter created,—it follows that the letter and spirit of the Constitution concur in sustaining the law now under consideration.

The journal of the Convention which framed the present Constitution, and the address made by the members of that Body, have been referred to, to prove that a cardinal object of that instrument is "to reduce and decentralize the patronage of the Executive Government"; and, that accordingly, in the language of that address, "the most important State officers are made elective by the people of the State, and most of the officers of cities, towns and counties are made elective by the voters of the locality they serve." The address thus speaks of the Constitution as it is, and refers to it to show in what instances this principle is carried out—and speaks of it as a limited, not an unlimited, principle; it applauds the Constention, not for any limited restraint which it contained on the power of the Legislature to erect new officers and to control the mode of their appointment, whether by the Governor and Senate, or by districts or localities—but for the clear and unambiguous provisions by which it was expressly declared that certain officers who were named in the Constitution should be elected or appointed by the local authorities; it referred to those thus named, and called on the people for approbation of their labors, because those special provisions were made, and not under the idea that, having provided for some cases of decentralization, they had thereby inferred into the Constitution a spirit which must extend it to others. They accordingly distinguish, and in the clause last quoted specify not of all, but of most of the county, town and City officers—and of their being elective. The framers of the Constitution—in specifying the instances to which this principle was applied—acted on the wise and contrary rule of changing the elemental law in particular cases, the effect of which was plain to their perception—not on some broad theoretical ides, whose extent with its sequences and results must be left to time or chance to discover. The appointment of officers for districts smaller than towns or larger than counties, they left at large to the Legislature—in the confidence that in a Republic the people may rely, with safety, upon a Legislature, one part of which is annually elected, or will have the remedy in their own hands at a succeeding election.

It is said that the law attempts to transfer the police property belonging to the cities of New-York and Brooklyn to the new Board of Police. (§ 15.) If it did, that would not avoid the whole act. The section (15) in which this supposed transfer is made is a distinct and separate one, and may be rejected and yet the rest of the act be effectual. The case of Warren vs. the City of Charleston, (2 Grey, 181) states a sensible rule, which is, substantially, that when the parts of an act are so blended together that the unconstitutional part cannot be struck out without thereby leaving the act in such a condition that it would defeat the intention of the Legislature—or when the unconstitutional part was manifestly the very object of the law, there the whole must fall together. So it would follow here, that if all this law be unconstitutional but the part repealing statutes inconsistent with it—that repealing clause must fall also. But the section as to property is a comparatively unimportant part of the act. Its great object evidently is to obtain a new and efficient organization of police for the new district. The fifteenth section, however, expressly declares that the ownership of the property referred to, and the use of the same, shall be according to the ordinances of the Common Councils of the two cities respectively. If that property is held by those cities under an obligation or trust, to allow them to be used for police purposes, it may well be that any police force that may be acting for the benefit of those cities may be entitled to such use of them.

The judgment of the Special Term in favor of the defendants should be affirmed with costs to be paid by the relator.

PEABODY, JUSTICE.—The claim of the plaintiffs herein is, that the defendants have usurped the offices of Police Commissioners, and are exercising the powers of those offices in certain territory of the State in violation of law; and they ask to have them ousted therefrom, by the judgment of this Court. They also ask to have the relator adjudged entitled to hold the office of such Commissioner, which he did hold until removed by the usurpation of defendants.

The defendants answer, that pursuant to an act of the Legislature of the State of New York, passed April 15, 1857, entitled "An act to establish a Metropolitan Police District, and to provide for the government thereof," they were, by the Governor, with the consent of the Senate, appointed Commissioners of Police, and thereby became and still are authorized to perform the duties enjoined by said act.

To this answer the plaintiffs demur, and to sustain their demurrer rely on the unconstitutionality of the act. They say that the act, in its general scope and effect, is at variance with the spirit and purposes of the Constitution:

First—That it is so in creating a new district or division of the State, unknown to the constitution, for governmental purposes.

Second—That it conflicts with the spirit of decentralization which provides the constitution in confiding to the Executive of the State the power of appointing Commissioners to these offices, comparatively local in their character.

Third—That the act is unconstitutional in giving to the Commissioners the use of the public police property of the City of New-York, which it is said is the private property of the City.

By this act the Counties of New-York, Kings, Richmond, and Westchester are constituted a "Metropolitan Police District," and the Governor, with the consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint five Commissioners to the offices held by the defendants, whose duty it shall be to take charge of the police of said district, appoint and remove members of the corps, and generally to take entire control and direction of the administration of police throughout the territory constituted such Police District.

Thus this law erects, it is said, a new governmental district unknown to the fundamental law. The constitution having recognized all the civil governmental districts of the state, gave them, it is argued, perpetuity by its sanction, and by necessary implication forbade the legislature to erect for any purpose of civil government permanent districts unknown to it.

The constitution does, it is true, recognize certain governmental districts of the state as then existing. It does this incidentally, more than once. It does no more than recognize them, however. It does not erect, or expressly sanction them. They existed prior to the Constitution and were not disturbed by it, but were suffered to remain as they had been heretofore. The constitution, therefore, has had nothing to do with them, or the fact of their existence, except silently to tolerate them, and perhaps provide for the alteration of some of them under certain circumstances.

These districts are counties, cities, towns and villages. They existed prior to the constitution, and were by it left, without other sanction than what may be implied from expressions no more significant than mere references to them by generic terms in the distribution of the powers of Government. Nothing in the mode of reference indicates that they must remain as they were, or that they may not be altered in their form or extent, or that the territory which then constituted one of these districts a county, city, town or village was expected to continue so. On the contrary, as to some of them, the power to alter them is recognized in that fundamental law; and as to the others, there is nothing on the face of that instrument to suggest the impropriety or impracticability of alterations.

But suppose that it had enacted, and so created these districts of the extent and proportions they now possess; and suppose it had gone further and ordained that they should remain intact, and as they were made, until altered or abolished by some power of equal dignity with that which enacted them, and that no such alteration had been made; when for some purpose, to acquire some benefit, or avoid some evil common to two, or three, or four of them adjacent to each other, they unite, or are united by legislative enactment, for that single purpose—to supply a want peculiar to that particular section of territory embraced in them, would such a law be invalid, as violating the spirit of the Constitution, by infringing those divisions they recognised in it as existing for general government purposes? The four counties embraced in this district are certainly peculiar, in embracing and lying contiguous to the great metropolis of the western hemisphere. From this circumstance, if for no other, they must have wants and interests peculiar to themselves and common to them all. Their situation in this respect, it is apparent, must call for an administration of police, which would be quite unnecessary and inexpedient in most, and perhaps in all other parts of the State. The counties, as such, are not dissolved—as counties they still exist for all general purposes, and the governmental departments sanctioned or recognized by the Constitution are not violated, but remain in their integrity. A law applicable to the Territory embraced in four of them is made to supply a want at once common and peculiar to them alone, of all the State. Indeed, as the Constitution recognizes the divisions of the State into counties, and is said thereby to have sanctioned them, so does this act recognize the districts of territory embraced in these counties respectively as constituting the same governmental departments as before, and in this respect, it may be said, in some sense, to lend its sanction to their existence and continuation for the purposes for which they were created, certainly to refrain from any disintegrating invasion of them.

Suppose some other local subject of legislation to exist in several contiguous counties—a valuable fishery for instance, which required legislation for its preservation or management—it would hardly be claimed (as is claimed here) that a legislative enactment on that subject, applicable to those counties alone, was hostile to the spirit of the Constitution because it was so applicable to more than one county and less than the whole State—but we are unable to see why it might not be claimed with equal propriety.

This act provides a system of police administration for a certain section of the State, in which the Legislature have decided that a peculiar system was required. We see nothing more than this in the act pertinent to the objection we are now considering.

The fact that the section of country thus provided for lies in one or more counties, or embraces the whole of a county, or more than one, cannot, we think, be important in determining the question raised by the point.

It is not pretended that there is anything expressed in the constitution inconsistent in this respect with the act in question. The claim of the plaintiffs is only that the constitution, having recognized, and thereby sanctioned certain governmental divisions, counties, towns, cities and villages, &c., other divisions for governmental purposes are inconsistent with its interest, unauthorized, and by implication forbidden by it.

This argument would seem to have more force, if the constitution had assumed to divide the State for general purposes of administration, either by declaring new, or expressly ratifying the old districts. It might then be argued with more force that the people, with whom is the sovereign power, by their convention had entered on that field of duty, and having established or declared certain divisions of their territory, must be held to have exhausted the subject by making or declaring all the divisions they deemed expedient, and that a negative, or restriction on the power of their humbler servants, the legislature, was thence to be inferred.

But this they have not done. The constitution does not enter on that field of labor at all, either to originate divisions or declare those already made. It does not take up the subject for treatment, or treat it at all; and the fact that in the distribution of powers by it certain powers of local administration are conferred in these divisions, and the divisions in that manner recognised, and perhaps sanctioned by it, is not sufficient to authorize the interference of a restriction from making any other division not in their own nature positively inconsistent with those existing.

But we are unable, in any view of the subject, to consider this act as creating a new governmental district of the character which would be inconsistent with any general division of the State.

Those divisions are general, and for general governmental purposes.

A county, for instance, is a quasi corporation, and, as such, has many powers of self government. It is one of the several divisions of the same character, all of which taken together, make up, and compose the State. They are members, so to speak, of the State. A county is an attribute, or feature of the State. It has, by virtue of its own character, inherently, many classes of powers. Many of the attributes of sovereignty by our laws are vested in counties as such. The division of the State into counties is not for any one purpose, or any particular number or class of purpose. It is for the general purposes of government.

The origin and history of this governmental division, as well as modern legislation, have given to the term a definite meaning, and whenever the jurisprudence of a country is derived from the common law, the term is believed to be in familiar use, and to have a significance very similar to that it has with us.

This statute, on the contrary, so far from creating any new governmental division of the State for general purposes (which it is said the Legislature is not authorized to do,) merely enacts a law on one particular subject, for a district of territory embraced in four counties, limiting its operation to that district. If, from the general spirit of the Constitution, a negative is to be implied, on the power of the Legislature to make new governmental departments, or divisions of the State, the principle has no application to a case like this.

This act is not within the spirit of the argument on that subject. The district created by it is but a section of territory of the State, designated and distinguished from its other territory for the purpose of the application of this law, and in no just sense a general governmental district, which is the only kind of division to which the reasoning of the plaintiff is applicable.

The second objection to the unconstitutionality of the law—that based on the idea that vesting the power of appointment to these offices in the general Executive of the State is contrary to the spirit of decentralization—has been carefully considered. That spirit does appear, on examination of the instrument, to have been active in giving direction and tone to the legislation embraced in it. As to local offices, they are very generally filled by election or appointment in the locality for which they are constituted. Those for Counties are generally filled by appointment or election within the County.

A county is a general governmental division, the largest known in our State. It has appropriate officers for transacting its own business. Its clerk, supervisors, sheriffs, and other officers, are ready for use, for the purpose of conducting an election or making an appointment. It has a regular permanent organization for its use, for purposes of the kind generally, whenever action by it—in such matters—is called for, and as to such districts, local election or appointment is practicable and convenient. It is always at hand the machinery for making it is complete, either by election or appointment, and the Constitution, in accordance with its general tone and spirit, provides expressly (Art. 10, Sec. 2) that "All county officers, whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, shall be elected by the electors of the respective counties, or appointed by the Boards of Supervisors, or other county authorities, as the Legislature shall direct."

Without pursuing the inquiry as to the extent to which the Constitution carries the theory of decentralization, and without answering the question, whether that spirit, as exhibited, is so dominant as to control by of the letter, so that in the absence of express provision on this subject, the Legislature would be inhibited by it from conferring the power of appointment to such an office as those on the Examiners of the State, we proceed to say, express provision in the instrument which seems to us to control in this point.

The last sentence of Art. 10, § 2, after providing for city, town and village officers, proceeds as follows: "All other officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, and all officers who may hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people, or appointed as the Legislature may direct." Here is found express authority for the Legislature to determine as to all officers, who these offices should be created by law, whether they should be elected or appointed, and we think authority further to decide, and they should be so elected or appointed.

Now, if these offices have been created by law, since the adoption of the constitution, this provision authorizes the Legislature to direct the filling of them by election or appointment, at their pleasure. The act in question became a law ten years after the adoption of the constitution.

The offices created by it, therefore, must have been created long after the date of the constitution.

But while, as has been said, it is very certain that these offices have been created (if they have any valid existence) since the constitution went into effect, it seems equally clear that they are not City, town, or village offices, within the meaning of these terms, as used there, and that the provisions in regard to offices of those classes therefore does not apply to them. What particular adjectives would express the territorial extent of their jurisdiction, it is not perhaps very easy to say, and it is not at all important for us to determine.

The provision of the Constitution, just referred to, seems to us as broad and comprehensive as its terms import, and to embrace literally all offices created by law, after the Constitution went into effect. Nothing in the context suggests a more limited meaning, and the terms are too plain, and their meaning too patent to call for construction.

But the plaintiffs insist that the offices themselves are not legally constituted. Their argument seems to go to the length of assailing the entire validity of the offices, and disputing their legal existence. Without dwelling on the point, not pressed on the argument, that the existence of the office is not properly in controversy here, where, for the purposes of this action, their existence is admitted, the reasoning on this point has already been mostly answered in the earlier part of this opinion, in considering the first point treated relating to the territorial division created by this act. But the duties of the offices and the whole subject matter of the act—to wit, the administration of police—are said to be local, and their nature properly matters of county or local cognizance exclusively; and hence, it is said, that the creation of offices for this anomalous district is an evasion of the Constitution, and in fraud of it.

And it must be admitted that the discharge of this class of the duties of Government has usually been intrusted to the county or locality, but this has been for reasons of convenience merely. There is nothing in the law on the subject, constitutional or otherwise, and nothing in the nature of police, which renders its administration exclusively or primarily local, or limits it to the county or other district. No duty of the State or sovereignty is more general or comprehensive in its own nature than the duty of preserving the peace throughout its territory, of preventing crime, protecting the rights of persons and property, guarding the public health, preserving order at elections, and the other numerous duties provided for by this act and enjoined on these officers. (11 Peters, 102; 33 Mance R., 560; 7 Cushing, 56; 12 Pickering, 184.)

The right of the public, and of each citizen, to protection from the evils of lawless aggression, is a right directly incumbent on the sovereign power, and the fact that the State has been accustomed to bestow this protection, to perform these duties indirectly and through the instrumentality of its members or departments, does not diminish, or show the want of power in the State to do it directly when, in its judgment, it become necessary or expedient; nor is the duty of the State to its citizens, any more than the duty of one individual to another, discharged, by simply conferring on its departments or agents authority to perform it. If they fail to perform it properly, (of which the State alone is judge,) it is the plain right and duty of the State to interfere, and directly (by its own right arm if necessary) afford its citizens the protection and security which, as a compensation for the natural rights they as individuals surrender, and the pecuniary and other burdens they assume by becoming subjects and members of it, it has undertaken to guarantee them.

The other objection to the law, relating to the property of the City in use for and a statute are in conflict, the latter must yield to the former—be lower to the higher law," and it is equally well settled, and was so clear before the adoption of the constitution of 1846, that an appeal in such cases, and in such cases only, lies from the legislative to the judiciary department. Such an appeal, it is presumed, cannot be taken away even by express enactment. For, although the Legislature, under the new constitution, have power (Art. 6) to alter and regulate the jurisdiction and proceedings of the courts, it is only "the same power (in that respect) as they heretofore possessed."

To test even the validity of the present bill, let us take as an illustration the case of a Sheriff. The Governor of the State, it must be conceded, could not be authorized by the Legislature to nop lint a Sheriff either by that or any other name. Sheriffs, says the Constitution, shall be chosen by the electors of the respective counties. An enactment, therefore, that Sheriffs should from thenceforth be called marshals or commissioners, and that as marshals or commissioners, they should be appointed by the Governor, would be clearly void. The mere ceremony, however high and however solemn, of a new baptism by the Senate and Assembly, would not save it. The Constitution intended something more than a name. It required that certain functions of Government should be discharged by certain local officers of local origin. It did not intend that the electors of the county should enjoy the barren privilege of choosing two sylables.

What then, in the year 1847, was the legal and well understood acceptation of the term Sheriff?

Sheriff, or Shire Reeve, as they were once called, are defined in the old law books to be the chief officer, under the King, of their respective shires, having the custody, keeping, command and government, in some sort, of the respective localities committed to their charge, with power to serve process, to return juries, to make execution, and to keep the peace. (Cole Lit., 168; Dalt., Sh., C.) And to this end they might appoint as many bailiffs as they should think proper. (1 R. S. 373.) Such, in general, were the functions of sheriffs; and such, therefore, in making these officers elective by the people, were the functions which the Constitution intended should be discharged by the immediate nominees of the local electors, as distinguished from the more remote recipients of central patronage. To them the functions of the newly created and appointed Police Commissioners correspond, in their substance and general outline, with those above described as constituting the elective office of Sheriff? With the exception of returning Juries and serving civil process, there is, in their general attributes, no essential difference. Nor is there any as to the power of appointing deputies, both superior and inferior, regular and special, under the name of the "police force, for the whole of the said The Metropolitan District.

Their authority, it is true, is not confined to "county lines," and the deputy of one may act in either of the four counties. But it will hardly be contended that the Legislature could acquiesce with the Constitution take from the people the election of Sheriffs, merely by creating Sheriffs for two, or three, or even four counties, instead of one, and then calling them Commissioners, and Commissioners' Deputies instead of Sheriffs and Sheriffs' bailiffs? Such an idea of evading a private contract no court could sanction. And if to "the duty of courts of justice," as the Revised Statutes declare it shall be, in the construction of every private written contract, relating only to a mere four or real estate, "to carry into effect the intent of the parties so far as such intent can be collected from the whole instrument," how much more is it their duty to do so when construing and enforcing the great contract which expresses the intent of the people on the one side, and the obligations of their representatives on the other, in regard to the entire government of the body politic?

I have referred in the examples cited to the case of sheriffs. They are properly elective officers of counties, and of the City of New-York only as a County. The objections stated will equally apply to the case of City officers as such—the Mayor, Recorder, City Judge and Chief of Police and their subordinates. The act in question, so far as relates to Police administration, substantially nullifies them all. It ignores the Recorder and City Judge, places five Commissioners, appointed by the Governor, over the Mayor to outvote him, and supersedes the Chief formerly appointed by the City "authorities" by another chief called a "General Superintendent," to be appointed by the Governor's Commissioners. This is something more than simple evasion—it is absolute nullification of the "elections of the City" and of the "authorities thereof." It is a sort of political decapitation of both the people and the people's functionaries. From the first meeting of the new Board (sec. 31) all the power and authority before conferred by law upon the old Board, or upon the Mayor, Recorder, and City Judge as Police Commissioners, or upon the Mayor, as head of the Police Department, or relating to Police Government appointments or discipline is conferred upon, and of Courts transferred to, the Commissioners of the Central Power. All the subordinate police officers of the City, therefore, from the General Superintendent under the Commissioners down to the humblest doorman, with salaries in the aggregate amounting to more than a million of dollars, and varying from three thousand each to as many hundreds, instead of being appointed, if appointed at all, by the authorities of the City, as directed by the Constitution, are henceforth to receive their commissions on the flat indirectly of the Executive of the State. In other words, they are to look to Albany and to New York as the source of their political existence. The authorities of New-York—the authorities chosen by the votes of the electors of New York—the Mayor, Recorder and City Judge designated by a previous Constitutional statute for the purpose of making all the subordinate appointments in the Police Department of the City, are thrust aside and the organs of the Central Power installed in their stead.

If by the mere contrivance of a junction of two counties, or even of one county and the minutest possible fragment of another, such a result may be accomplished, the Tenth article of the Constitution, so pregnant with the spirit of the whole instrument, to say nothing of other leading provisions, becomes a dead letter. And why, by the same process, might not the selection of the chief State officers, the Secretary of State, Comptroller, Treasurer and Attorney-General be taken from the people of the State and conferred, as many think it ought to be, upon the Governor of the State? A cabinet might be organized, consisting of a President of the Council, a First Minister of the Treasury, a State Banker and a Solicitor-General—all to be appointed by the Executive, and all to possess together powers nominally different from, but really equivalent to, those now vested by law in the elective State officers named in the Constitution. Those officers, or rather their official names, would, from necessity of course, remain, but only to say of themselves, "What shadows we are and what shadows we pursue." And wherein would such a law, so far as principle is concerned, differ from the one under review? Unless in this, that it would, in a constitutional point of view, be the less objectionable of the two, as only transferring the appointing power from the people of the State to one of the elected authorities of the people of the State, whereas the new police law not only transfers to the central executive the appointing power of the people of the counties, but of the "authorities" elected by the people of the counties. It frustrates, if effectual, not one, but two leading purposes of the Constitution—it both centralizes and depopularizes.

The whole case thus resolves itself into a single inquiry: If a private citizen cannot, by any shift or contrivance, evade the lawful will of the Legislature, can the Legislature itself, by any like shift or contrivance, however desirable the object may be, evade the constitutional will of the people, the sovereign alike of the Legislature and of the courts? I do not mean by this suggestion, to intimate that the members of the Senate and Assembly in adopting the new Police bill, had any actual intention of evading the implied prohibitions of the Constitution. Judges, I know, have sometimes (both in and out of legislative halls) been charged with that sin; and the history of English statute jury jurisprudence illustrates the occasional justice of the accusation. But no such intent can justly be imputed to legislators. We may say, however, without offence, that the effect of the act under consideration, if carried out, and if the views I have expressed are correct, would be the same as that of an intentional evasion, and would render one of the prominent articles of the Constitution, to say nothing of the entire scope and spirit of the whole instrument, no better than idle formulary—vox et preterea nihil.

CONCLUSIONS.

First—The general purpose of the new constitution is to popularize, as far as practicable, and in every event to decentralize power.

Second—The extent of that purpose, as the defendant's counsel admits, and the manner in which it is to be executed are defined by the text of the constitution itself.

It makes the great state officers elective by general ticket.

It makes the entire legislative force of the State elective.

It makes the entire judicial force of the State elective.

It makes all the enumerated county officers elective, and all county and town officers not enumerated, elective, except as the Legislature may direct them to be appointed by the local authorities. It leaves all village and city officers to be elected at large or by divisions, or to be appointed by local authorities as the Legislature may direct.

Third—The Constitution does not say or intend that all officers whose offices may thereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people or appointed as the legislature may direct—but all officers "other" than county, city, town and village officers, and "other" than the specially enumerated State officers.

Although, therefore, the Legislature may have the power to create a new county or city office, it has not the power to render such office, when created, the subject of executive appointment.

The Constitution is peremptory that "all" such officers shall be either elected by the voters of the respective localities, or "appointed by the authorities thereof."

Fourth—The legislative department, like an individual citizen, cannot do indirectly that which it is prohibited from doing directly—it cannot, by uniting counties, divest the "authorities thereof" of their constitutional jurisdiction and transfer it, under another name, to the central executive. Such a consolidation is at variance with the letter, and with the whole scope and spirit of the constitution, the favorite purpose of whose framers, wise and unwise, was to erect not a compounded but a sort of confederated Government.

On Judge ROOSEVELT's conclusion, Mr. FIELD remarked that the word "other," referred to in the third conclusion, though in the Constitution, as printed in the Red book, was not in the copy related with the Revised Statutes, or in the original as upon file. To this remark Judge ROOSEVELT returned the graphic answer—"Is it so?"

State of Affairs in the City.

The police question still remains prominent, and scarcely anything else is spoken about at the City Hall, and within the department generally.

The decisions of the Supreme Judges yesterday, was a theme of general discussion. The friends of the new bill were much elated, at what they considered a good augury of final success, while its opponents, on the other hand, expressed themselves satisfied, believing that the action of the Supreme Court would hasten matters to a formination which, they were sure, would result in a confirmation of municipal liberty and a reproof to Albany dictation."

Commissioners DRAPER, CHOLWELL, NYE and BOWEN met at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, at their office No. 58 White-street. The usual preliminary business was transacted, after which a report from General-Superintendent TALLMADGE, enclosing proposals for Station-houses, was referred to the Committee on that subject, who will immediately report.

The Superintendent also sent in a report from Deputy-Superintendent CARPENTER, charging First-Lieutenant WILLIAM H. MARTIN, of the Fifth Ward Police, with disobedience to orders. The charge of Deputy CARPENTER was couched as follows:

FIFTH DISTRICT STATION, NEW YORK,
Monday, May 20, 1857.

Frederick A. Tallmadge, General Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police:

SIR: I hereby charge First-Lieutenant WM. H. MARTIN, of this District, with disobedience of ordors.

Specification.—When I came to the Station-house this morning, at 8 o'clock, I found that the said First-Lieutenant WILLIAM H. MARTIN had neglected to make out the daily return to the Chief. I advised the said First-Lieutenant WILLIAM H. MARTIN to make the said return out, which he refused to do, thereby setting an example of insubordination among the members of my command.

DANIEL CARPENTER,
Inspector or Captain of Fifth District.

The charge was received, and the Clerk ordered to serve a copy of it upon Lieut. MARTIN, whose trial was set down for Thursday next, at 10 o'clock.

The following resolution, offered by President DRAPER, was referred to the Committee on General Discipline:

Resolved, That the forces at the First-Ward Station-House be divided as near as may be, and transferred to the Second and Third Ward Stations equally; this order to take effect on the 1st of June next, and the officers of the present First Ward force to be returned to the rank of patrolmen; and therefore after the three wards to be united in one Police Precinct.

Returns from four Wards—the Third, Twelfth, Fifteenth and Twenty-first—were sent yesterday to the office at No. 38 White-st.

It was expected that the Old Commissioners would meet yesterday at the Mayor's office, but no meeting was had. At their last session they made the following appointments:

First Ward—JAMES DALTON, to be Sergeant in place of Sergeant JOHNSON, of the Broadway squad, dismissed.

Fifth Ward—G. W. RADFORD, in place of THEODORE W. STORY, dismissed.

Seventh Ward—FRANCIS DUFFY, in place of WM. H. JOHNSON, resigned.

Tenth Ward—WILLIAM H. McCORKLE, to be Second Lieutenant in place of THADDEUS C. DAVIS, dismissed.

The Democratic members of the Board of Aldermen held a secret meeting yesterday afternoon, in the Aldermens' Board, to consider what further steps should be taken in view of the decision of the Supreme Court on the Police bill. Their proceedings were kept a profound secret. One of the gentlemen who participated in the meeting remarked at its close that "nothing was done."

Mayor WOOD has issued the following manifesto:

Communication from Mayor Wood.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 26, 1857.

To the Honorable the Board of Councilmen:

GENTLEMEN: Every political community should have certain inherent rights of domestic police, independent of any other authority whatever. Indeed, this may be said to be already an established principle of self-government for municipal purposes, existing in almost every country sufficiently civilized and liberal to acknowledge the restraint of law. In this country it has always been universally conceded. The independence of the municipality in the regulation of its local police was firmly fixed, even under the colonial system—and the change to a more liberal system of government could not impair those rights. Whilst counties delegated certain powers to the States in the formation of the State governments, and whilst States delegated certain powers to the general government for federal purposes, the original chartered privileges of cities remained intact. I know of no instance in the United States where incorporated cities, existing as such prior to the Revolution, with charters emanating directly from the crown, have lost that portion of their ancient rights which gave them the control of their own exclusively domestic regulations for the preservation of the peace and for the protection of life and property. In this State this is emphatically and unquestionably true. The original charters of the cities of New-York and Albany guaranteed to the bodies politic of each certain privileges which have not been, and, in my judgment, cannot be taken away by any acts of the Legislature, without the assent of the people, or the properly constituted authorities representing them. The first written Charter of this City now extant was granted by JAMES II. in 1686, to THOMAS DONGAN, then Lieutenant-Governor of the Province. This was reaffirmed to JOHN MONTGOMERIE, with additional large privileges, in 1730. These have since been recognized as one Charter, and are known as the Dongan and Montgomerie Charters. Until 1830, just one hundred years after the Montgomerie grant, and fifty years after the Revolution, no change, amendments or alterations in them were made or thought of; nor was it supposed that the transfer of the government from the Monarchical to the Republican had impaired to the least extent the municipal guarantees thus vouchsafed to the City of New York. The State had twice altered its constitution, adapting it to its improving commercial and more liberal political condition, but the Charter of this City was looked upon as an almost sacred instrument, not to be touched, even though the necessity for it, in many respects seems so apparent; and when in 1830 the Legislature adopted certain additional provisions, they were only as amendments to the Dongan and Montgomerie Charters, the principal elements of which were retained in their original force, with all the "franchises, grants, powers and privileges" left unimpaired. The subsequent acts in 1849 and 1853 were also amendments, and the Charter just passed, though it repeals all the previous ones, reaffirms in direct terms the Dongan and Montgomerie Charters. Thus has the Legislature recognized all our ancient chartered rights, which through a series of legislative enactments, for fifty years, had been frequently interfered with, too often by pliant yielding upon the part of the people themselves. Under this grant, now reaffirmed, we find sufficient authority for the City of New York to regulate its own police affairs, independent of State interference or control. Upon a close examination of its provisions, aided by the evidence of its able commentator, Chancellor KENT, it is impossible to come to any other conclusion. Section 14 of the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter confers upon the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty, and their successors forever, the most ample and exclusive powers, useful or necessary, for the good rules and government of the City. Chancellor KENT says, (see 29th note, KENT's notes and illustrations,) commenting on this section, "It would seem to contain a grant of ample powers sufficient for all the purposes of a well ordered Police, and for the good government of the City in its complicated concerns." Again, in note 31, he says, "Whenever and wherever the statute provisions do not apply precise and adequate authority in the given instance, the Common Council can always resort to the never-failing power under this Charter, which gives broad authority commensurate to every case. The Charter powers have been so frequently and so fully confirmed, defined, enforced and specially applied by legislative acts, that there seems to be no want of jurisdiction from one source or the other for every exigency.

But the power of the Common Council to establish a municipal watch or police is clearly conferred by the twenty-second section. It grants to the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City full power and authority to license or appoint watchmen, by warrant, under the common seal of the City, and to displace them and put others in their room, and to add to or diminish the number of them. The duty and power to pay the persons thus appointed is incident in the power granted to appoint. The twenty-third section gives them power to order the persons thus appointed to arrest and take up all or any rogues, vagabonds, disorderly, and idle and suspicious persons. The learned commentator already referred to says that "the Common Council may appoint and diminish at pleasure all such police agents. The control and regulation of the City watch, like the appointment and regulation of cartmen and porters, is a very interesting and valuable deposit of municipal power, and one essential to the peace, security and good government of the City."

If these sections do not confer upon the Common Council the power to create a Municipal Police, then I know of no words in the English language that can confer such power. There cannot be doubt on the subject. Indeed, this power is fully recognized and confirmed by the charter recently passed, independent of the reenactment of the Dongan and Montgomerie charters.

In the first section of that Act it is declared that "the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York; shall continue to be a body politic and corporate, in fact and in name, by the same name, and shall have perpetual succession with all grants, powers and privileges, heretofore had." This power and privilege of the Corporation to protect and defend the persons and property of its citizens is now for the first time raised in question. If any complaint has been made against them, it was for not exercising their power to its fullest extent, for the omission to exert its authority rather than the want of it.

The Dongan and Montgomerie Charter now occupies a higher position in regard to the City than it has occupied at any time since 1830, and may be regarded as the organic law—the Magna Charta—of our City, whereby the liberty of the citizen is protected. The repealing clause of the Charter recently passed, in the first place, repeals all the Charters and amendments to Charters previously passed by the several Legislatures, so that anything contained in the Charters or amendments that in anywise affected, modified or repealed any part of the Dongan or Montgomerie Charter was removed out of the way. In the second place, it repeals all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with itself; and any section contained within itself would be clearly inconsistent if it did not repeal, modify, or, in any manner affect the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter, because the Legislature in its last dying words, when enacting laws for the governments of this City, declared that nothing in its own enactment should be construed as repealing, modifying or in any manner affecting the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter, and the act further declares that said Charter shall continue and remain in full force.

It is clear, therefore, that there exists sufficient power inherent in our own original act of incorporation, which has not been repealed, rescinded, or given up, to establish all that is required for domestic Police government. We require no State legislation to give us the authority. We possess it not only without State permission, but in defiance of its enactments to the contrary without our consent. It is no answer to say that the Charter and Metropolitan Police bills recently passed repeal all laws inconsistent with them, as the former expressly reaffirms the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter; but even if it did not, the establishment of a City day and night watch is not inconsistent with the Metropolitan Police bill, which, its authors declare, is a State and not a local municipal law. If its Commissioners are City and County officers, they are within the exclusions of the Constitution; if they are State or District officers, their duties are not inconsistent with those which may devolve upon the head of a day and night watch for this City. We have authority and precedent for two Police organizations of a similar character.

In 1844 the Legislature passed an act establishing a Police Department in this City, the first section of which abolishes the Watch Department as then organized, and in lieu thereof created a Police Department. This section in nowise derogated from the power of the Common Council to establish and organize another Watch Department or Municipal Police, but, on the contrary, the validity of the State law creating the Police Department was made dependent on its acceptance by the Common Council of this City. The Common Council refused its assent, denying the right of the Legislature to pass such a statute, and it remained a dead letter. The Common Council then proceeded, acting under the general powers confirmed upon them by the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter, to organize a Municipal Police, and an ordinance to that effect was finally adopted. (See vol. 12, p. 204, Proceedings of Common Council.) Subsequently the ordinance was repealed, and the law passed by the Legislature accepted. That act has been several times amended, generally according to the suggestion of those who were at the head of the Police, for the purpose of adapting it more nearly to the wants of the City, and to perfect its provisions, as experience from time to time pointed out its defects.

The Police law of 1844, at the time of its acceptance by the Common Council, was found to be defective in some of its provisions, so that it could not be carried into practical operation, and, at the same time confer upon citizens those benefits which the authorities designed. The Legislature was not in session, and the law itself could not be amended. The Common Council, acting under its general powers, on the 23d of June, in the year 1846, passed an ordinance, which was drafted by JAMES T. BRADY, Esq., the then Corporation Counsel, by which they remedied the defects and provided for carrying on the operation of the Police Department more perfectly than did the State law. This ordinance is still in force, and forms a part of the authority by which the Police Department of the City is now governed.

In 1849 the Common Council passed an ordinance establishing the departments of the City Government. Among these was an executive department, to be called the Police Department. It it was created several bureaux, one of which was the Bureau of Police, the chief officer of which was to be called the Chief of Police. By this ordinance, which has never been repealed, there is already established a Bureau of Police in the Police Department, unaffected by the provisions of the new charter or the act establishing a Metropolitan Police District. This ordinance takes up the whole department then in existence, and incorporates it by ordinance into a Bureau of Police, and constitutes it a bureau in the Mayor's office, in exact accordance with the previous ordinance.

This ordinance was drawn by the late DAVID GRAHAM, Esq., and can be found in page 35 of the printed ordinances organizing the department of the Municipal Government of the City of New York, and prescribing their powers and duties.

The repealing clauses in these acts do not refer to or repeal any of the ordinances of the Common Council establishing a bureau of Police. They repeal all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with those acts, and if the ordinances of the Common Council are to be embraced in that category, still the ordinances referred to is unaffected, for it is not inconsistent with the Metropolitan Police District act. It is a well known fact, that in England they have established, by act of Parliament, a Metropolitan Police, and that it is conducted and superintended by officers who receive their appointment directly from the Crown, and, singular as it may seem, it is the model after which the Metropolitan Police District bill was patterned.

The city of London would not consent to act under that bill, although they contributed seventeen men (I write from recollection) towards this force. The City of New York contributes five men to the Metropolitan Police, which is about the same, or rather a larger proportion. The London City Police, which numbers one thousand men, patrols an area of ground about as large as the three lower wards of this City. There is not necessarily any clashing between these two systems. They work together harmoniously, contributing to the common end, namely: the protection of the people.

The City of New York, by the recent act of the Legislature, is placed in a situation exactly analogous to that of London, and the same propriety exists for the maintenance of a municipal police in the former as in the latter city. It is a question worthy of mature consideration whether or not the Police of this City does not continue its existence by virtue of the ordinance of the Common Council, passed in 1849, notwithstanding the repeal of the State law, which only had a vital existence by virtue of the action of the authorities of this City.

I do not recommend, however, that we shall rest on any doubtful authority, but that an ordinance shall be passed for the creation of a day and night watch police establishment. We have sufficient power to enact such an ordinance, and it will not be inconsistent in its operation with the Metropolitan police, if the courts shall permit such an organization to be planted in our midst, which of course I do not anticipate. We have already made the necessary provision for the payment of our own municipal force. The sum placed in the tax levy for the payment of police at the commencement of the year, was to be raised for municipal police, and not a State created police. Not one dollar of that amount can be diverted from the purpose to which it has been appropriated, and the Legislature, as hold as it has been in disregarding our rights, has not attempted to deprive us of this fund. It is true the Metropolitan Police act assumes to take any balances unexpended remaining in the Treasury to police account, (there are none,) and to provide for the next year's levy, but it leaves the money to be collected this year for the expenditure of 1857 untouched. Therefore, while the State police cannot, under any decision of the courts, as to the constitutionality of the law, get a dollar from our Treasury until next year, we will have nearly a million of dollars to the account of the municipal police, to be paid out under the authority of the Corporation of the City.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Monday, the President, J. N. PHILLIPS, Esq., in the Chair.

The reading of a message from the Mayor followed the reading of the minutes. It had reference to the alleged usurpations of the State Legislature, and calling for the establishment of a watch under the unrepealed section of the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter. It was to be referred to a Special Committee, and 5,000 copies to be printed. [This message will be found above.]

Councilman OTTARSON moved as an amendment that the message be referred to the Law Committee. He commenced to read the opinion of Judge Peabody, which he asserted would show it to be impossible to organize such a day and night watch as was suggested in the message. The worthy Councilman was frequently called to order by Councilman MORRIS and Councilman MCCAHILL; he announced his determination to read the document seriatim to the Board. He was sustained by the Chair and proceeded to read the whole of that opinion.

After about 40 minutes' reading, Councilman WARNER asked how long the further reading would last.

Councilman OTTARSON stated that about half a column remained unread.

Councilman REILLY rose to order; he stated that the opinion of Judge PEABODY was on the constitutionality of the Metropolitan Police Bill, it had nothing to do with the appointment of a committee on the City Watch.

Councilmen OTTARSON persisted, and finished the reading of the document.

Councilman BRADY supported the views of Councilman OTTARSON. He would like to have the Mayor's communication referred to the Law Committee, to ascertain whether the Judges had rendered a correct decision.

Councilman BYRDSALL hoped the matter would be referred to a special Committee. A crisis had been reached in the municipal government. He thought the opinion just read was a one sided political argument.

Councilman JONES observed that Councilman OTTARSON had been at the trouble of reading a labored and long opinion. It was said to be the deliberate opinion of Judge PEABODY. That opinion was only a confirmation of what had been aimed at by a party reckless in its opinions as to what might be done with the people of this City. It was the opinion of a judge who, if he understood the matter rightly, had never been elected by the people. He now wished to please the Governor who had placed him in this present position, and he was naturally anxious to sustain his own party—the party who had elected another Governor of the same stripe—in controlling the destinies of the City in relation, not merely to the Police, but also in reference to its judicial decisions. The Board of Councilmen ought not to be governed by his opinion; it ought to have no weight with them.

Judge ROOSEVELT, of whom it might be said the old Knickerbocker blood flows in his veins, was of a contrary opinion, and he undoubtedly was an advocate of the rights of the City. If this view of the law were correct, New-York had but five policemen, and if we might believe the District Attorney, our property was exposed to plunder. The whole affair of a Metropolitan Police was a State arrangement, and it did not and could not supersede the existence of a City Watch, as secured by the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter.

Councilman OTTARSON's amendment being put to the vote, it was rejected, and the Mayor's Message was referred to the Special Committee already existing, of which Councilman JONES is Chairman.

A resolution was then offered by Councilman HOPPER, that the Comptroller be ordered to pay no more money on account of road-making since May 1, until the previous incumbent of the office of the Superintendent of Roads shall be declared legally in possession of the appointment, or another be appointed in his place.

After some debate the resolution was laid on the table.

WOODMAN! SPARE THAT TREE.

A resolution was brought in from the Board of Aldermen, to spare two trees on Franklin-street. Councilman WAUGH to cought the aforesaid trees only served as a convenient rendezvous or trysting place for night walkers.

Councilman BRADY pleaded for the trees. He thought the proposal might be dictated by spite.

The Board did not concur with the Aldermen, so the trees are doomed to come down.

A resolution was offered instructing the Comptroller to pay no warrants to any person holding office under the recent acts of the Legislature, until declared constitutional by the Courts. Referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Board concurred with the action of the Board of Aldermen in reference to the contemplated erection of a new Post-Office, in a resolution authorizing the Mayor to open negotiations with the President of the United States to cede a portion of the Park to the General Government for that purpose, and to report to the Common Council.

The Board concurred by a vote of 42 to 5, with the Board of Aldermen, in instructing the Corporation Counsel to restrain the Second-avenue Railway Company from laying rails in any other streets of the City, under a recent act, and to test the validity of such act.

They also concurred in a resolution from the Board of Aldermen, requiring the Union Ferry Company to remove, within twenty days, the ferry-house and other obstructions at the Gouverneur-street slip.

Several petitions and papers from the Board of Aldermen, of a routine and private character, were acted upon by this Board. Among these was the Report of the Committee on Finance, which was adopted.

A preamble and resolution was received from the Board of Aldermen, to call a convention of five persons from each Ward, to deliberate on the recent acts of the Legislature. The document was very lengthy.

Councilman JONES said the people were unanimous on this subject. He did not perceive how Delegates were to be elected. He was opposed to everything that seemed, on its face, to oppose the laws of the land. The people of the State are Democratic and Republican at heart, and the recent laws had been thrust upon them by a few reckless legislators. If they would only go to the ballot-box, and appeal to the people, the result would be, that the people at large would see how they had been wronged. All the cry of the District-Attorney about impending bloodshed was not Democratic. The people could well protect themselves. They needed that their heads and hearts should be appealed to. It was a commonsense matter. After six months a conservative appeal could be made to the ballot box. The resolutions were altogether wrong in principle, and ought to be referred to a Special Committee. It was bad to throw firebrands among the people. The resolutions were referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Various other documents were referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Councilman OTTARSON called for the reading of the report of the Special Committee on Night Watch.

The following is the report, and ordinance founded upon it. It was referred to the Committee of the Whole:

The Special Committee to whom was referred the preamble and resolutions on the subject of the establishment of a new police system, or day and night watch, beg leave to

REPORT,

That they have given the subject that attention which its importance demands.

We find that the Dongan and Montgomerie Charter contains ample power upon the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York, to organize a police force for the protection of life and property of the citizens—that this charter has recently been reaffirmed by the Legislature, and that, therefore, there can be no question as to the legality of the exercise of this authority.

We think that if the State wishes to establish a State police for State purposes to be organized under State authority and by officers appointed by the Executive of the State, it can do so provided its expenses are borne by the State Treasury, and it shall not attempt to interfere with the day and night watch system organized by the municipal corporation.

The cue is not inconsistent in law with the other, though it is feared that our people will naturally be jealous of an outside interference with their local rights and collision of police authority may ensue. Be this as it may, it is certain that the time has arrived when New York must assert her ancient and inalienable rights, franchises, privileges and prerogatives, if she has any left, and exercise them fearlessly in the maintenance of municipal independence.

After a careful examination of the whole subject, we have concluded to report the following ordinance, which we think will reach the case, and which we recommend for immediate adoption.

T. JONES, JR.,
GEORGE WARNER,
PETER CRAWFORD,
JESSE S. SICLES,
JOHN KETTLEMAN. } Committee.

AN ORDINANCE to establish a Bureau of Day and Night Watch, or Municipal Police.

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

Whereas, The Common Council of the City of New-York are fully authorized to pass such laws and ordinances as they may deem proper for the suppression of vice and immorality, and the preservation of peace and good order—

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1. The Department now known as the Police Department shall be a bureau in the Mayor's office, to be called the Bureau of City Watch or Municipal Police, and the head or chief officer thereof is denominated Chief of Police.

SEC. 2. The officers of the Police Department, as existing under laws passed previous to 1857, who are denominated captains and lieutenants of police, surgeons of police, sergeants of police, policemen and doormen, shall be officers of the Bureau of Police as now established.

SEC. 3. The several officers mentioned in the last two sections shall continue to possess the powers and to perform the duties conferred and imposed upon them by the laws and ordinances. The rules and regulations for the government of the Police hereby created heretofore prescribed by the Mayor and Commissioners shall continue to govern the officers of this bureau, but the Mayor may at any time abrogate or alter those regulations, or substitute others in their stead.

SEC. 4. The policemen, or watchmen, for the various Wards of the City of New-York shall be continued to be appointed as follows:

First Ward	59	Twelfth Ward	70
Second Ward	43	Thirteenth Ward	55
Third Ward	42	Fourteenth Ward	55
Fourth Ward	60	Fifteenth Ward	45
Fifth Ward	59	Sixteenth Ward	63
Sixth Ward	66	Seventeenth Ward	65
Seventh Ward	56	Eighteenth Ward	56
Eighth Ward	66	Nineteenth Ward	56
Ninth Ward	60	Twentieth Ward	56
Tenth Ward	60	Twenty-first Ward	56
Eleventh Ward	60	Twenty-second Ward	56

and such additional patrolmen as the public necessities may require.

SEC. 5. There shall be appointed by the Chief of Police one clerk, who shall be denominated clerk to the chief of police, and who shall perform all such duties appertaining to this bureau as he may require.

SEC. 6. If a policeman shall necessarily incur an expense in conveying a person before a magistrate or to a police station-house, or to the hospital by the employment of a coach or other vehicle, the Chief of Police shall refund the expense so incurred upon the certificate of the magistrate or captain before whom the person is brought, stating that he was necessarily brought by the policeman before the magistrate or captain on a cart or other vehicle.

SEC. 7. The captains of police, or in their absence the lieutenants, may furnish food to persons in custody in their respective station-houses, and who are in a suffering condition, the expense whereof shall be paid by the Chief of Police, upon the affidavit of the captain or either of the lieutenants.

SEC. 8. If a policeman shall necessarily incur an expense in conveying stolen or other property to the office of the Chief of Police, or to a Police Court or Police station-house, the expense so incurred shall be refunded to him by the Chief of Police on the certificate of the magistrate or captain to whom the property was delivered.

SEC. 9. For the purpose of defraying any expense which may be incurred in pursuance of the last three sections, the Chief of Police may, by a requisition in writing, to be countersigned by the Mayor, draw upon the Comptroller for a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars. He may in like manner renew the drafts as often as may be necessary; but no such renewal shall be made until the money paid upon the previous draft shall be accounted for to the Comptroller by satisfactory vouchers for the expenditure of the money paid thereon.

SEC. 10. When a draft shall be made on the Comptroller, in conformity with the last section, he shall draw his warrant in favor of the Chief of Police for the amount thereof.

SEC. 11. The officers of this bureau are required, to the utmost of their ability, to act in the enforcement of the Corporation Ordinances now in force in relation to carts and cartmen, cabs and cabmen, hackney coaches and hackney coachmen, stages and accommodation coaches and their drivers, omnibuses and omnibus drivers, and public porters and of hand cartmen, and all ordinances of the Corporation to prevent evil practices, and relating to the Police of the City.

SEC. 12. The Police Station-houses in the different districts shall be deemed a portion of the City Prison and Bridewell, for the purpose of keeping and detaining persons committed for examination, and for no other purpose whatever, and the Captains and Lieutenants of each District shall be the keepers thereof respectively, and shall for that purpose be deemed deputy keepers of the City Prisons and Bridewell.

SEC. 13. All appointments and removals of officers under this ordinance not otherwise provided for, shall be made by the Mayor.

SEC. 14. The sum of eight hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, authorized by the act of March 5, 1857, to be collected by tax on the estate, real and personal, subject to taxation, according to law, for defraying the expenses of Police, are hereby appropriated to the Police or Watch established by this ordinance, and the Comptroller is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant therefor upon the pay-rolls of the several captains and the proper requisitions of the Chief of Police.

SEC. 15. The Police Station-houses in the several Wards, the Telegraph apparatus and all other property belonging to the Corporation hereto used for police purposes, are hereby appropriated to and shall continue to be used by the Police or Day and Night Watch thereby organized.

SEC. 16. This ordinance shall take effect immediately.

The Board concurred with the Board of Aldermen in a resolution directing Corporation Counsel to test the constitutionality of the act appointing Commissioners to build a City Hall, declaring the same to be a usurpation of power and an infringement upon the rights of the Corporation.

After other minor important business the Board adjourned to Thursday.

The Excise Commissioners.

Mr. KERR, one of the Commissioners, whose sudden illness, last Saturday, prevented a meeting of the Commissioners on that day, has quite recovered his health. A second meeting for the reception of petitions for license will be held to morrow, at 11 o'clock, at the Common Pleas Court room, City Hall.

An interesting question is now under consideration between the Commissioners, as to the number of days they can meet under the new law, and yet draw the $3 per diem compensation. There are two sections of the act bearing upon this point. In the first of these sections it is stated that the Commissioners of Excise shall meet in their respective counties on the third Tuesday of May in each year, and on such other days as a majority of the Commissioners shall appoint, not exceeding ten days in any one year, and in the City of New-York not exceeding fifty days, for the purpose of granting licenses, &c. The other section referred to declares that the members composing the Board of Excise "shall be entitled each to receive the sum of $3 per day for services actually performed."

Mr. HASKETT claims that, under the section quoted, the Commissioners can meet every day, if they like, during their continuance in office, it being only necessary that some actual service should be performed each day.

The limitation of "fifty days" he insists, is only a limitation of meetings to be held for the purpose of granting licenses. Sessions as numerous as they choose can be held to receive petitions or transact other business, only not over fifty days must be expended in determining to whom licenses shall be granted.

Mr. KERR, on the other hand, held that for all sessions over fifty days the Commissioners will have to whistle for their pay.

The rumor about the Excise rooms was, that the Temperance people have organized quietly, raised a fund, and are canvassing for the names of all parties now selling liquor without a license—and that a juicy time may be expected soon from that source.

NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1857.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

In the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, the Police Commission case of FERNANDO WOOD vs. SIMEON DRAPER and others, was decided. Justices MITCHELL and PEABODY agreed in upholding the constitutionality of the Police law, and in dismissing the quo warranto with costs. Thus the judgment at Special Term was affirmed. Judge ROOSEVELT, however, dissents, and renders an opinion, in which he gives his reasons therefor. He thinks the law will tend to the consolidation of power in the hands of the Legislature. The mandamus against Judge RUSSELL was decided, the judgment of the Special Term being affirmed.

The old Police Commissioners did not meet yesterday. The new Board held a regular meeting at which proposals for new Station-houses were received and referred. Charges of disobedience of orders were made by Deputy Superintendent CARPENTER against First-Lieutenant MARTIN of the Fifth Ward. These charges will be examined on Thursday. President DRAPER offered a resolution that "the force at the First Ward Station-house be divided as near as may be, and transferred to the Second and Third Ward Stations equally; this order to take effect on the 1st of June next, and the officers of the present First Ward force to be returned to the rank of patrolmen; and thereafter the three wards be united in one police precinct."

The Board of Councilmen had a busy sitting last evening. A long message from the Mayor was received calling for the establishment of a night watch under the Dongan Charter. The matter was referred to a Special Committee, of which Councilman JONES is Chairman. A resolution to appoint a Convention of five to deliberate on the recent acts of the Legislature, was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KERR, the new Excise Police Commissioner, has just recovered from his late sudden indisposition. A meeting of the Commissioners will be held to-morrow, at 11 A. M., at the Common Pleas Court-room, City Hall. Meantime the Commissioners are in a quandary as to the number of days they can hold sessions under the new law, and be entitled to the allowed $3 per diem.

The friends of a Prohibitory Law held a meeting in the City Assembly Rooms last evening, and decided in favor of laboring for the enforcement of the new Excise Law, believing the effect of it would be to pave the way for entire prohibition. The meeting was addressed by HORACE GREELEY, WM. E. DODGE, WM. H. ARMSTRONG, Mr. JAY, Mr. CHRISTIAN PENCE and others, and was very well attended.

The officers of the New-York Citizen Volunteers held a special meeting last night for the purpose of reorganizing. Alderman WILSON, of the First Ward, was chosen Commander-in-Chief. He made a speech on the occasion, in which he reflected strongly upon the Republican members of the late Legislature, and declared that the Democracy of New-York City would stand firm for their rights.

Several witnesses were examined at the office of the District-Attorney yesterday, relative to the brutal assaults alleged to have been committed upon the seamen of the ship Middleser, with a view of releasing them from the Eldridge-street Prison, where they have been confined since the 20th of April. On Friday the case was called up before Judge INGERSOLL, when, upon application of the defendant's counsel, the case was postponed to the next term of the Court in October, on account of the absence of a material witness—the Doctor of the ship.

Mr. ZENGLER, of the New-York Medical College, was blown out of his room by an explosion, and everything smashed in the laboratory, where he was attempting to fill a large India-rubber bag with oxygen gas. People in the neighborhood hearing the noise thought an arriving steamer had fired a gun.

The General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church yesterday resumed its discussion of the proposed basis of Union, without, however, arriving at any conclusion. In the evening Rev. Dr. FORSYTH, of Newburg, delivered a sermon on the "History of Presbyterianism."

To-day, at 3 o'clock, the members of the Dental profession are invited to meet at No. 3 Great Jones-street, to accompany the remains of Dr. C. C. ALLEN to the Church of the Ascension, to attend his funeral. Dr. ALLEN died on Sunday morning last, in this City.

JONATHAN S. JENKINS, United States Consul at the Navigator's Islands, was arrested yesterday afternoon at Washington on a charge of piracy. The charge is founded on the alleged illegal seizure and sale of property belonging to citizens of the United States. He will be brought to this City for trial, having first landed here on his return to the country.

ORSON PRATT, the Mormon Elder, the telegraph informs us, has been killed by a man named HECTOR, whose wife he had seduced. The occurrence took place on the 14th inst., near Van Buren, Arkansas.

The Police War—The Position of Mayor Wood.

The Supreme Court for the City and County of New-York has affirmed the Constitutionality of the Police law of 1857. Its decision to that effect, pronounced at General Term yesterday, will be found in another part of this morning's TIMES, together with the opinion of Judge ROOSEVELT, the only dissenting Justice. This decision deprives Mayor WOOD of all color of right for offering any further resistance to the law upon the ground that its validity has not been affirmed by the judicial tribunals.

We have hitherto maintained that every law duly enacted by the Legislature must be presumed to be constitutional until it is decided to be otherwise by the duly authorized Courts of law. The Legislature is clothed with power to make laws; and Executive officers are required to support and enforce them, until the Judiciary shall have pronounced them invalid. We find this view of the case very clearly and very strongly stated in a Proclamation issued by Mayor WOOD, on the 16th of April, 1855,—immediately after the enactment by the Legislature of the Prohibitory Liquor Law. That law was very generally regarded as unconstitutional, not only by those whose business was to be directly and disastrously affected by it, but by many of the most prominent lawyers of the City and State:—and the expectation seems to have been entertained that the Mayor would not attempt its enforcement until after its constitutionality should have been tested in the Courts of law. The following extract from the Proclamation issued by Mayor WOOD on that occasion will show his views upon that subject:

"Another marked characteristic of the American people, is the universal submission to the governmental forms restricting the powers and duties of the three components of Government, viz.:—The Legislative, the Judicial, and the Executive. The first can only make the laws, the second can only expound them, and the third has no discretion but to see them faithfully executed. It is my province to act as agent for the people in one of these departments. I am an Executive officer. I aid in the execution of the laws, and I am sworn to do so 'to the best of my ability.' Will neglect or responsibility in their execution, so far as the State legislation is concerned, I have no option but compliance as an instrument for their enforcement, and to require a compliance in others, as far as I have the ability. It is my duty to exact obedience, and yours to obey. The officer of the law is not accountable for the making of the law; he is bound to execute it pursuant to his oath of office, though the responsibility of the people as the source of all political power cannot be so easily denied. As Mayor I have endeavored to fulfill this duty. Though sometimes painful, yet it has been performed diligently and impartially. I hope to continue without relaxation.

The act relating to the prohibition of the liquor traffic and consumption is now a law, holding the same position as any other law, and, UNTIL DECIDED INVALID BY THE COURTS, or amended or repealed by the Legislature, should command the same obedience. So far as its execution depends upon me, I have no discretion but to exercise all my power to enforce it. It is unnecessary for me to express an opinion in regard to legislation of this character, or of this law; for, whatever that opinion may be, I cannot without dishonor shrink from a faithful discharge of the trust confided, whatever shall be the personal consequences to myself. I now call upon the friends of law and order to aid in the performance of this obligation, and IN SUSTAINING THE LAWS—a principle upon which rests the corner stone of our national prosperity and greatness. Deeming my course with reference to this subject of interest to those whose occupations are to be affected, and especially to those whose licenses will expire with the year ending the 1st of May ensuing, I have felt it incumbent upon me to indicate it frankly.

FERNANDO WOOD.

Nothing can be clearer or more explicit than this. Mayor WOOD declares that it is his solemn duty to enforce the laws duly enacted by the State Legislature:—that he is bound to regard them all as valid until decided otherwise by the Courts:—and that he cannot "without dishonor" shrink from this duty which he has solemnly sworn to perform. His reasoning is perfectly conclusive as to the line of conduct which he should have pursued with reference to the new Police Law. Upon his own showing—in advance of any action of the Courts or officers of the law—he was bound to regard it as constitutional and valid, and to enforce it in accordance with his oath of office.

But after the decision of a Court of law the case becomes much stronger. Even the opinions of his legal advisers, in the case already referred to, Mayor WOOD deemed sufficient to overrule his own convictions and to induce a change of action. In regard to that law both R. J. DILLON and A. OAKEY HALL—one the Corporation Counsel and the other District-Attorney, gave opinions that the law was inoperative and void:—whereupon Mayor WOOD, on the 27th of April, issued another proclamation, in which he thus stated his views upon the subject:

"The opinions of my legal adviser are before the public, and their conclusions need but brief reiteration at my hands. In my capacity as Mayor, the Corporation Counsel is, by the Charter, constituted my guide; in my functions as Magistrate, the District Attorney becomes my coöperator. These gentlemen sustain the same relations to me as are held by Attorney Generals in the President or the Governor. To act contrary to their direction, until it is superseded by ABSOLUTE JUDICIAL DECLARATION, would be an illegal assumption, for doubtful powers are thus made certain. I have no discretion but to take any other line of conduct, without doing what could be properly charged as an illegal assumption of power unauthorized by law. Therefore, while standing ever ready to execute all laws faithfully and diligently, to the extent of the means placed at my command, I am, like other executive officers, confined within the boundaries prescribed by the legal advisers of my office—to act contrary, would be to violate the law, or what I am obliged to consider the law, until decided to be otherwise by the Courts.

FERNANDO WOOD.

Mayor WOOD thus distinctly recognizes first, the duty of regarding every law as valid and carrying it into execution, unless otherwise advised;—second, the duty of yielding to the opinions of the Corporation Counsel and District-Attorney, in regard to the validity of any law; and third, the duty of regarding the decision of a Court of law as final and conclusive, even against his own opinions and those of his legal advisers, until reversed by a higher Court. These principles leave him no possibility of escaping or evading the duty of regarding the new Police Law, under the decision of the Supreme Court, as a valid law, and of aiding its enforcement. He may appeal from that decision;—but until that appeal is heard and decided, unless a stay of proceedings be granted, the law is in full force and effect. If Mayor WOOD, or any man by his orders, resists the law after its validity has thus been judicially affirmed, he will be legally accountable. If he kills a man in so doing he will be held legally guilty of murder:—and he will not be protected by the plea that he thought this decision of the Supreme Court might be reversed.

There is one point in the case which makes Mayor WOOD'S position somewhat ridiculous. He claims to be the champion of the rights of the City against the State authorities. He declares that the people and the officers of the City must be permitted to govern themselves—to make, interpret and execute their own laws, without interference or encroachment from Albany. Judge ROOSEVELT harps upon the same string, and in very much the same strain. Now the Supreme Court, which has just given the decision is a City Court. Its jurisdiction is within the City and County of New-York. Its Judges were elected by our own people and represent our local sovereignty. But Mayor WOOD is not disposed to accept their decision. He appeals to a State Court! He abandons our local tribunals and looks to Albany for a reversal of their judgments! He denounces the State Legislature for meddling in City affairs—but appeals to a State Court against the decision of a City Court. He invokes the action of Judges from Monroe, and Allegany, and St. Lawrence Counties to vindicate the right of New-York City to govern itself, by reversing and overruling the decision of its own tribunal!

We have said nothing of the merits of the Opinion of the Supreme Court as delivered by Judge PEABODY, or of the dissenting opinion of Judge ROOSEVELT, because they have nothing to do with the Mayor's duty in the present state of affairs. Whether the decision shall ultimately be reversed or not, it must stand until reversed as the authoritative interpretation of the law: and Mayor WOOD is bound by his oath of office so to regard and treat it.

The Mayor, in his Message sent to the Common Council last evening, betrays a consciousness of the weakness of his position by recommending the organization of a Watch as authorized by the Dongan and Montgomerie Charters! The absurdity of this advice must be apparent to every one who knows anything of the history of legislation in regard to this City. The Mayor insists that these Charters have never been repealed, but are still in full force and authority. It may be well enough to remind His Honor that by the Montgomerie Charter the Mayor of the City was to be appointed by the Governor of the Province,—so that if we are to go back to these old Charters for the Government of the City, we may as well make a clean thing of it and begin at the beginning. Gov. KING has just as clear a right, if these Charters are law, to appoint a Mayor in place of Mayor WOOD or to act in "conjunction" with him, as the Common Council has to organize a City watch upon the plan which the Mayor recommends.

Throughout the controversy, which is drawing to its close, the subordinate officers and members of the Police Department have behaved with marked discretion and moderation. They were placed at the outset in a position of cruel embarrassment. They were required to decide between the contending parties,—certain of instant dismissal from the other side, if they adhered to either. The Mayor has done his best to force them into a position of active hostility,—to engage them in violent resistance to the legal Police and thus plunge the City into commotion and bloodshed. We have been saved from this disaster and disgrace by the prudence of the department. While they have proceeded in the regular discharge of their duties, they have abstained from everything like violence on either side and have quietly awaited the legal decision which must eventually determine the contest. The decision already given will go far towards convincing them of the real nature of the service and sacrifice which the Mayor has required at their hands.

Revision of Naval Reform.

This journal was among those which advocated the adoption of some summary process for the purification of our Navy, prior to the authorization of the late Retiring Board. We believed that something of the sort was essential to the good of the Navy itself and to the public service. It was patent to all that this important arm of the National defence was paralyzed to greater or less extent by a host of men quartered upon it who were either morally, mentally or physically disqualified for the duties of the places occupied by them. Some had disgraced themselves and the Navy by drunkenness and other acts of beastiality. Some never had possessed the mental qualifications essential to the position—were notoriously imprudent, rash, headstrong and untrustworthy. Others had in various ways proved themselves destitute of every moral qualification—and still others had for years made the service a mere convenience—wearing the button because it gave them rank and the entrée into good society, but managing never to be at all burdened with the practical duties and labors of their profession.

Experience had proved that these incubi were generally able to escape the sentence of a Court Martial. With the aid of influential friends, and a judicious expenditure of soft words in the right quarter, they defied all attempts to bring them up, in the matter of services, to the standard of their comrades, who, with more merit, had fewer friends. The latter, consequently, were compelled to do the work of both, while the drones stood directly in the path of preferment, and so robbed them of the promotion due as the reward of double and faithful service. All this needed correction, and there seemed to be no mode of securing it except by the creation of a Board of naval officers, who should have power summarily to strike from the roll, or reduce to half pay, men who had proved their incapacity or unworthiness to fill the places out of which they crowded the deserving. The Naval Retiring Board, accordingly, was organized, and the results are well known.

It is not our present purpose to discuss the propriety of all its acts. We believe that it accomplished much good, although it is not improbable that it was betrayed into some serious errors. We have reason to believe that a small portion of those who fell under its ban deserved a better fate; and there can be no doubt that the Navy still contains a number of officers who richly deserve the severest sentence in the power of the Board to recommend. Still, on the whole, so much of good was done that Congress, the Navy and the public have sustained and indorsed the general action of the Board, and all efforts to set it aside have proved abortive. In order, however, to correct any errors into which the Board might have fallen, Congress subsequently authorized the sitting of Courts of Inquiry to try such of the dropped or furloughed officers as deemed themselves unjustly dealt by, with a view to their restoration to the service if found competent in all respects.

These Courts are now sitting; and we hear every day serious complaints against their mode of conduct, and the course of examination pursued on behalf of the Government. It is to be hoped that all reasonable cause for such complaint will be removed. If the Secretary of the Navy would conserve public confidence in and respect for the mode adopted to free the service of useless or unworthy material,—if he would not make martyrs of men justly punished,—he must take care that no harsh or unjust measures are taken to prevent the men who have been stricken from obtaining restoration to the service if found to have been qualified therefor at the time of their forced "retiring." The passage of the law authorizing these Courts of Inquiry, is an admission of the possibility, not to say probability, of error in some cases; and it behooves the Secretary of the Navy to offer every facility to the elucidation of both cases. Above all, he, and those who act in his name or in behalf of the Service before the Courts, should not fall into the error of supposing it their duty to prevent an aspiring officer from throwing off the load cast upon him by the Retiring Board. Their power is simply and alone to ascertain, by a process of revision, whether the burden was justly imposed.

We are led to these remarks by information seeming to show that the Courts of Inquiry are pursuing a different course. For instance, we are told that, in one case, an officer who seeks restoration is called upon to answer for having many years ago challenged his superior officer, and subsequently resigning his commission, in order to obviate the objection made to the acceptance of his challenge, on the ground of inequality of rank. The whole subject was investigated at the time, the officer was restored to his commission, and years of faithful service elapsed between that occurrence and the adverse recommendation of the Retiring Board. Why should he be called upon, at this late day, to answer upon such a point? The demand is clearly unjust, oppressive and contrary to the spirit of the Common Law. The question of his physical, mental or moral fitness for the position of a naval officer, at the time of his prescription, in no degree depends upon the circumstances attending a youthful indiscretion, especially when that had already been once the subject of adjudication by the proper authority. In the name of common justice we protest against the spirit which prompts such a course of procedure. It is not only unjust to the individuals affected by it, but calculated to reflect discredit upon the country, and infuse discontent, discouragement and consequent inefficiency in the Naval Service.

A Municipal Blister Needed.

The District-Attorney has issued a card, in which he informs the commercial community that the burglars of the City have determined to take advantage of the dissensions and insubordination amongst the Police to make a general raid upon the property of merchants and bankers, and he proposes a system of watch and ward for the purpose of counteracting their schemes. He suggests the propriety of keeping clerks up all night and leaving the shutters partially open, with lights burning inside in the various offices and warerooms, so that the watch may be able to see in, and also we may add, in order that any extra lights the burglars may require in the exercise of their vocation may not attract notice. Such a notification as this emanating from the public prosecutor, is equivalent to saying that the Government of the country is paralyzed, has deserted its post, and that every man must now take care of himself, and put his trust in Providence.

We have been of opinion for a long while that it would come to this some time, and we can only say that if Mr. HALL'S information be trustworthy, and his warning given in good faith—and we see no reason to doubt either one or the other—we are heartily glad that the crisis has arrived. We hope the burglars and rowdies will acquit themselves like men, and make as good use of their time as they possibly can. If they have the slightest wish to atone to the community for their past follies and transgressions—and we have no doubt that many amongst them still cherish the hope of regaining the position they have lost—we would cordially recommend their making a descent either upon the offices or private dwellings of our leading citizens. We could bear with some equanimity that they had cleared some of our best mansions of their plate, and carried off the communion service of a few of the more fashionable churches. We think the value of the exploit might be enhanced by the infliction of a sound cudgeling upon half a dozen fathers of families, in the presence of their wives and in their own bedrooms. A few judicious bank robberies, accompanied by violence, and combined with setting fire to one or two ships in the harbor, and a general smash of the Croton water pipes, would form a nice and appropriate conclusion to the whole proceeding.

We desire to see all this accomplished, not we need hardly say, from any inherent delight we take in the contemplation of burglary, arson and sacrilege, but because we are most anxious that those most interested in the promoting of order in the City should be forced into taking some part in the work. We should like, for example, to hear of Commodore VANDERBILT taking charge of a "beat" on some of the piers, and coming off victorious in a few desperate encounters with river thieves and inebriated pugilists, though at the cost of some detriment to his personal appearance. GEORGE LAW, and the eminent fillibustering firm of CHARLES MORGAN & SONS, might render the State some service by taking charge, for a few nights, of the Five Points, and keeping order amongst the denizens of that locality. Messrs. ASPINWALL, GRINNELL, and one or two others of the same position, would look singularly well making their rounds in Wall or William-street, with cudgels and dark lanterns. How edifying it would be, in case they undertake the duties we feel disposed to assign them, if the burglars should inure them to the perils and trials of the position by thrashing them soundly all round, taking their watches and money, and swearing them to secrecy.

Our readers will be, doubtless, astonished to see such hints as the foregoing thrown out in our columns. Under ordinary circumstances, we confess we should be sorry to give utterance to hypotheses of so ferocious a character, but we call all men to witness that these visions are forced upon us by the necessities of the times. Personal animosity to the gentlemen we have named, it is hardly necessary for us to repudiate. We invoke the aid of the burglars and robbers, and pugilists not because we love MORGAN, and ASPINWALL and VANDERBILT and LAW, and GRINNELL less, but because we love New-York more. Desperate diseases call for desperate remedies. It is to the supine and shameful indifference of our well-to-do classes that we owe the outrageous scandals which are now being daily enacted by the rival police authorities of this City, to the great terror and demoralization of the peaceful inhabitants, and the great shame of the whole community. To their selfish absorption in their own affairs is due our Municipal insecurity, corruption, and mal-administration. Exhortation has been lavished on them in vain, and we confess we despair of enlisting them in the public service by any arguments less potent than serious and palpable injury to their persons and property. We should like to see what effect nights of walking, days of toil and anxiety and heavy pecuniary loss would have on those subtle brains and selfish hearts. The Dutch broke down their dykes and called in their terrible foe the Ocean to save them from the yoke of a foreign invader. We call on the law breakers to put an end by their very excesses to the reign of anarchy and confusion.

ISSUE OF THE NEW CENT.—The Mint began the issue of this new Coin yesterday. The first installment was brought to this City by KINSLEY & Co.'s Express. We also received specimens from ADAMS & Co. Large quantities were taken up at the Mint during the day. The coin is a vast improvement over the old one and is destitute of the coppery odor.

QUARANTINE CONTRACTS.—The Quarantine Commissioners have contracted with GEO. L. QUIRK and OLIVER T. HOWARD for the construction of all the necessary fence at the Quarantine grounds, being about 3,000 feet, for 75 cents per lineal foot, not $3 per foot, as erroneously stated.

Messrs. DOBSON & LEWIS have contracted for the erection of the buildings for $2,302 each, according to the plans and specifications prepared by KING & KELLUM, architects.

The buildings, fences, &c., are of light materials and so constructed that they can be easily removed when the permanent location is made.

[FROM OUR REGULAR TELEGRAPHIC REPORTER.]

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 25.

JONATHAN S. JENKINS, United States Consul at the Navigator's Islands, was arrested this afternoon, on the steps of the State Department, immediately after his interview with Assistant-Secretary APPLETON. The warrant was issued by Justice GODDARD, on a charge of piracy, and was sworn to by Dr. VAN CAMP. The charge is, seizing by force of arms and selling a large amount of property belonging to citizens of the United States, including the cargo of the ship Eudorus, in the harbor of Apia. It appears from papers filed in the Department, that on the arrival of Mr. JENKINS there, he formed an Admiralty Court, styling himself Vice-Commissioner, appointed Assistant Judges, Marshal, etc.

The property alleged to have been sacrificed amounted to about £70,000, while that of V. P. CHAPIN and A. VAN CAMP was over $100,000. Mr. JENKINS was committed to await the requisition of the Governor of New-York, where the case must be tried, he having first touched the soil of that State on his return to this country.

The Postmaster-General has allowed the claims of Captain BUCKNAM and KELLY, of $15,000 per annum, for extra steamboat mail service from Apalachicola to Suwanee Bridge, Georgia.

Mr. MORSE, late Special Commissioner to Bogota, has arrived here on business concerning his mission.

New-Orleans papers, of Tuesday of last week, are to hand. They contain Galveston dates to the 17th inst. General HOUSTON had declared himself a candidate for Governor of Texas, and commenced stumping the State.

The Foreign Appointments—Views of the President—Disappointments.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, May 24, 1857.

The sybilline article of the Union, respecting the appointments for Diplomatic and Consular offices is, no doubt, intended to prepare the minds of some hundreds of Mr. BUCHANAN'S friends for a mortifying disappointment. The chief reason why the appointments are not made at once is, that Mr. BUCHANAN is up to his eyes in personal pledges to his numerous friends, which could not be redeemed, even if the number of offices, Diplomatic and Consular, were quadrupled.

Every influential Democrat has a fancy for a Diplomatic position. There must be a great charm in offices which so few are willing to quit, after having once tried them. No one of our American diplomats is even willing to come home. Their attachment to courts and aristocratic modes of life must come by nature—because in the circle of foreign diplomacy they are never considered otherwise than as outsiders. They may be in the circle, but they are not of it.

Mr. FAY and Mr. J. R. CLAY have been employed abroad ever since the year 1829; long enough to have become naturalized to foreign soil and weaned from their own. I learn that the rotation principle will be applied to them.

The time will soon come when the United States will be able to dispense with the diplomatic force which is kept up now for no beneficial purpose, except to give salaries to a few party politicians. Where there is any business to be done between the United States and foreign governments, let us send special ministers. But to retain legations at foreign courts is unnecessary for any objects that this Government can properly have in view.

Mr. DICKINSON is still here, and last night was serenaded. It is known that Mr. BUCHANAN would give him any office that he would accept. He was offered the New-York Collectorship and declined it. Some suppose that he will be offered the mission to England but that is doubtful.

It is believed that the Russian mission will go to Illinois. Mr. MCCLERNAND, as is said by some of his friends, had the promise of it some time ago.

The applicants for Foreign Missions who are now here, are expected to retire, after the announcement in to-day's Union. The President has their papers before him, and does not desire to peruse them forever.

All applicants will have another hint next week that they need not wait longer, by the departure of three or four of the Cabinet upon the great railroad excursion.

Presentation of the Elk-horn Chair to the President—Interesting Ceremony.

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 25, 1857.

The most interesting feature of the past week, was the presentation, on Saturday last, of the Elk-horn chair to the President by Mr. SETH KINMAN, the California trapper. The ceremony took place at 2 o'clock P. M., in the East Room of the Executive Mansion, where was witnessed for the first time the novel and attractive scene of a special public interview between an American trapper of the far-distant Western wilds of the Pacific and the President of the United States. Mr. KINMAN was escorted to the White House by Gen. DENVER of California, Col STANBEAU, and Major ARNOLD HARRIS. The chair had been previously deposited in the East Room, where a large concourse of ladies and gentlemen had assembled to witness the ceremony. The legs of the chair are made of the horns of the stag or elk, with the antlers forming the back and arms, being highly polished; and the seat of a soft, beautifully dressed white skin. It is very commodious, and seems especially made for ease and comfort. At 2 o'clock the trapper entered the East Room accompanied by his escort, dressed in his deer-skin hunting shirt and trowsers, with his rifle on his shoulder. He wore his hunting shirt open at the neck, exposing a red flannel waistcoat, and the legs of his boots outside of his trowsers. He is about five feet eleven inches in height, spare but well made, and of great muscular power and activity. His features are regular, and rather prepossessing. He has a sharp, keen blue eye, dark chestnut hair, inclined to curl, with full beard and moustache, a shade lighter than his hair. On his entering he was immediately surrounded, and several persons were introduced to him. Col. BUCHANAN, U. S. A., who has been for some time in California, approached the trapper and said:

"SETH, do you know me?"

The trapper, after scanning his features, made a movement of surprise and pleasure towards the Colonel, and said, "Yes, it is not easy to forget your sign—you are Col. BUCHANAN, and I am right glad to see you." The two heartily shook hands, and inquiries were made after mutual friends.

"Do you remember this old shot-pouch?" asked the trapper, putting his hand upon a square leather bag which hung with other trappings over his shoulder.

"I do well," replied the Colonel, "and while I acknowledge its services, I have no longing to be one of its companions again under similar circumstances. I can fully indorse you, SETH."

The trapper then passed on and took his position by the side of the elk-horn chair, leaning upon his rifle, and the assembly formed a large circle around him. The President, entering from the main corridor, was then announced, and the circle opened to receive him. General DENVER stepped forward and formally presented Mr. KINMAN to the President. Mr. BUCHANAN took the trapper by the hand and cordially welcomed him, saying, "I believe you are from Berks County, Pennsylvania?"

"No, Sir," replied the trapper, in a low and modest tone, "I am from old Union. That's my native county. I left it in 1830 for the West, and have since been twice crossed the Rocky Mountains. I return to the States for the first time with the only purpose of presenting to you, Sir, this chair. I killed the elks myself—four of 'em—and it took some time before I could get the antlers that I wanted. This, Sir, is the first piece of cabinet-making that I ever tried my hand at. (Great laughter by the audience.) You will find it sound, fast and true, (putting his hand upon the chair,) as it is bound together by the native trees of California, I assure you, Sir, it will give you a safe support to the end of your life, which I hope will be a good long one."

The President, in reply, said: "I accept this chair with great pleasure. I shall value it highly. It will serve to remind me of the wilds of California and the Californians. They are a stamp of men that can be counted, but cannot be duplicated. I will carry it home with me to Pennsylvania after I retire from the Presidency, and prize it as one of the most pleasing reminiscences of my official career."

Then, turning his attention to the rifle of the trapper, Mr. BUCHANAN said: "What do you call your gun?"

"Long Tom," answered the trapper, "and many a time has my life depended on her and a steady nerve, or I would have been wiped out long ago!"

Again reverting to the chair, the trapper said: "I have never permitted any man to sit in this chair, as I determined you should be the first. I hope, Mr. President, you will now take a seat in it, that I may tell my friends that I saw you sitting in it."

Mr. BUCHANAN smilingly acquiesced, saying: "Certainly, I must gratify you in this as well as myself. [here Mr. BUCHANAN reclined upon the chair,] and it will give me great pleasure in the reflection of having received it at your hands."

While seated, an old, broken-down, rude politician seized the President's hand and attempted to have a parley, but Mr. BUCHANAN shook him off and turned to the trapper, who said:

"You will find, Mr. President, that one fork of the antlers at the foot of the chair will make you a good boot jack, so that you can draw your boots with ease and put on your slippers!" [Great merriment.]

Mr. BUCHANAN having risen from the chair, a Dr. WOZENCRAFT, of California, or some such name, was presented to the President. The Doctor took the occasion to make a little speech, and alluding to the California iron which bound the chair, reminded the President of his promise to carry out the iron bands of the Pacific Railroad. Mr. BUCHANAN replied that he always kept his promises, and referring to his services as Secretary of State during the war with Mexico, said he had done his best to acquire California, and it would be his greatest wish to see her more closely bound to the Union with rails of iron and wires of electricity. The audience being over the people, and the trapper and his friends, dispersed, highly gratified with the interview.

In connection with this incident, I must mention a historical reminiscence of General PHINEAS LYMAN, to show his remarkable foresight and statesmanship. In 1767, he applied to the British Parliament for an extensive grant of land on the Ohio, contending that if the Colonists were confined to agricultural pursuits, there would be but little danger of their becoming independent! But, said he, a period will no doubt arrive when North America will no longer acknowledge a dependence in any part of Europe. He thought it to be so remote, however, at that time, as not to be an object of national policy, or human prevention, and that it would be made still more so by opening new schemes of agriculture, and widening space, which the Colonists must first occupy.

Space has indeed been widened to the Pacific shores, and could Gen. LYMAN but have witnessed the scene between Mr. BUCHANAN and the trapper, he would have seen his prophecy fulfilled to his utmost astonishment, so far as his prediction of our independence—but not as to the policy of opening new schemes of agriculture, and widening space to prevent it.

General HORSBY, of Nicaragua, is in this City. The news by the next steamer from General WALKER'S army is confidently expected to be victorious, and, in that event, the Government is prepared to send down a Minister at once.

DUDLEY A. MANN, late Assistant-Secretary of State, is here, and in great glee at the prospects of increasing the commerce of the South, growing out of his projected line of steamers between Chesapeake Bay and Europe.

It was rumored on the street that Major HEISS had been offered the Governorship to Utah, and had declined. Major BEN MCCULLOCH is looked for daily, and it is thought he will be made to accept it.

Gov. DICKINSON, of New-York, is here, and called on the President three times on Saturday. He was serenaded Saturday night at Willard's, and made a speech.

THE RELIGIOUS ANNIVERSARIES—EXPLOSION OF A POWDER MILL.

BOSTON, Monday, May 25.

The annual Religious Anniversaries commenced here to-day with a fair attendance. The proceedings up to this evening have been mostly preliminary.

PRATT'S powder mill in Acton blew up this morning. There was no loss of life, but considerable damage to property.

Fires.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT BINGHAMTON.

BINGHAMTON, Tuesday, May 26.

A fire broke out in the flouring mill of W. S. WEED & Co., in this place, at about noon to-day. The flames are still raging, and have consumed besides the mills, six dwellings and four barns. Loss thus far about $4,000. Partially insured.

FIRE AT CHARLESTOWN.

BOSTON, Monday, May 25.

The carriage manufactory of PHIPPS & DUDLEY, with some adjoining buildings in Charlestown, were destroyed by fire this morning. Loss $10,000.

The Fruit Crop of Kentucky.

LOUISVILLE Tuesday, May 25.

The Executive Committee of the Kentucky Horticultural Society say that the fruit crop generally will exceed the general average, but that the crop of peaches will be light.

The Southerner at Charleston.

CHARLESTON, Monday, May 25.

The United States Mail steamship Southerner, Captain MURRAY, from New-York, arrived at twelve o'clock on Saturday night.

A CHEMIST BLOWED UP.—While Mr. ZENCKER, one of the chemical assistants in the New York Medical College, was engaged, last evening, in filling a large India rubber bag with oxygen gas, an explosion ensued from its too rapid generation. The bag had already received two charges of oxygen, prepared from the chlorate of potash. During the passage of the third charge the gas generated with such rapidity as to distend the bag to its utmost capacity, and then violently burst it. The concussion was so forcible as to break every window glass in the Laboratory, and nearly deafen the experimenter. The strong copper generator and the Doctor's spectacles, strange to say, were uninjured, though the Doctor was urged at lightning speed through an unopened door into the Faculty room.

ANOTHER CONTRIBUTION.—The schooner Arabella, which arrived at this port on Saturday last from Aspinwall, New-Granada, brought a contribution to the Washington monument, supposed to be erecting at the federal city, in the shape of a block of stone from the Obispo quarry. The stone is the gift of the Panama Railroad Company; and it is forwarded in the name of the American residents at Panama, who contributed the necessary funds to have it properly dressed and inscribed. The quarry from which it was taken is on the line of the Panama Railroad about four hundred feet this side of the lower Obispo bridge. It will be forwarded to its destination by the officers of the Panama Railroad Company, to whom it is consigned.

THE SUMMER COME.—The sun yesterday threw off all restraint, and came out strong. The speedy shedding of Spring overcoats and the donning of leghats and thin shoes, gave unmistakable indications of a summery time fast coming. It did not need a thermometrical observation to show that the weather was undeniably hot. The mercury marked 84° in our office at 2 o'clock, and at 6 had descended only to 78°.

A DROWNED MAN.—Mr. JOHN L. ROFF, boatkeeper of pilot-boat Jacob A. Westervelt, No. 19, when abreast of Coney Island, this morning, picked up the body of a dead man. After towing him into Quarantine, he was given in charge of the Coroner of that county. He is apparently about 30 years of age, had on a colored cotton shirt, cassimere pants and high boots, no coat. Supposed a seaman.

Amusements.

LAURA KEENE'S THEATRE.—Another new piece was produced at this establishment last night, in the shape of a two-act comedy, with the proverbial title of "A Bird in the Hand is worth two in the Bush." It is a London piece, brought out some seasons ago, and, to our mind, unnecessarily revived now. The plot is narrative rather than dramatic; the treatment prosaic and preachy; the dialogue dull, and the characterization conventional. These are the leading points of a very moral and very dull piece. A wealthy country squire, with two nephews, one of whom he proposes to disinherit, makes his will, and causes his death to be announced to the interested parties. The nephews meet at the old hall; the fortunate one proves himself to be a heartless spendthrift and coxcomb; the other is all remorse, regret and grief. A great deal of insolence and a great deal of modest virtue are brought in contrast, and the Squire perceives that his favoritism was well nigh proving gross injustice. He discovers himself at the right moment, and virtue is rewarded beautifully. The improbabilities of this story are magnificent. Nephews usually know the uncles from whom they expect inheritances; and legatees are seldom insolent until they are certain of their good fortune. But in this instance, they are profoundly ignorant of the Squire's personal appearance, and know all about his Will long before it is opened.

Although in two acts, the play is long enough to be divided into three. It is written with quiet skill, but there are no situations of dramatic power, and the dialogue is utterly unrelieved. Miss KEENE has produced the piece with her usual care, and sustained the principal rôle with her wonted ability. Mr. WHEATLEIGH, in a character for which he is not well fitted, invented an individuality, and was therefore successful. Mr. BURNETT, as the Squire—afterwards disguised as a steward—was good. The other characters are all right, and were sufficiently well cast. The gentlemen who play the servants, however, should endeavor to simulate the gait of domestics, and not stroll about as if they were honored guests of the house.

The Comedy will be repeated to-night.

Convention of Spiritualists.

THIRD DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.—MORNING SESSION.

The Spiritualists assembled again yesterday morning, at 10 o'clock, at the Mechanics' Institute, Fourth avenue. There was a larger attendance than on the previous days. Mrs. ELIZA KENNAY, the President, opened the proceedings by reading a portion of Scripture. The Lord's Prayer was then recited, and a hymn sung by the audience.

The first speaker was Mr. THADDEUS S. SHELDON. The question which he undertook to discuss was: "Have persons in the spirit-life unfolded any models of their purposes and plans?" He maintained that spirits had communicated the fact that electricity could be so applied as to propel ships with greater power and more economy than steam. There were constructionists and destructionists. Both were necessary—but this age was given to construction, though, to bring that about, destruction often had to go before. The law of nature was benevolent and self-answering. Where there was a desire there was certain to be a supply, and a self-motor, a machine that should move of itself, was now the one thing wished for, the universal desire of man. The question was the construction of such a machine. Here the revelations from the spirit-world had come to the aid of man, and such a machine was in existence—not invented, not created by man's wisdom, but discovered. The spirits communicated the intelligence how certain plates of metal should be connected, and points of wire arranged, so as to produce motion. Electricity was the great motive power. Hence the new instrument, or machine, was called an electro-motor. Not only ships would be propelled by it, but nations would communicate with each other without the aid of wires or sub-marine cables, and the planets, by its means, would hold mental communication.

Mr. S. C. HEWITT, of Boston, then exhibited a model of this new motive-power. By the agency of the spirits, he gave the audience to understand that perpetual motion had been discovered. The machine, it is true, would wear out; but that was its only drawback. There was a current of electricity passing from the north to the south, which differed from elemental electricity, inasmuch as it was continually passing in currents while elemental electricity was generally diffused. The model before them was designed to receive its motive power from two plates which would be placed above it and would communicate electricity through him as man received the vital power through the brain. It was called the electric motor and was presented to the world by the spirits, who wished to be known as the "Association of Electricizers." The parties to whom the idea was communicated were to telty unscientific men. As for the model itself, it was wonderful in its adaptability to all purposes for which machinery was now used. It was braced together by metal bands, of copper and zinc, so arranged that the electric current might be readily received. Perpetual motion, by means of these electrical currents, was thus revealed, and the world would be benefited, to a degree beyond calculation, by the revelation. The model, it would be seen, corresponded to the human form. But an electrical ship, that would be made from an idea revealed by the spirits, would of course be formed like a duck, and get its motive power mainly from the atmosphere.

It is the intention of the Spiritualists to publish a book, describing this perpetual motion machine, and the duck, very fully and particularly. It will be octavo size, and contain 860 pages.

Mr. SHELDON made some more remarks on the same subject, after which

Mr. STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS said that, the popular notion of perpetual motion was erroneous. To one it was that the machine employed to produce must never wear out, was quite a fallacy. A wheel driven by Niagara Falls would be perpetual motion, although the wheel would would of course wear out; so a grist mill was perpetual motion while it lasted. But the true perpetual motion must derive its power from nature, because Niagara Falls could not be carried around as a motive power for mills, but Nature provided sufficient forces to accomplish her ends, and in the model before the Convention perpetual motion was revealed.

Mr. ORVIS spoke at some length, eulogizing the grandeur of the revelation of the new motive power. It was so great that it told its origin at once. It could not be the invention of man. It must come from the spirit-world, a far higher sphere than ours. SWEDENBORG had predicted the day of its discovery as the year 1855, and that was about the time when the spirits first began to reveal it, or if it was not, a year or two made no great difference. SWEDENBORG was the most wonderful man of science the world and ever produced. Let everybody pay heed to these discoveries. Let the Greeleyites and the Fourierites pay heed to them. Let everybody who had ever felt aspirations in favor of human regeneration pay heed to them, for their effects upon the world were as present as delectable.

The meeting adjourned at one o'clock till the afternoon session.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Shortly before 3 o'clock P. M, the meeting reassembled. There were about one hundred people present. After the Lord's prayer, in metrical form, had been sung by the audience, the lady President leading off, Mr. S. C. HEWITT exhibited a model of a house, which he said was communicated to him by the spirits as a new style of architecture, which was to correspond to the spiritual progress of human nature. The human body was the model of all things, and the idea of this building was derived from the human body. It was true that by simply looking at the model, we saw little that resembled human body, but when it was opened the resemblance would appear. In the human body there were three regions, the brain, or the intellectual region, the chest, or the vital region, the abdominal, or the nutritive and digestive region. As these performed their various functions in the human economy, correspondentially they were represented in the new order of architecture. There was the cupola of the house for the brain. The story below corresponded with the chest. It was the vital part, it was the largest of the building. There were the bed-rooms, the retiring rooms, the parlors for recreation and amusement, while in the lower story you had the abdominal part of the building, the eating rooms and kitchen. The wings of the building corresponded to the arms and shoulders. The cupola, as he had said, was the receiving brain of the house, and was constructed in analogy with the brain of a human being. In this cupola, study, reading, writing, thinking, would be carried on. All the intellectual labor of life would go on here, and by it the walls would be magnetized as the bones in the body are magnetized with the life that is proper to them.

The next story corresponded to the face, the windows representing the eyes and the door that opened on the balcony, the mouth. As the eyes were used for observation, so these rooms must be devoted to scientific and astronomical purposes, and at their windows telescopes could be placed for lunar and stellar observations. It would be noticed that in the interior of the building there was a large well-hole. That corresponded with the spinal column, and as the spinal column conveyed impressions direct to the brain, so this was intended as an "itf," an ascending room; in short, by which things might be raised from the lower to the upper stories, or people might ascend in it, in preference to mounting the stairs. By means of this ascending room or spinal column, it would be easy to communicate with the brain or cupola.

Mr. HEWITT went on to describe the remaining stories in the same manner. There was the neck of the house, and its chest, which had a multitude of rooms. There were also the breasts of the house, in which invisible musicians were to be placed, to give delight to those who sat at the feast within. In the rear of these were the mother's receiving-room and the mother's seclusion room. Near by was the worship-room. The house had a back-bone, for the spirits had first told him, "Above all things, get a back-bone;" and the audience could see that the solid wall inside was a very good back-bone.

At this point a German, in a very excited state, appeared at the door. He raved out something in his own language, which, before the close of the meeting, was translated to the audience by a young man, a friend of the said German. According to the translator, the German exclaimed that inasmuch as the Conference would not receive his teachings, he would shake the dust from his garments and leave them. And he did shake his garments and stamp his feet when he left.

Mr. HEWITT, in reference to the interruption, remarked that they had to receive everything, of course, and to judge of it as they would. He then proceeded to illustrate further the spiritual style of architecture. The work was performed in the abdominal region—the cooking and domestic work; the entire also went on there. The cellar or depository was there; also the ice house or preservatory, for in the new order of things they did not dig into the earth, because they wished to escape earth exhalations. Their motto rather was—"Set your houses up as well as you can." The entire house, they would see, corresponded with the scrial law, which was triune.

The spirits, Mr. HEWITT proceeded, directed the house to be built of a new cement, to correspond with the bones of the human body in strength and magnetic power. Bones have glutinous and mineral elements, and there was to be a correspondential likeness in the walls.

The way Mr. HEWITT was led to prepare this model was curious. The spirits directed him to get a human skeleton and examine it. He was unable to get one put together, so he had to join one together for himself, and it was a good job he had to do so, for it gave him a lively idea of the human frame. In the night he would place the chart under his pillow, and in the morning he would have revelations. Lying awake on his bed, he had electrical flashes of circles, which taught him that his rooms must be either circular or oval.

It was the most convenient and economical structure that the world had ever seen. It was fire proof, and would endure from generation to generation, because we did not need to change the essentials of the human body. The dress only, which was merely an ornament, it was necessary to change. It was, as he said before, a triune principle, a practical trinity applied to architecture.

There was another advantage belonging to the building. It might be cast entire out of liquid flint or quartz rock.

Mr. HEWITT having demonstrated the capabilities and beauties of the new spiritual style of architecture, the President proceeded to read a communication on "A New Form of Government," received from the Association of Governmentizers in the spirit world. The spirits advocated what they called a Divine Government, in which the perfect equality of the sexes was maintained, and in which right, not might, was to be the golden rule, and justice, love and truth, the guiding principles. Slavery was treated with severe reprehension. "Mene, mene, Tekel, Upharsin," was written upon the American nation, which would shortly be dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel. In the new form of government everybody would dwell in perfect independence; each person would be his or her own judge, and nobody, however near or dear, would interfere, and say "You shall not pursue your own individual course."

Some little debate, and a few interruptions from unmannerly persons, followed the reading of this document. The lady President had once or twice to enforce order. About 6 o'clock the Conference adjourned for two hours.

EVENING SESSION.

At the opening of the evening session, JOHN ORVIS attempted to show what Spiritualism proposes to do, and stated some seven propositions, which he expounded at length, embracing all that relates to the development of man in his social, material and spiritual state, and the agencies to be employed for the bringing in of the new dispensation. Mr. GODDARD, JOHN M. SPEAR, Mr. ANDREWS and several others followed. A collection was taken to make up a deficiency of $80 in the expenses of the Convention; the President announced that Mrs. CORA HATCH would lecture at the Brooklyn Institute on Wednesday and Friday evenings, and they then adjourned, apparently pleased with their success.

Reorganizing the New-York Citizen Volunteers—Alderman William Wilson Elected Commander-in-Chief.

A special meeting of the officers of the New-York Citizen Volunteers was held on Monday evening, at SHERWOOD'S, corner of Broadway and Worth-street, to reorganize the Citizen Volunteers, and elect a Commander-in-Chief.

The meeting was called to order at 8 o'clock, and on a motion of Col. WALTERS, WILLIAM WILSON, Aldermen of the First Ward, was appointed Chairman, and JOHN CREIGATON Secretary.

The Chair then made a few remarks respecting the immediate reorganization of the Volunteers, and hoped that every officer interested in the welfare and prosperity of the City, would stand nobly to the helm, and show the Black Republicans that the citizens of New-York were not always to be led blindfolded with their low and unprincipled acts.

The following resolutions were then read and adopted:

Whereas, We have reason to and do believe that there exists unlawful and secret association in our midst to do the bidding of the Albany Regency, in carrying out the object of its nefarious legislation: therefore, be it

Resolved, That we will at all hazards prepare to support our municipal authorities in their worthy opposition to the Black Republican Justices, the Albany Regency, and all its minions.

Resolved, That we form a military organization for the purpose of sustaining the Mayor, Aldermen and commonalty of the City of New-York in their legal action in regard to the laws affecting this City, passed at the last session of the Legislature of this State.

Resolved, That we, members of the Volunteer Target Companies, members of Independent Military Companies, and citizens of the City and County of New-York, do hereby organize, and the said organization to be known as the New-York Citizen Volunteers; the same to be governed, as near as possible, by the rules and regulations of the United States Army; each organization to be one division of one District, comprising the whole City and County of New-York.

Resolved, That we, to effect and carry out the object of this our organization, do hereby select and appoint WM. WILSON Commander-in-Chief of the New-York Citizens Volunteer, assigning to him the rank and title of Major-General, with all the usual and necessary powers.

Resolved, That until further orders, each District shall be divided into twelve Regiments and four Brigades, as follows:

First Regiment—First, Second and Third Wards.
Second Regiment—Fourth Ward.
Third Regiment—Fifth and Sixth Wards.
Fourth Regiment—Seventh and Tenth Wards.
Fifth Regiment—Eleventh and Thirteenth Wards.
Sixth Regiment—Seventeenth Ward.
Seventh Regiment—Eighth and Ninth Wards.
Eighth Regiment—Fourteenth Ward.
Ninth Regiment—Fifteenth and Sixteenth Wards.
Tenth Regiment—Twelfth and Twenty-second Wards.
Eleventh Regiment—Eighteenth and Twentieth Wards.
Twelfth Regiment—Nineteenth and Twenty-first Wards.

The First, Second and Third Regiments compose the First Brigade. The Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Regiments, the Second Brigade. The Eighth, Ninth and Tenth Regiments, the Third Brigade, and the Eleventh and Twelfth Regiments, the Fourth Brigade.

Resolved, That the several Companies shall immediately proceed to organize, and shall elect their Company officers. The Captain elected to report forthwith a revised and certified copy of his Roll to the Commander-in-Chief at his head-quarters. The Inspector-General, under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, will assign Companies to their respective regiments, and under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, will, without delay, assign the several regiments to their appropriate Brigades.

Resolved, That the Commander in Chief shall select from the Captains of the Companies, and appoint the several field officers, and also select and appoint the several Brigadier-Generals, who, upon their appointment, shall be notified thereof, and upon their acceptance the Commander-in-Chief shall issue to each their respective Commissions, no person to be entitled to exercise the functions of an officer, without such Commission.

Resolved, That the Commander in Chief is invested with full power to constitute new Regiments or Brigades which, in his opinion, the exigencies of the occasion may require.

The undersigned hold themselves bound in honor to comply with all the foregoing resolutions.

On motion the election of WM. WILSON as Commander-in-Chief was made unanimous, whereupon Mr. WILSON arose and addressed them as follows:

GENTLEMEN: I am greatly obliged to you for the honor you have done me, in electing me your Commander-in-Chief. Knowing full well the responsibility that awaits me, I depend greatly upon your support. I take this opportunity to state to you, in order that you may not be misled by any outside influence, that the card published in several of the papers, emanating from HENRY WILSON, Ex-Commander-in-Chief, requires some little explanation. It is not only due to you, but to my associates and the integrity of our municipal existence, and to my relatives, as well as to the cherished City Government under which, as franchised, free American citizens, we have so long happily dwelt in conformity to the principles of true (not Black) Republicanism.

I agree with Mr. HENRY WILSON that he had no power or authority in this matter, or that he had any business to meddle or interfere in the matter at all. The object of the organization against which Mr. HENRY WILSON directs the scope of his communication, purporting to emanate from headquarters, was fully expressed in the resolutions forming the basis of organization, which were, that "Whereas, as we have reason to, and do believe, that unlawful and secret associations are in our midst, to do the bidding of the Albany Regency, that we, as citizens, should be in readiness to defend the rights and property of this our noble City's. It was true we did not call upon Mr. HENRY WILSON and some others, with whom we are willingly happy to associate, but we are in downright earnest in this matter, and desire among us none but those who will enter heartily into the course and endorse the resolutions we have here accepted. I am happy to state that if they yet wish to become men here of our organization, or the New-York Citizen Volunteers, it is not too late!

As to politics, I would say that politics is the burden of our opponents. We pride ourselves on being Democrats of the first water, and intend to be so known and recognized. We are also proud of being active as well as professed lovers and defenders of our municipal rights, which are the outside bulwarks of our national liberties.

Mr. CREIGHTON then made a few remarks, in which he stated that his attention had been called to the article of the late Commander in Chief—HENRY WILSON, in which he remarks that the supine wisdom contained therein would compare favorably with the choicest product of Bunsby. He stated that he was selected to escort and the Volunteer Parage, but if the Volunteers had had their choice he was the last man they would elect to that position. A Committee was then appointed to obtain suitable head-quarters, and the meeting adjourned.

Mr. H. N. Wild's Opinions on the Police Law.

TO THE PUBLIC: On Saturday last I promised that on some future day I would give my views more at length in relation to the present position of affairs and the duty of the people at the present crisis:

1. I assume that the duty of the people is to support all laws enacted by our Legislature and approved by the Governor, until such laws are repealed or nullified by the proper tribunals.

2. I own that no Government, representative in its character, can long survive successful resistance to its laws.

3. That there is infinitely greater danger in resistance to law, in a City like this, than in the rural districts, for two reasons. 1. The population in its character and pursuits is different. In the country the population is staid and industrious; all having some pursuit, honest in itself, which they daily follow. Their employment is mostly agricultural; and the tillers of the earth are great self-governing people. In the nature of their vocation there is nothing to excite to disobedience of the law, or to impel to anything but sober, quiet, well directed action. There no business interests clash; all follow kindred pursuits. Here it is different. This City is crowded with all classes and descriptions of people, from the industrious frugal laborer and merchant that grow rich by their industry and frugality, to the lowest vagabond who seeks to acquire by taking without consideration what industry has accumulated. Rascality is here reduced to a science. Burglars, thieves, rioters and law-breaking persons who are resident here and have emigrated from all parts of the earth, flourish most, and control best when law is disregarded and the lawless hold sway. That the lawless of this City are now striving to get possession of its government there is no doubt. To substantiate this let a few facts be submitted to a candid, conservative people. What first do we behold? The Mayor arrayed in open opposition to the laws of the State; attempting to resist, by his own will, the solemn enactments of our Legislature, under the specious pretence that the law is unconstitutional "in his opinion." What is the natural result of such a position assumed by him? Let me illustrate:

A man is arrested by a patrolman; the officer is clothed with all the paraphernalia of his office, on his breast glitters the star, his gilded buttons and baton bespeak him a man of authority; the criminal sees all these, but determines he will not submit; the Patrolman inquires the reason; he is answered that the law authorizing his arrest for the crime which he has committed is "unconstitutional," in his opinion, and demands that he shall be allowed to go at large until he can have the question legally decided. What answer, think you, the officer would give? He would say, your opinion in relation to the law may be right, but until that question is determined, you must submit to it as it is. The person arrested would cite the example of the Mayor; and if must be admitted that there would be force in the example. Hence the danger of persons in power and place setting the example of insubordination to the law.

Next we see the Common Council of the City refusing to yield obedience to the requirements of the law, and in a most unusual manner laying on the table unread, more respectful communications from the Police Commissioners, asking them to furnish the property required by the law, and when some fair minded members of their Board made an honest effort to save the City the unnecessary additional taxation, for providing other Station Houses, appurtenances, &c., that effort was smothered by a refusal to hear read the resolution they offered. This clearly shows that all of the present opposition to the Police Law, is made upon political grounds, and the struggle from the Mayor to the patrolmen, is to retain political power.

Intimidation is the weapon that tyrants always use, but the last to which a liberty loving people should submit.

Acting upon the hypothesis that the fears of this great community could be reached, his Honor, the Mayor procured, as I believe, unauthorized persons belonging to a volunteer militia association, to speak in terms calculated to overawe the people in the assertion of their rights, and coerce submission from a law-loving, and, as I believe, a law-abiding people.

This last effort has met with a most signal rebuke from the authorized officers of that volunteer corps. I am happy, as a member of that association, to say, that if the unpleasant necessity should ever occur, that they must buckle on the armor of the soldier and arm themselves with weapons of destruction, and march to conflict, it will be to resist invasion, put down insurrection and in defence of the laws of the country.

Under this view I have no hesitation in calling upon the conservative citizens of this City, with whom I have long been connected as a citizen and business man, to aid me in putting down this spirit of rebellion to the law, come it from what quarter it may.

As business men it behooves us all to set our faces against this high-handed attempt to trample the law under foot; by so doing we shall give evidence to our own citizens that our determination is to sustain the laws, be they what they may, until repealed or nullified, and it will give the assurance to all persons of all estate, that here in the great metropolis their property and business interest are safe and entirely secure from the wantonness of usurpation, from the grasp of the ambitious, and the sway of tyrants.

Citizens of New-York, in defence of your own honor I call upon you to assert through all the avenues open to the expression of public opinion, your reprobation of the present attempt to nullify the laws. Set the seal of condemnation upon the brow of every man that counsels resistance. Speak in your own language; it will be heeded, and it will quiet the waters now disturbed by designing persons, and you will bring back New-York to what she naturally is, a law-abiding City. Speak and you will silence the whisper now heard by the despising, swelling sounds of well-grounded indignation, and prevent the recurrence of the disgraceful scenes witnessed here within the last few weeks. Speak, for the character of our own citizens is involved. Act and redeem the fair fame of our own New-York, and while passion is battling for supremacy, let reason hold the helm.

The public's obedient servant,
H. N. WILD, No. 458 Broome-street.

ALTERED $20'S ON THE MARKET BANK.—A woman went to No. 98 Bowery, (DONELLY'S,) on Saturday, and bought a carpet, ordering it sent to No. 102 St. Mark's place, saying that she would pay for it there on delivery. It was sent. She received it, and paid for it five $20 bills on the Market Bank of this City. When the porter presented the bills to the cashier of the store, something suspicious about one of them led him to send it over to a neighboring bank, where it was pronounced all right. Still the vignette was not that of the Market Bank $20's, and it was thought safe to look up the matter. Mr. DONELLY sent up to No. 102 St. Mark's place, and learned that a lady and gentleman called in the morning, seeing the "To let" on the wall, and had engaged to rent rooms and pay the advance therefor in the evening, but wanted the privilege of putting in a new carpet immediately. Soon after the carpet came and had been paid for, they professed that it was the wrong carpet, and so sent it away, after which they no more appeared at 1, 2 St. Mark's place. At three banks at which the bills were presented by the cashier, they were said to be good, but on presentation at the Market Bank they were pronounced to be altered $1's. The vignette of the $20's is a spread eagle. The altered has the vignette of the $1's, viz., a market scene—cattle, &c. Look out for them, for they are admirably executed, and well calculated to deceive.

COMING THE GRAB.—Between 8 and 9 o'clock last evening, a young "knuck" named HUGH RILEY crept stealthily behind the counter in the book store of Mr. ANDREWS, No. 142 Nassau-street, and reaching to the money drawer, took therefrom $110 in bank notes, gold and silver. He was just escaping with the booty, when Mr. ANDREWS, who was seated at a desk in the lower end of the store, espied him and gave chase, expecting that he had been committing a theft. RILEY fled down Beekman street, Mr. ANDREWS following crying "Stop thief." Officer WINTRINO, of the Second Ward, hearing the alarm, joined in the pursuit and soon captured the fugitive and conveyed him to the Station-house. On searching him the whole of the stolen money was found hid beneath the lining of his coat. He will be examined to-day at the Lower Police Court. RILEY resides in Water-street, and is one of a crowd of bad boys who go about daily in search of plunder.

The Death of Eugene Greliet—Letter from his Fellow-Prisoners.

The Courrier des Etats Unis having made certain statements in relation to the death of GARLIET, his fellow-prisoners have addressed the following letter to the editor, which translated reads thus:

"The journals, from whatever motives, have falsified the facts in the affair of the French Northern Railway, and the living have no alternative but to accept this as one of the misfortunes inseparable from their position—but when misrepresentation is directed against the dead, we appeal to your impartiality, convinced that you can have no motive for refusing to do us justice in truth.

In your paper of the 22d you say that permission was readily granted to remove to the Hospital our brother and companion in captivity. Twenty persons will testify, any day, that this permission had not been granted up to the last moment, except within the rigorous limits prescribed in the judgment of Judge DAVIES. Before death his friends would have waived this consideration, notwithstanding the six months' imprisonment he had already suffered; still, he must have some money to be received at the Hospital. This we had not, and when we asked it, it was refused. Upon no principle of natural justice can the party against whom the law has pronounced be deprived of the necessities of life upon the seizure of their money.

You say also that the condition of the invalid was not alarming—that he seemed to have drawn the last breath without suffering. It is true, his illness had not presented to the physician of the prison any occasion for alarm, who desired to see only now the bilious fever, and now the neuralgia; but to us his condition had been alarming from the first; from the commencement one of us predicted death from congestion of the brain; and all of us agreed that death was inevitable unless the patient could receive immediate and energetic measures of relief.

As to his drawing his last breath without pain, that is another thing. We trust that at some future time, the seven prisoners who occupied the same cell, attesting their inability to sustain the spectacle of his delirious agony, and his cries of pain during the last three days of his life, will do justice to this assertion. Upon the night of his death, the disordered struggles of soul and body went so far, that the keeper of the prison, certainly deceived by a blind, but natural confidence in his physician, proposed, at supper time, to confine him for the night in a separate cell.

The next morning they found him dead in his bed, you say; but do you know how? In the evening, after a most animated discussion with the physician, in which we attempted to convince him of the critical condition of the patient, we were compelled to yield our own opinions, and coincide with him, that the only remedy to administer to him was an anodyne. This dose but half administered, the invalid slept for six hours. We had been without rest for three nights, and thus worn out, we slept without suspicion of the fatal error of the official physician of the prison, but when one of us awoke, life was extinct. But do you know of what he died? He died from cerebral congestion, which, in the twenty-second day of its development, had produced five abscesses in the brain.

Hoping, Mr. Editor, that in your impartiality you will give this letter a place in your columns, we have the honor, &c.

[Signed,] GRELLET,
A. PAROT,
A. DAVID."

THE SUCCESS
Attending the introduction of

"The GEM" is unrivaled, in point of lightness its weight almost fabulous: the color vieing with the soft tinting of the Dove, and the materials, workmanship, trimmings, &c., perfectly immitable.

Unlike all former issues, and all other hats, it stands alone, "Peerless in Beauty," the "Great Original," and can be had only at the store of the inventor.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.—IN BUYING such an article as a sewing machine the truest economy is to buy the best. They who purchase SINGER'S machines always get what they want, and use them with satisfaction and profit; while they who buy any of the cheaper and inferior machines in the market are sure to suffer disappointment, vexation and loss

REMOVAL.—MARSH & CO.'S RADICAL CURE Truss Office, of No. 2½ Maiden-lane, have removed to No. 2 Vesey st., Astor House. Trusses, Supporters, Shoulder Braces, Silk Elastic Stockings and every variety of Bandages of most approved patterns, skillfully applied. Private application rooms for ladies. A competent female in attendance.

KANSAS AND NEBRASKA QUESTIONS ARE IN a fair way of being amicably arranged—while an equally important question arises in the mind of every lady of taste, as to where she can buy her outward attire. MACKENZIE'S MANTILLAS have been voted the ne plus ultra of neatness and elegance, and his prices range from $5 to $100.

THE EXTENSION AND WIDENING OF CANAL-st. has opened a convenient and popular avenue to the people of the east side of the town, and access is easily had, and the distance made short to the extensive MANTILLA EMPORIUM OF W. B. MACKENZIE, Nos. 45 and 47 Brandreth Building, Canal-st.

IN THE SELECTION OF A SITE FOR THE new Post Office there has not been half the difficulty experienced by the ladies in deciding among the numerous styles of Mantillas sold by MACKENZIE, which style to adopt. All his styles are unsurpassable, and hence the difficulty of choosing.

THE EXCISE COMMISSIONERS ARE BUSY with the License question, while MACKENZIE and his assistants are equally busy with their customers in attending to the numerous applications for BASQUES and MANTILLAS at his store, Nos. 45 and 47 Brandreth Building, Canal-st.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church.

FOURTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The first half hour was devoted to religious exercises. After which, the roll was called, and the majority of the members answered to their names.

Rev. JOHN T. PRESLY read a communication from a member of the Associate Synod in session in Philadelphia, informing him that the proposed Basis had been reported upon favorably as it stood, by a Committee—any amendments to be settled by the two Synods, which report would doubtless be accepted. Mr. PRESLY felt certain that the communication would facilitate a decision on the subject.

The Committee on Missions reported a set of rules for the government of the Home Missions.

The Auditing Committee reported that the funds at their disposal were barely sufficient to allow members five mills per mile for mileage. They proposed that the money contributed by the different Synods to their delegates should be returned, and that in future the several Presbyteries provide for the expenses of their delegates.

Upon motion of Rev. Dr. FORSYTH, permission was granted to Rev. Dr. FAIRCHILD, Secretary of the Home Mission Society, to address the Synod at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, on the subject of Home Missions. Permission was also accorded to Rev. HENRY CONOLLY to be heard for fifteen minutes in the afternoon on the subject of Colonization.

Rev. J. B. SCOULLER, of Washington Presbytery, N. Y., proceeded to give his views on the proposed basis. He asserted that the idea of the Associate Synod, when they overtured the basis, was to proffer it for consideration and amendment, and not for the arbitrary acceptance of the doctrines therein. He was opposed to many things in the basis, but he was sorry to see the spirit of opposition which had characterized the discussion on both sides, and he trusted that the majority would not adopt the document and cause dissensions in the Church.

Rev. CLARK IRVING, of Saratoga Presbytery, New-York, did not favor the adoption of the basis, and the oldest and strictest congregations in New-York were, many of them, opposed to it. He objected to the article on communion, which was altogether too rigid and not in accordance with the custom and practice of a portion of their Church, and which many of the congregations could never consistently accept. He hoped the matter would not be pressed by the majority, for might never had nor ever could make right.

Rev. Father TAGGART, of Steubenville Presbytery, Ohio, said that their Church had long been known as the "Union Church," but if this basis were adopted, its effect would be that of a mountain of ice in the garden of God, to blight and wither it, or else a Vesuvius to scorch and dry up its life. He trusted that the matter would be referred to a Committee of the two Synods, to amend and report upon at a future time.

Rev. Mr. ARCHIBALD, of Cincinnati, was in favor of leaving the matters of interpretation in the basis to the discretion of the several Presbyteries, and of uniting upon it on general principles, but he never could consent to the adoption of the basis, arbitrarily, in its present form. Though there was a majority in favor of its adoption, it was not a hearty majority, and it was not expedient to accept it, however much it might be lawful. He asserted that the principle of decisions by majorities in Ecclesiastical Courts was not a safe one. He did not despair of effecting this desirable union at some future day, if the spirit of conciliation prevailed.

Rev. Mr. DICK, of Butler, Penn., looked upon the conrse which the discussion had taken as an eminently useful one; it gave opportunity for an exchange of views. It had been argued against this testimony that it was not of sufficient latitude for all classes of opinion, but he thought differently. He reviewed the objections which had been urged against its adoption, and considered that they were by no means incontrovertible. The General Synod of the West had furnished the precedent for the majority of a Synod to decide on any question, and, therefore, the objection against that which had been urged with such force was of little weight; the people would acquiesce in a decision by the majority now, as they had acquiesced in similar decisions before. He thought that they owed it to the world, and to the Church of God, that these bodies, separated only by prejudice and a jealous sectarianism, should be made organically one.

Rev. Mr. MCVEAN, of Caledonia Presbytery, N. Y., briefly gave his views. Neither he nor his people could accept the basis, and if the matter was attempted to be forced upon them they could not remain in the Church.

Rev. J. T. PRESLY thought that the discussion might now be concluded, as the Associate Synod in Philadelphia had concluded to appoint a Committee to confer with a Committee of this body on the subject.

Rev. Dr. FORSYTH, of Newburg, N. Y., said that the principal objections against the basis were the articles on slaveholding, secret societies, covenanting, communion and psalmody; and on these there was a radical difference of opinion. He thought that as many diverse views of the basis had been presented on this floor as of the subject had been just mooted, instead of being before them for years; and, therefore, if the union was not agreed upon now it never would be, for these different views would always exist. He reviewed the articles that had been objected to, and concluded that nothing weighty had been urged against the union on the basis proposed.

Rev. Dr. EAKIN thought that the principal objection to this testimony was in the fact that it proscribed sister Churches which they acknowledged as integral parts of the Christian Church from their communion. He considered that the proposed testimony was too minute in defining doctrine, which made it altogether untenable. He was not in favor of its adoption at all.

At the conclusion of Dr. EAKIN'S remarks the Synod adjourned to 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The following are the articles of Doctrine and Church Government which occasion most of the difference in sentiment:

OF COVENANTING

Declaration.—We declare, that public social covenanting is a moral duty, the observance of which is not required at stated times, but on extraordinary occasions, as the providence of God and the circumstances of the church may indicate. It is seasonable in times of great danger to the church—in times of corrupt defection or backsliding—or in times of reformation, when the church is returning to God from a state of backsliding. When the church has entered into such covenant transactions they continue to bind posterity faithfully to adhere to and prosecute the grand object for which such engagements have been entered into.

OF COMMUNION.

Declaration.—We declare, that the church should not extend communion, in sealing ordinances, to those who refuse adherence to her profession, or subjection to her government and discipline, or who refuse to forsake a communion which is inconsistent with the profession that she makes; nor should communion in any ordinance of worship be held under such circumstances as would be inconsistent with the keeping of these ordinances pure and entire, so as to give countenance to any corruption of the doctrines and institutions of Christ.

OF SLAVEHOLDING.

Declaration.—We declare, that slaveholding—that is, the holding of unoffending human beings in involuntary bondage, and considering and treating them as property, and subject to be bought and sold—is a violation of the law of God, and contrary both to the letter and spirit of Christianity,

OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

Declaration.—We declare, that all associations, whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members ought not to have fellowship with such associations.

Argument and Illustration.—This declaration is in accordance with the Confession of Faith, chap. xxii, secs. 1—5.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The proceedings were opened with prayer by the Moderator.

The report of the Committee on Revision was read and accepted.

Rev. Dr. FAIRCHILD advocated the claims of the American and Foreign Christian Union on the Synod for sympathy and support. He reviewed the operations of the Union historically and statistically, in Europe, South America, the West Indies and Canada, and detailed the good work it was doing in opposition to the Papal Hierarchy—which was exerting every power to extend its baneful influence, not only in the Old World but in the New.

Rev. Dr. PENNINGTON, and Rev. Drs. FERRIS and MCILVOY were admitted to seats as corresponding members.

Rev. JAMES PRESTON moved the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, Large portions of the nominal Christian World are corrupted by the errors of the Papal Apostacy, and of the so-called Greek and Oriental Churches; which not only greatly hinder the temporal prosperity of the people, and endanger the salvation of the soul, but constitute a most effective barrier to the work of evangelization among the Jews, Mahomedans and Pagans; and

Whereas, The American and Foreign Christian Union has entered upon the work of reëstablishing in these corrupted parts of Christendom a pure Christianity, and also of promoting the principle of Religious Liberty, and has also done much for the spiritual benefit of the Papal population in the United States; therefore,

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Synod, the portions of Christendom which hold a corrupted Christianity, and which comprise about two hundred and sixty millions of souls, constitute a missionary field of the highest interest, and in point of importance to the ultimate conversion of the world to the Redeemer, it is second to none that now attract the attention of the various Evangelical branches of the one true Church of Christ.

Resolved, That this Synod approve of the object and operations of the American and Foreign Christian Union, in its usefulness and success, and do commend it to the confidence, sympathies, prayers and patronage of the churches under their care.

Rev. HOMER CLOSE moved his views on the subject of Colonization in Liberia under the auspices of the New-York Colonization Society, by whose operations Scripture prophecy in relation to Ethiopia, he thought, was being fulfilled. He urged upon the Synod their duty to aid in every way the colonization of Africa, by which means it would become christianized.

JOHN GULLIVER, Esq., Corresponding Secretary of the American Systematic Beneficent Society, discoursed on the advantages of Systematic Benevolence over any other, and advised the clergymen present to adopt the plan.

Rev. GEO. C. ARNOLD offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That the subject of systematic beneficence be earnestly commended to the attention and action of our churches.

Resolved, That the American Systematic Beneficence Society, organized in Philadelphia, be commended to the favorable regard of our Synods, Presbyteries and Sessions.

Rev. R. D. HARPER offered the following preamble and resolutions, which were adopted:

Whereas, Having heard with pleasure remarks made by HENRY CONOLLY, agent of the New-York State Colonization Society;

Resolved, That the cause of African Colonization be recommended to the bountiful attention of all the churches.

Resolved, That the Board of Education be directed to look out for one or more colored young men to be trained for teaching or preaching among their brethren in the United States or Africa.

The discussion on the Basis of Union was then resumed.

Rev. R. D. HARPER, of Xenia, Ohio, proceeded to address the meeting. He assumed that the duty of this Synod was merely to act as tellers, to cast their votes on this matter, and report the result of the ballot to their constituency. He believed that the spirit the two Churches were one, and to postpone the union longer was a sin, for nine tenths of the people were in favor of the adoption of the basis of union.

Rev. Mr. MAHAN was of opinion that if the basis were not adopted the union would never take place, and further, that the consequences would be most disastrous to the Associate Reformed Church.

Rev. Dr. PRESLY was in favor of the basis, but was free to say that if he interpreted some of the articles as they had been interpreted by many of the members, he should be sorry to accept them, as they had not construed them correctly.

Rev. Mr. CALDERWOOD briefly expressed himself in favor of the consummation of the union at once, and saw many reasons against delay.

Rev. Mr. THOMPSON spoke favorably to the adoption of the basis.

Elder HUEY urged at considerable length the advisability of a union now, and portrayed its benefits to the Church, charging upon the ministers the onus of the postponement of the Union.

Elder T. M. NEVIN, of Newburg, was opposed to the union on the proposed basis, and could never assent to the nullification of the Standard of Faith of the Associate Reformed Church—doctrines in the faith of which he had always lived and which he could never relinquish. He saw no way of union on the present basis.

Elder JAMES ROSS spoke briefly, urging the adoption of the basis without further delay.

An amendment was then offered to the resolutions under debate, which, as the hour of adjournment had arrived, was laid on the table till this morning.

EVENING SESSION.

Rev. Professor YOUNG opened the services of the evening by reading part of the 60th Psalm and offering prayer.

Rev. Dr. FORSYTH then discoursed on "The History of Presbyterianism." His text was the words, "In that day living water shall go out from Jerusalem."

The Reverend Doctor commenced by saying that on the plains of Germany and on the Alpine heights of Switzerland almost simultaneously two fountains appeared, not unlike the one opened in Jerusalem in the beginning of the Gospel era. The streams that issued from them gradually advanced, and enlarged themselves in their course, developing every fertility and beauty, converting barren waste into the Garden of the Lord, and quickening the nations that dwelt in them with new life.

These streams were LUTHER and ZWINGLE, and were almost of the same age, the former being born Nov. 1, 1484, the latter Jan. 1, 1500. Both were taught in the same school; both drank at the same fountain; both became laborers in the arduous work of reform, though at first each was ignorant of the efforts of the other. The reverend gentleman then said that his discourse would be more immediately connected with the labors of the Swiss Reformer, though time would not permit him to enter into detail. ZWINGLE, like his Saxon brother, was a priest, though not guilty of the vices of his age and order. He in early youth commenced the study of the Greek Testament, and he carried with him to Glaris, his first mountain parish, the germs of evangelical truth. These germs were in course of time slowly but surely developed, and in 1516, at Einsiedelin, he began to preach the Gospel. In 1518—the year he was called to Zurich—he was prompted to denounce the sale of indulgences. But he did not struggle alone: ŒCOLAMPADIUS at Basle, HOFMEISTER at Constance, and others, were zealous coworkers. From the year 1524, when the flames of the Sacramentarian controversy burst out, may be dated the histories of the Reformed and Lutheran Churches; and for the remaining years of his life ZWINGLE may be said to have been engaged in an unremitted struggle. This soldier of Christ, though in the prime of life when he was struck down on the bloody field of Cappel, yet had been the honored instrument of commencing and going prestige to a great work, though another and a greater man—JOHN CALVIN—was ordained to complete it.

These two great men—LUTHER and ZWINGLE—almost from the moment they appeared as Reformers, while they proclaimed the same Gospel, occupied different stand points. Justification by faith was the sublime truth upon which the mind of LUTHER was fixed with special intensity. ZWINGLE, while no less urgent in maintaining this doctrine, also insisted that the supremacy of the Word of God was the only rule of faith and worship.

The speaker portrayed in eloquent language the progress of the Reformed Church, which, commencing in Switzerland by ZWINGLE and others, extended to France, then reaching Belgium, Holland, Scotland, Poland and Hungary. He then proceeded to show that the Reformed Church had been compelled to maintain more arduous and bloody fight for the common faith than any other; that she had always been more or less intimately connected with the struggles for religious and civil liberty; that she had supplied the ablest defence of the common faith, and had contributed to the stores of Christian literature as largely as any other church; and that while the Lutheran Church had no fixed polity, the Reformed Church had maintained one everywhere and the same system of government—the Presbyterian. The reverend gentleman closed his interesting discourse with an earnest appeal to the Presbyterian Historical Society, suggesting that it should collect not only the records of American Presbyterian history, but also to gather from the larger and richer fields of the whole Reformed Church.

After singing and prayer, the audience dispersed.

New School General Assembly at Cleveland.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

APPEARANCE OF THE ASSEMBLY—THE STANDING COMMITTEES—TOBACCO TABOOED—PRESBYTERIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Friday, May 22, 1857.

The General Assembly of the New-School Presbyterian Church of the United States, in session in this city, is to-day fairly at work in the transaction of its business, yesterday having been occupied solely with the preliminary ceremonies of organization.

The number of persons present, in an official capacity, either as commissioners from the various Presbyteries, or as corresponding delegates from other ecclesiastical bodies, is a little more than two hundred; while this number is increased to about three hundred and fifty by visitors, reporters and others in attendance. The audience in the church in which the Assembly is in session is as yet composed only of the delegates and a few others, although it is expected that the question of Slavery, when it comes up, will call in the citizens and crowd the galleries and aisles.

The officers of the assembly occupied a platform in front of the pulpit. The Moderator, Rev. Dr. FISHER, of Cincinnati, sits in the centre, in a big arm-chair, holding the bridle, and checking, as well as he may, over two hundred tongues of unruly members, which the Scripture declares that "no man can tame."

Among the most prominent members present are Rev. Dr. FREDERIC A. ROSS, of Huntsville, Ala., Rev. ROBERT MCLAIN, of Miss., Prof. ALLEN, of Lane Seminary, Ohio, Rev. Dr. HICKOK, of Union College, Schenectady, Prof. CONNIT, of Auburn, N. Y., Dr. R. W. PATTERSON, of Chicago, Rev. A. T. CHESTER, of Buffalo; and among the laymen, SAMUEL H. PERKINS, Esq., of Philadelphia, ORLANDO HASTINGS, Esq., of Rochester, A. M. BAKER, Esq., of Michigan, HIRAM ORDEWOLN, Esq., of Cleveland.

CLERICAL COSTUME.

Since the Presbyterians, through several of their prominent newspapers, have borne their testimony on the subject of "felt-hats," it may be of interest to the public to know that they are pushing their progress not only over the "heads," but over the "necks" of some of the brethren, by wearing not only "felt-hats" instead of beavers, but black cravats instead of white neck cloths. A distinguished member of the Assembly has spoken to your correspondent of progress also in another direction. He says that "Doctors of Divinity are scarce—common sense is on the rise." The great champion of the untitled clergy (Rev. ALBERT BARNES, of Philadelphia,) is not present, although his image is well borne by Rev. THOMAS A. MILLS, who fought a battle a few years ago against entering alphabetical and unapostolic "far-dels" upon the Assembly minutes.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

The first order of business this morning, after devotional exercises and the roll-call, was the announcement by the Moderator of the Standing Committees. The Moderator of the General Assembly occupies an office similar to that of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, having in his power the appointment of Committees which, in turn, have the power to a great extent to forecast and determine what business shall come before the body, and so largely to give character and complexion to its whole proceedings. The chief points at issue in the appointments for this year are the Slavery Question and the recent action of the Home Missionary Society. The Committees, as announced by the Moderator, and given below, were selected with a view to moderation on both sides. The following are the Standing Committees:

1. Judicial Committee—Ministers, James D. Hammer, D. D., J. Parsons Hoyey, Lewis H. Loss, Cyrus L. Watson. Elders, George W. Forbes, Fred. H. Hastings, Austin A. Guthrie.

2. Bills and Overtures—Ministers, D. Howe Allen, D. D., Benj. I. Wallace, S. D. Burchard, D. D., Thomas H. Cleland. Elders, Hon. W. Griswold, Orlando Hastings, Richard Edwards.

NEXT PLACE OF MEETING.

As part of to-day's business a lively contest was carried on for some time, in reference to the choice of a place of meeting for the next General Assembly. Several cities were put in nomination, Troy, N. Y.; Wilmington, Del.; Detroit, Mich.; Chicago, Ill.; and even San Francisco, Cal., and the vote was taken by the roll call, and resulted at first in no choice, the contest being close between Wilmington and Chicago. On a second vote, taken viva voce, resulted in the election of Chicago.

DON'T USE TOBACCO.

A communication to the Assembly from the Trustees of the Church, in behalf of the Church families on whom the Commissioners and guests are quartered, and of the Church building in which the sessions are held, contained a remonstrance against the use of tobacco. This memorial created great laughter, and reminded many of the members to take out their "fine cut" and their "silver leaf." Huge placards have been posted at the entrance of the building, making an additional remonstrance on the tobacco question.

PRESBYTERIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

A good part of the day was occupied with reading reports, canvassing and tabulating the statistics of the various benevolent Societies connected with the New School Church.

Toward the hour of adjournment for the day, Rev. B. J. WALLACE, of Philadelphia, presented a memorial from the "Presbyterian Historical Society," proposing a celebration in honor of the reunion of the divided Presbyterian Church in 1741. The Presbyterian Historical Society represents every branch of the Presbyterian Church, except the "Cumberland," including Old School, New School, Seceders, Covenanters and the rest. This memorial emanated from the Old School members of the Historical Society.

Rev. ELIZA TAYLOR, of Cleveland, made a speech, suggested by the memorial, on the probable Ecclesiastical union at no distant day of the Old School and New-School Assemblies. He believed it would not be accomplished till some of the "old men" should "die off," and to this end he intimated that he did not care how soon they were fitted for Heaven." This is almost a parallel to the Evening Post's merriment over the TIMES' reward of "Five thousand dollars."

FOURTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

CLEVELAND, Monday, May 25.

The report of the Delegates to the General Association of Massachusetts was read, showing some excitement in that body relative to the sending of Delegates to the General Assembly, by reason of its complicity with Slavery. Referred to the General Association, and two Delegates were sent from the present Assembly to the General Assembly of New-York, they having refused to send delegates for the same reason.

A communication was received from the Ashmun Institute, of New-Castle, Penn., asking aid and cooperation for the education of colored youths for the Ministry, under the care of the Old School of Presbytery. Referred to the Committee on Overtures.

New-Hampshire is the only New-England State represented in the Assembly.

Old School General Assembly at Lexington.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Thursday, May 21, 1857.

This beautiful City is very pleasantly situated in the midst of a most luxuriant agricultural district. Although it is small, the hearts of the people are large, and there was no difficulty in finding homes for the delegates and visitors to the General Assembly. If the weather remains as delightful as it is to-day, throughout the entire meeting of the General Assembly, the throng of visitors will return to their homes convinced that Kentucky is one of the fairest portions of the sunny South.

The First Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Dr. MATTHEWS, was crowded at an early hour. Among the audience we observed Hon. JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE, Vice President of the United States, who is a resident of this place. Among the eminent lawyers present as members, are Judges FINE and ALLEN, of your State, and SHARSWOOD, of Philadelphia. At about 11 o'clock, the opening exercises were commenced by Dr. MCGILL, of the Princeton Theological Seminary in the absence of the last moderator, Rev Dr. MACFARLANE, of Virginia, the opening sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. HODGE, of Columbus, Ohio. The passage of Scripture on which the Reverend gentleman discoursed, was the last clause of the twentieth verse of the twenty eighth chapter of Matthew, "And lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." The sermon was a lucid and comprehensive exhibition of the nature of the ministerial commission, and the promise of Christ's presence in all ages and climes. After the congregation was dismissed, the Assembly immediately came to order, and was opened with prayer by Dr. HODGE. The Committee of Organization reported the names of the members of Assembly who had presented their commissions, amounting in all, ministers and elders, to about two hundred. This number will be increased by about fifty to-morrow.

SECOND DAY.

Friday, May 22, 1857.

Yesterday afternoon the Assembly met, and proceeded to the election of a Moderator. Rev. Dr. VAN RENSSELAER, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Education, and Rev. Dr. SWITT, of Allegany City, were nominated. Dr. VAN RENSSELAER received 176 votes, and Dr. SWITT 72 votes. Dr. VAN RENSSELAER being elected, was conducted to the chair, and after a few remarks, commenced the regular business of the meeting.

Rev. J. SLOAN, of Mississippi, was elected temporary clerk.

This morning the Assembly met at 9 o'clock. After the routine business, the Assembly proceeded to select the next place of meeting. The claims of the cities of Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Rochester, and New-Orleans, were pressed by different gentlemen. The City of New-Orleans was decided upon by the following vote: Cincinnati receiving 3 votes, Rochester 13, Philadelphia 112, and New Orleans 137.

The reports of the different Theological Seminaries under the care of the Assembly were read, and referred to the appropriate Committees. P. W. G.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELERS AND SEAFARING MEN.—CHARLES J. BUNKER'S Life-Preserving Shirts for bathers, voyagers, and seafaring men, are the greatest invention of the age. They are made for males and females, and will be found invaluable by those who visit the sea shore this Summer. The Life-Preserving Shirts expressly for bathers are made of the finest fabrics, and may be worn as an ordinary garment, with the greatest comfort and convenience. Those constructed for voyages are capable of sustaining the wearers in the heaviest breakers, and will protect the body from injury from rocks and other obstacles. Show-rooms, No. 337 Broadway.

PERGATIVE ADAPTIBILITY.—The body is constantly changing. Sometimes BRANDRETH'S PILLS have a powerful effect, and at others they act mildly. This is one of the great causes why these Pills cure so many diseases—they wonderfully adapt themselves to the condition of the body. When there is need of powerful purgation, they act powerfully and effectively. When a tonic is required, they purge slightly, and at the same time stimulate every weak organ, and permanently strengthen the body. Principal office No. 43 Brandreth Building. Sold also by A. CORDMAN, Broadway, corner Twenty-second-street.

AMUSEMENTS.—PURDY'S NATIONAL THEATRE.—No place of entertainment in this City can compare with the powerful attraction given there this week. The dramatic representation of Coes's "Wild Knight, or the Unknown Crusader," which has created so great a sensation, is to retain its place in the bills throughout the week, with a new pantomime, called "Salmagundi," and a favorite drama this evening, being that of the "French Spy."

PRINCE ALBERT once created considerable excitement by the invention of a new style of Hat; but one of our citizens, with a name almost as great—KNOX, corner of Broadway and Fulton-street, the great reformer among hatters, has excelled him altogether in this respect—having produced, this Spring, a Hat which, for style, elegance, comfortable and becoming set, beauty of finish and reasonable cost, transcends all "foregone conclusions" of the kind.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Fever and Ague, and all intermittants, yield to this remedy. Quinine acts as a corrosive stimulant, and when it checks the disease, revenges itself upon the bones and tendons; but this balsamic medicine renovates the whole system, enables nature to throw off the complaint, and entails no unpleasant consequences. ☞ Mr. JOHN A. She never was charged, he says, for admittance at any time.

BROOKLYN POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.—The original cost and expenses of this Institution thus far have been about $60,000. Their current expenses and something more have been met by the receipts from pupils. There is an overhanging debt, however, of $26,400, which it is now proposed to wipe out by increasing their capital stock, under the act recently passed, giving the Directors power to increase the capital stock to $100,000, which, when all taken, will enable them to improve the Institution.

A WARNING TO BACHELORS.—A man named JAMES KEENAN was found dead in his room, at the corner of Van Brunt and Wolcott streets, Brooklyn, yesterday morning. Deceased kept bachelor's hall, and died several days ago. His remains were not discovered until the stench from his body attracted passers by to the house. Coroner REDDING held an inquest.

BURGLARIES IN BROOKLYN.—Houses Nos. 84 and 112 State-street, Brooklyn, were entered by burglars last evening, but for some reason which is not apparent they did not carry away much of value. At both houses the doors were broken in. Sergeant HARTSHORN, of the First District Police, got track of the thieves, and a few hours after the robberies succeeded in arresting five boys, one of whom confessed to being concerned with the others in the burglaries.

Six or seven houses, in different parts of the city, were entered on Sunday night, but there were no arrests.

OFFICIALLY SHOT.—Sergeant PHALAN of the Second District Police, Brooklyn, on Sunday afternoon last, was directed by Mayor POWELL to shoot a dog. In obeying the order, the officer accidentally shot a boy named HUGH SLOAN in the leg. The wound was not a serious one.

SABBATH SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—The Anniversary Celebration of the Brooklyn Sabbath Schools will come off to-day. It is expected that there will be more than 20,000 children in the procession, which forms on Henry-street, right resting on First place, at 1 o'clock P. M.

The Police difficulties have been so far arranged that they will turn out under their respective Captains, to protect the procession.

NEW-JERSEY.

CRICKET.—The match between the first eleven of the New-York Club and sixteen players of the Newark Club was commenced yesterday, at Hoboken, and will be concluded to-day. The score so far is as follows: New-York, first innings, 76 runs; Newark, first innings, 59. New-York, second innings, with no wickets down, 27. Wickets will be pitched at 9 A. M. to-day.

THE POOR EXPENSES.—WILLIAM WHITLEY, overseer of the Poor, and Superintendent of the Almshouse of Jersey City, presented to the Common Council at its last meeting his annual report, by which it appears that 161 infants and 289 children were relieved during the year by donations in groceries, and 239 adults and 600 children by donations of coal. The expenses of the Department for the year were $2,205 29.

KANSAS.

The Vermont Emigrants Located—New Free-State Papers—Land Titles—Memorial to the Free-State Legislature.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

LAWRENCE, Kansas, Monday, May 18, 1857.

I have recently made a trip South to the Sugar Creeks, Little Osage and Marmaton Rivers, a distance of about one hundred miles, and located the Vermont party, with others who have joined them in the Territory. We selected a point on the Little Osage, about sixteen miles from the Missouri line, in one of the finest valies in Kansas. There is an abundance of heavy timber on the river, and good coal beds are only two or three miles apart. The water is clear and pure and well distributed. We laid out a town, comprising two quarter sections, in Range 28, Township 23, on the most beautiful plot I have ever seen, fronting "Timber Hills," with a remarkable spring of excellent water in the rear, that affords at least a barrel of water per minute, and is so located that it can be carried in pipes to every part of the town. This new Southern rival is named MAPLETON, probably because sugar-maples are found on the surrounding hills. Hundreds of good claims are still vacant in that direction, but a due share of late emigration is now being directed to the Little Osage.

Seven or eight new free-State papers are about starting in Kansas, and the inference is, that our history will be better known in future, and our true line of policy better understood. The party has no adopted organ at this time, as the Herald of Freedom neither has, nor claims to have, anything like a universal endorsement, and since the rupture between ROBINSON and BROWN has become material for public gossip, it is not probable that the Herald will advance in popularity or usefulness, especially at the juncture when so many new competitors are rising into notice. Let them bask in the radiance of this sun-lit age. The voracious public will devour them all.

Another town among the newly risen I must notice. It is situated forty miles southeast of this place, on the road to Burlington, and is named Oread, in honor of the Oread Guards of Lawrence, who received their cognomen from the institute of that name in Worcester, Mass. All the members of the company are shareholders, and besides, several ladies in this vicinity, who have aided this company in various military emergencies, have received a share as a complimentary gift. Such strong influences, therefore, as are secured for Oread, will not be easily resisted.

The question of titles on the plat held for our town site is now being heard at Lecompton, and the evidence will be closed this week. It will then be sent on to the General Land Office for decision. It is only one-half of the mile square that is seriously contested, and even on that there is no intention to wrong any who have made bona fide purchases, and paid money for the same. In any event, city property will not be essentially depreciated, but for the time, sales are mostly suspended. Buildings are going up more rapidly than ever. The new patent pressed brick, made of lime and sand, are just coming into use. Two houses are already commenced, and present a more beautiful exterior than anything before seen in Kansas. The manufacturers say that they find better material here than in Missouri, and that they are superior to any brick they have before seen.

The Morrow House will be opened this week. It is greatly needed, for although we have not less than eight hotels and public boarding houses at the present time, they are all over-crowded, and to-night whole loads of passengers are obliged to lie upon the floors for want of better accomodations. Among our guests to-night I notice Hon. BRADFORD R. WOOD, of Albany, N. Y.; and Hon. JAMES S. ORR, M. C., of South Carolina. Also, a party from Vermont, in charge of JAMES HUTCHINSON, Jr., of Randolph, that have made the trip from Randolph to Lawrence in less than seven days, the quickest time I have yet noticed. They came by the Ogdensburg, Grand Truck and Great Western lines, then via Joliet and St. Louis, then by railroad line to Delaware City, which is within 30 miles of Lawrence, the nearest point on the Missouri River. Not less than twelve stages and express wagons arrived to-night—all crowded with Kansas settlers—not visitors, with a few exceptions.

A paper is now circulating for signatures, intended as a prompter to the Free-State Legislature. It will, doubtless, be generally signed, and then presented to the members. I enclose a copy that has been numerously signed in Lawrence, as follows:

To the Members of the General Assembly of the State of Kansas:

GENTLEMEN:—The ninth of June is the time fixed at your last session for re-assembling to do the work for which you were elected. That time is fast approaching, and we have thought it advisable to call your attention to the great importance of being at your post to engage in the fulfillment of the trust confided to you by your fellow citizens. There cannot be the slightest doubt of the success of our cause if we all prove true to ourselves at this time. The present administration, we are sure, has no disposition to attempt the forcible suppression of our Legislature. The act of Col. SUMNER in dispersing that body last July was too flagrant an outrage to be sustained by even the administration of FRANKLIN PIERCE. The President and Secretary of War publicly disclaimed the responsibility of that act. Since then a new Administration has been inaugurated, and although we may not, as yet, be permitted to entertain any greater confidence in its justice than we possessed in that of its predecessor, yet we are convinced that it may be controlled by a more elevated susceptibility to public opinion and a much higher order of statesmanship. Upon these qualities, at least, of the present Administration, we must rely for protection from any infringement of our constitutional rights. All should, therefore, be present on the 9th of June, to complete the State organization preparatory to admission into the Union as a free and sovereign State. Respectfully, yours,

C. ROBINSON, G. W. SMITH,
WM. A. PHILLIPS. WM. HUTCHINSON, and many others.

Since Secretary STANTON has rejected our proposition respecting the election, we adhere to our former position, and shall urge the importance of putting all the machinery of a State Government in working order without delay. They are sadly beaten, and without hope of recovery, at least in Kansas. With such a mighty tide of emigration and popular sentiment all one way, there is no contending. We can well afford to let the world budge on, irrespective of pocket Governors, knowing "there is a good time coming," when squatter sovereignty will be something beside an empty bauble. Gov. WALKER is expected in a day or two, also Senator WILSON. RANDOLPH.

P. S.—There is a prevalent rumor for a day or two, that Judge CUNNINGHAM is killed. He left Kansas City three weeks ago for his Court at Fort Scott, and has not been heard from since. He was the only Free-State Judge in Kansas, and it is known he has been somewhat obnoxious to the Pro-Slavery rabble since his appointment. We hope to hear something more definite soon. RANDOLPH.

The Coming Election of Delegates to the Constitutional Convention, &c.

ST. LOUIS, Tuesday, May 26.

Kansas advices to May 21 say that Secretary STANTON has issued a proclamation for the election of delegates to the Constitutional Convention on the third Monday in June. Returns from nineteen out of twenty-six counties were in, giving 9,251 legal voters. It was said that many of the Republicans were going over to the Free-State National Democracy; also that an attempt was making by Northern Democrats to send Free-State men of that party to the Convention.

Hon. ELY MOORE, formerly of New York, has been solicited to run for Congress. It is thought, if he consents to run, that he will be elected.

TO ROCKAWAY.—A steamboat communication is to be established with Rockaway about the 15th of June. The Norwalk will ply regularly, landing passengers at the Sea-side House, which is three miles from the Pavilion.

THE MORMON QUESTION.

Culpable Delays of the Government in Settling the Affairs of Utah—Improbability of the Success of Military Operations this Year.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

On the 4th of March last, JAMES BUCHANAN was sworn in as President of these United States and the Territories. Therefore his Administration has been dragging its slow length along for eighty days without coming to any conclusion in reference to the party who should be sent to administer to the "Saints" in Utah. No one knows to-day what is to be done with Utah. Ask the members of the Cabinet what is to be done, and they very politely inform you that decided steps will be taken; that the laws of the country will be enforced; that as soon as Maj. MCCULLOCH is heard from, or as soon as Senator BRIGHT is consulted, decided action will be taken; while, in the mean time, it all seems to be decided "talk" but no decided "cider." Reasonable men know that the distance from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City is more than twelve hundred miles; hence the imperative necessity of action, without so much undecided talk and promises unfulfilled. Had FREMONT been elected, with his anti-polygamy plank in his Presidential platform, you would have seen Gen. HARNEY out as far as Fort Kearney, a distance of full three hundred miles, with the proper antidote for Mormonism, and a prompt and efficient man en route for Utah to raise Gov. YOUNG of his Gubernatorial honors; but for fear of displeasing the Mormons, by appointing a man who is opposed to Mormonism, the whole Summer will be spent in talk and "decided" promises, and feeble, undecided action.

Now let an old soldier present a few figures in the shape of facts, as this Administration has calculations to make in regard to men, measures, miles and money, for full six hours per day, for many a long day, at the present rate, before they can spike BRIGHAM'S gun. It is intimated that two hundred men will be sent to Utah. Well, say that two hundred men will require twenty-five baggage wagons, with six mules to each wagon, making in all one hundred and fifty mules; to this add twenty-five riding mules and twenty-five more to be used in case of accident, and you have two hundred mules. Two hundred mules, at one hundred and fifty dollars each, will cost thirty thousand dollars. To this add the value of the wagons, harness, field pieces, ammunition, provisions for the men and two hundred coffins, (for most assuredly to disregard the mandates of the law. No such apology for your dereliction of duty now exists, as the foundation of hostility to the law and its requirement is removed by the decision of the Supreme Court, and I again refer you to the order above alluded to, and require a prompt obedience to the same.

A neglect or refusal on your part to comply with the rules and regulations of this Department above indicated will be immediately reported to the Commissioners of Police, by whom it will meet with prompt action.

I inclose to you duplicate copies of the law, as well as of the rules and regulations of this Department.

FREDERICK A. TALLMADGE,
General Superintendent of Metropolitan Police.

Those failing to respond to the above order will be immediately tried and dismissed for insubordination. True it will be known to-day which of the Police Captains is, and which is not, willing to acknowledge the new Board.

The trial of First Lieutenant MARTIN, against whom charges have been preferred by Deputy CARPENTER, will take place on Thursday. The Lieutenant has sent the following explanation to the General Superintendent:

Frederick A. Tallmadge, Esq.:

SIR: I received your polite note of the 21st inst., requesting me to promulgate orders emanating from the new Board of Commissioners.

I am now obliged to inform you of the position I have taken from the time Mr. Carpenter stated that he would obey no orders coming from the Albany Commissioners, viz.: that I am willing to obey the law; but as I am paid to execute, and not to make, the laws, I do not wish to forestall the action of our courts, not being educated as a lawyer. As it is, I intend to act as I shall be directed by legal advice, and also by those who have been elected by the people to promulgate such laws. I do not think, if I were capable so to act, it would be proper for me to act on a case where my own position might be brought in contact with any head or heads of our Municipal Government. My object is to prevent any ill feelings among the officers of this Ward. My business is to protect the citizens of this and other Wards, and preserve the peace, and I do not think it requisite to make myself a judge which of the Boards of Commissioners is correct. You can rest assured that the officers will do their duty promptly in this Ward. As regards the complaint made, our reports were headed "Report of Captain ——, to Chief of Police," and if I should make the report it would not have been by the captain, I being only, at that time, a humble lieutenant, and nothing more at present.

Respectfully yours, &c., WM. H. MARTIN.

Mr. Carpenter submitted yesterday the following report to the General Superintendent:

OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE, No. 88 White-street, NEW-YORK, May 25, 1857.

FREDERICK A. TALLMADGE, General Superintendent:

SIR: Captain Squirss, of the Eleventh Precinct, having been ejected from his Station-house, reports at this office.

Sergeants Davie, of the Tenth; Stears, of the Thirteenth; Bryan, of the Nineteenth; and John Cameron, of the Eleventh, having also been ejected from their several Station-houses, also report at this office.

Dr. Jones, of the Medical Staff, as usual, reports himself at this office.

Patrolman Johns, of the First Precinct, also reports to this office.

By order of Commissioner Bowen, I issued an order to Captain Dilks, of the Fifteenth Precinct, to detail two men to the Upper Asylum to-morrow for special duty.

Capt. Hopkins, of the Third Precinct, Capt. Porter, of the Twelfth, Capt. Dilks, of the Fifteenth, and Capt. Speight, of the Twenty-first, made their returns to this office.

The Third Precinct report 2 men sick, 14 on special duty, 33 on patrol.

The Twelfth Precinct reports 3 men on special duty, 2 vacancies, and 19 men on patrol.

The Fifteenth Precinct reports 1 sick, 12 on special duty, and 24 on patrol.

Twenty first Precinct reports 2 sick, 2 with leave, 11 on special duty, 26 on patrol.

Timothy S. Clark and A. S. Wilson, detailed at the Tombs on the 20th inst., have reported to me daily, and, by order of Commissioner DRAPER, have been relieved from duty at that place.

Policeman Nesbit and Story were detailed to take charge of this office during the night

DANIEL CARPENTER,
Deputy Superintendent.

Numerous designs for an emblem to be worn by the new police force have been submitted and considered. Mr. Brevoort, Secretary of the General Superintendent, has made a design of one, which will probably be accepted.

It is in the shape of a shield, designed to represent the shield of the State, in the centre of which is the Arms of the State, raised; above is the State motto, "Excelsior," and around the upper edges of the shield the words "Metropolitan Police," while directly beneath is the number of the warrant held by the bearer of the shield. The badge of the Inspectors will be quite similar, an eagle only being added above the shield, with the State motto suspended from the beak. These badges are designed to be chased at the edges, and can be seen a great distance.

The Mayor seems as determined as ever in his opposition to the new Commissioners. To a reporter who called upon him, yesterday, he said:

"I have seen nothing as yet to change my intentions, and shall pursue the course I have already indicated. The decision of the Supreme Court is what we anticipated. Indeed, we are gratified, rather than else, with the result in that Court, because we now have the control of carrying it up to the Court of Appeals; whereas, if it had been decided in our favor, we should not have had the power to press the points to a final decision in that court. We are gratified with it, also, more especially because of the extreme weakness of the points taken by the majority of the bench who decided against us, and the strength of Judge ROOSEVELT'S points.

We do not, therefore, see any grounds whatever for pursuing a different course; on the contrary we are going on as we have. We (the old Board of Police Commissioners) are to have a meeting this afternoon, at 3 o'clock, for the purpose of making appointments, and transacting whatever other business may come before us, as the regular and legally constituted Police Commissioners.

There are not, however, I believe, any cases of insubordination to be tried by us this afternoon. The Captains and men are almost unanimously in our favor; three only refuse to recognize our authority."

The Old Commissioners, Mayor WOOD and Judge RUSSELL, met at the office of the former at 3 o'clock P. M. They remained in session only a few moments and with closed doors. It was understood by the attachés of the office that not any appointments or removals were made.

To-day will probably prove the most interesting one since the beginning of this police warfare

As an effect of the recent decision of the Supreme Court, it may be remarked that several down-town merchants, who have lately had property stolen from them, appeared yesterday at the office of the new Commissioners, in White-street, and gave notice of the robbery, with a description of the stolen property. All such complaints have heretofore been made at the office of Mr. Matsell.

THE ANONYMOUS LETTER AND TOMBS GUARD.

The office of the Metropolitan Commissioners, at No. 88 White-street, is a busy place. From sunrise to sunset it is thronged with people, lookers-out for office, insubordinate policemen, and others.

The Commissioners met yesterday at the usual hour, 10 o'clock A. M., President DRAPER presiding. After the transaction of the usual preliminary and routine business, Commissioner NYE offered a resolution, which was adopted, that Commissioner POWERS be appointed on the Committee on Station-houses until the return of Mr. STRANAHAN, who is absent on account of indisposition.

The subject of police uniform was referred to the Committee on General Discipline.

A report from Deputy Superintendent FOLK, of Brooklyn, addressed to General Superintendent TALLMADGE, was read.

Mr. FOLK'S report is very long. It gives the names of all the officers and men on the Brooklyn Police; the number sick, on detail and patrol; the number against whom charges are pending, &c. This report was ordered on file, after which the Board adjourned for the day.

Superintendent TALLMADGE has asked Mr. Folk for further particulars,—has asked for the names of all the officers and men favorable to the new Board, and of those opposed. The reply will be received within a day or two, and will be submitted to the Commissioners, who will act thereon.

Yesterday, the following order was served upon all the Police Inspectors within the Metropolitan Police District:

General Order No. 2.

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE, No. 88 WHITE-STREET, NEW-YORK, Tuesday, May 26, 1857.

TO CAPTAIN—Sir: On the 21st day of May, inst., in compliance with an order received by me from the Commissioners of Police, you were directed to make your reports and returns to the Deputy-Superintendent of Police.

Many of the Captains have complied with this order, while others have neglected its requirements.

The Commissioners have regarded this neglect with forbearance, being aware that unremitted efforts have been made by those whose positions should have induced them to frown upon any violation of the laws of the State of New-York, and which misguided efforts have influenced several officers of this Department to disregard the mandates of the law. No such apology for your dereliction of duty now exists, as the foundation of hostility to the law and its requirement is removed by the decision of the Supreme Court, and I again refer you to the order above alluded to, and require a prompt obedience to the same.

A neglect or refusal on your part to comply with the rules and regulations of this Department above indicated will be immediately reported to the Commissioners of Police, by whom it will meet with prompt action.

I inclose to you duplicate copies of the law, as well as of the rules and regulations of this Department.

FREDERICK A. TALLMADGE,
General Superintendent of Metropolitan Police.

Those failing to respond to the above order will be immediately tried and dismissed for insubordination. True it will be known to-day which of the Police Captains is, and which is not, willing to acknowledge the new Board.

The Antagonists Work Together in Brooklyn.

The Police not on patrol duty yesterday were all out in attendance upon the Sabbath School children. The Deputy Superintendent of Police had charge of the Metropolitans, and Mayor POWELL of those who, with him, stand out against the law. The two forces worked in harmony together, and a stranger could not have discovered anything in their demeanor to indicate that the force was composed of antagonists.

During the day, an order was served upon each of the Captains, signed by Superintendent TALLMADGE, informing them that no further leniency would be shown to those in the Department who, after the receipt of this order, persisted in disobeying the officers of the new law—and that delinquents would be promptly dealt with. To-day it will be known who are disposed to continue contumacions.

A rumor is current that, under the advice of an Ex-Democratic Judge of Brooklyn, the Democrats in the Common Council will undertake to reduce the Police force to three men at the next meeting of the Board. The same parties intended at the last meeting to have moved to rescind the resolution sending the communication of the Police Commissioners to a Special Committee, but were prevented by a premature adjournment.

In the Fourth District, which embraces the Police of the Seventh and Eleventh Wards, the men of the Seventh Ward have refused to obey the Deputy Superintendent. The Eleventh Ward men are all (new) law and (new) order men. On Monday the Captain of the District made the discovery that Assistant Captain Wright had been entering his name as Sergeant. He was quite indignant about it, and some high words ensued. Sergeant Wright has since been placed in command of the Eleventh Ward men by the Deputy Superintendent.

Board of Governors of the Almshouse.

REQUISITIONS.

The Board of Governors of the Almshouse met at the Rotunda on Tuesday afternoon.

This being "Requisition Day" the usual monthly demands were granted, with occasional emendations. Among the medical requisitions for Penitentiary Hospital, half an ounce of musk (genuine) was cut down to a drachm; a pound of nitrate of silver, or lunar caustic, was demanded and allowed, the article being used freely, and frequently. The reading of these requisitions occupied more than an hour, and they were closely scrutinized by the Board. The question came up again (having often been previously discussed) as to the propriety of cutting down the medical requisition of brandy at Bellevue Hospital to one half, the quantity used of wine and spirituous liquors averaging 10 gallons per day.

Governor PINCKNEY thought the quantity enormous. It was abridged to one-half. Among the articles granted, were 8 pounds of iodide of potassa, 3 ounces of morphine, 3 pounds of sulphuric ether, 8 ounces of sulphate of cinchonine, 5 pounds of powdered bark, and 26 ounces of sulphate of quinine, and 6 pounds of chloroform. These items will illustrate the monthly consumption and expense of drugs in that establishment.

A variety of routine communications were read, and referred to appropriate committees.

Governor TOWNSEND then moved (the resolution being adopted) that the Confidential Clerk be instructed to advertise for proposals to employ the surplus labor at the Workhouse and Penitentiaries, in conformity with the law of the State.

CONCERNING POLICE MATTERS.

That gentleman next commented upon some observations which had lately appeared in one of the papers, and ended by submitting the following resolution:

Whereas, The law passed at the meeting of the last Legislature, styled the "Metropolitan Police bill," is calculated to disturb the efficiency of the present police organization of this City; therefore be it

Resolved, That a number of watchmen be temporarily appointed by the Wardens at the City Prison, to insure the safe custody of the prisoners in that institution, this Board being alone responsible for the safe keeping of the inmates.

He observed that the Board had power to protect their institutions at all hazards. He could rely on the Wardens of the City Prison, and believed that the institution was safe under his charge, yet as a matter of prudence, he, the Warden, thought it advisable he should be allowed to employ a number of watchmen, if necessary.

Governor ANDERSON said that Mrs. Gray (wife of the Warden) had received a threatening anonymous letter, which was brought to the prison. The Warden being in fear, the writer evidently knowing the interior arrangements of the building, consulted confidentially, (as an old member of the Board,) Mr. Draper. That gentleman had only done that which Governor Townsend and others had asked the Mayor to do on previous occasions.

Governor TOWNSEND thought the Warden was not justified in consulting Mr. Draper, even as an old friend of the Board. He ought to have applied at once to some existing member.

Governor PINCKNEY said that the Warden of the City Prison had also consulted him. He had advised him to speak with Mr. Draper, as the head of the Police force. That might be regarded by some as irregular. He could not vote for both the preamble and the resolution.

Governor DUERO said the Warden had also told him of the anonymous communication. But there was no danger at the Prison. There was no need of help from these City Commissioners. It was a political trick, but if Mr. Gray wanted any further appointments, he had no need to apply to any party of City Commissioners. The Board neither wanted help from them nor from the Mayor. They could do their own business.

Governor ANDERSON remarked that he did certainly recommend Mr. Gray to consult Mr. Draper, but it was with no party view of inducing either him or others to recognize the Commission.

Governor TIEMANN thought it was doubtful whether the City had an existing Police.

Governor PINCKNEY would amend the preamble, and commenced to read, "Whereas, as there is danger"—

Governor DUERO, laughing, interrupted him by saying, "Danger, humbug."

Governor PINCKNEY proceeded. There was no police organization in the City, excepting the Metropolitan Police.

Governor TOWNSEND inquired whether the police were not actually at work who effected the daily arrests.

Governor SMITH regretted extremely that the general question had been opened. He deprecated entering into the merits of the matter. He did not wish to vote for a preamble indorsing either the one police force or the other.

Governor TOWNSEND said that the existing difference of opinion among members of the Board convinced him that his first impression and action were correct. There was a disturbance in the City. He was sure, however, that the Board had the power of protecting the institutions under their charge and care, and though with him the spring of youth was passed, he for one would do his part, if called on by the necessity or the circumstances so to do. [Hear, hear, from several members.] He declared his determination not to withdraw his resolution.

Governor OLIVER said that here was a question which either did or did not disturb the peace of the City, assuming, as he would, that it did; Governor TOWNSEND came down with his usual coolness trying to get four of the Board in the absence of a fifth to commit itself to support a party who are doing their best to disturb us. How did it disturb? Simply because men resist the law. It was the fault of those who resist the law that there was mischief. Advantage ought not to be taken in that Board of the absence of one of its members. No gentleman ought to try to commit the Board by such a resolution as this. He would vote for the resolution but not for the preamble.

Governor TIEMANN said the adoption of the preamble would be no endorsement. It simply recommended reference.

Governor MOLONY would vote for the resolution. Just for this reason because he agreed with the views of Governor Oliver. He thought Mr. Gray ought to have addressed himself to the Board and not to Mr. Draper. He eulogized the patriotic sentiments of Governor Townsend.

Governor ANDERSON said, very emphatically, that no law could of itself disturb the efficiency of any other law. It is rather late in the day to betray want of confidence, when only lately the opposing party had asked the Legislature to commit a greater outrage than this could possibly be.

Governor DUERO said Governor OLIVER had remarked, among other things, that he was an old Whig—he had told him privately quite another thing, that it was not so. [Laughter.] Governor OLIVER did not care for the opinion of Governor SMITH, he says he is a Know-Nothing, a Republican, a Whig. What did the Board think of that? He pretended to be honest, but sure he was, his honesty would never kill him, it had not killed him yet. They had made a tool of this Warden. Mr. Draper was certainly one of the best of men. No doubt of that. But what had he done? Just forwarded a set of police fellows to the City prison, where they were not needed. He would recognize the new Commission only when it was recognized by the Court of Appeals. But the fact was, it was just an affair of political capital. Certain parties wanted votes, and Mr. Gray was led innocently enough into it, but that gentleman saw plainly now that his action had been wrong.

Governor ANDERSON said Mr. Gray had requested Mr. Draper to withdraw this force, and it had been withdrawn.

Governor SMITH proposed an amendment—"Whereas, a law has passed which has changed the former organization, therefore," &c., &c.

Governor DUERO, interrupting, said—"No, Sir!—no change. It has not been acknowledged."

Governor TOWNSEND said he had signed a petition to the Legislature—true, and he had wished for certain modifications. But he never doubted their competency to pass laws affecting that Board. Yet, he would say, the Warden had asserted that two members of the Board (forming a Committee) had advised him in the first place and directly to consult Mr. Draper, and, as Warden, that was irregular, or wrong.

Governor ANDERSON, on his part, denied that it was so.

Governor TOWNSEND persisted, and spoke of a note which the President had written to Mr. Gray, inquiring into the matter, but which had not been answered. The note was called for and read.

The PRESIDENT explained that he had seen Mr. Gray, that he had told him of his interview with Mr. Anderson, and that at his suggestion he went with Mr. Anderson to Mr. Draper.

Governor TOWNSEND—Then certainly the Police which he said he would send, and that visit to him, were with the sanction of the Committee. Neither Mr. Anderson nor Mr. Gray had a right to act in that manner.

Governor ANDERSON explained, reciting how the Warden had provided himself with pistols, and how he spoke of the defenceless state of certain windows. But Mr. Draper had been spoken to, merely in his original capacity as an old and tried friend of the Board.

Governor PINCKNEY recommended striking out the preamble. It involved a question with which the Board had nothing to do.

Governor DUERO said that would be acknowledging that the right lay on one side.

The President said: "Gentlemen, we have a deal to do," manifesting a wish that the discussion be dropped.

Governor DUERO thought not, or the Board would not fool themselves or their time with this. As to Mayor Wood, he was as big a humbug as the Commissioners, that—he said—was his opinion.

Governor OLIVER said, that had Mr. Gray applied to the old police, he supposed the Board would never have heard of all this. If Governor TOWNSEND was for revolution and anarchy, he hoped he would not commence it in that Board, that it would not arise in that shape.

Governor TIEMANN expressed his belief that the law was unconstitutional. A party in power had passed it manifestly for political purposes—nobody would doubt or deny that the Board ought to indorse neither side. This resolution would certainly indorse one side. Suppose the preamble were altered to say that a police force had been called to the City Prison, for which there had been no necessity, he would move that the preamble be laid on the table, and that the resolution should go to the Committee.

On vote, Governors TOWNSEND, MOLONEY and PINCKNEY in the negative, the preamble was so ordered. On reference of the resolution to the committee on City Prisons with power, Gov. PINCKNEY voted negative, the rest of the Board in the affirmative. The subject then dropped.

THE VACANCY NOT FILLED YET.

The Board took a recess to determine as to filling the existing vacancy by the election of a new member. Before leaving, Governor SMITH said he thought that the Democratic party ought to allow of no more delay in the election of a new member. Governor TOWNSEND replied that the Democratic side of the house had nothing to do with that; it was a vacancy created by the resignation of one of the Whig body, and that when they were ready to unite on a candidate, he would guarantee no opposition.

On return of the Board it was announced that five gentlemen had been named, but no action had been arrived at. The Board then adjourned.

Old-Line Whigs on the Police Question.

A special meeting of the Old-Line Whig General Committee was held last evening at Clinton Hotel, corner Broadway and Eighth-street. J. P. DOAE, Esq., in the Chair, and WM. A. CONKLIN officiating as Secretary.

The Secretary read the following letter from F. A. TALLMADGE:

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT, No. 88 White-street, NEW-YORK, May 26, 1857.

Wm. A. Conklin, Esq., Secretary, &c.:

MY DEAR SIR: I received your note inviting me to attend a meeting of the Whig General Committee on Tuesday evening, 26th inst., and regret that the circumstances under which I am placed will preclude my attendance with you. Although placed in office by those with whom I have had no political affinity, I cannot throw off my allegiance to the old Whig Party. I wish it steady success. It combines the highest principles of honor and integrity, and I shall ever be proud to be numbered among your association of glorious spirits.

Tender, my dear Sir, my thanks to the Whig General Committee for the honor they have conferred upon me by clothing me with official position; and while tendering my resignation as your President, ever regard me as a member of your fraternity, and believe me, sincerely and respectfully, your Whig friend, F. A. TALLMADGE.

The following resolutions were read:

Whereas, This City is at present in a condition of disobedience to law, which may lead to most serious results, and

Whereas, Such condition has been brought about by the endeavors of the municipal officers to prevent the execution of certain laws enacted by the Legislature of the State referring to this City, and

Whereas, It is the province of this Committee, being a representative body, to declare its views upon the subject, therefore,

Resolved, That the time has arrived when it is the duty of all good citizens to throw aside the bonds of party and unite in one common cause in defence of the Constitution and the law.

Resolved, That the action of the authorities of this City in preventing the execution of the new Police and other laws, aiming as it does at the foundation of all representative Government, is of a nature calculated to subvert that Government itself; and can only meet with the disapproval and earnest condemnation of all honest and law abiding citizens.

Resolved, That without presuming to decide upon the constitutionality of these or any other laws, we at the same time assert as a fixed principle of our Government and as a cardinal point of Whig faith that all laws, no matter whose interests they may affect or what changes they may involve, so long as they do not conflict with our manifest duties as citizens should be obeyed and enforced until they are either declared unconstitutional or become the subject of legislative action.

Resolved, That we take this occasion to reiterate our undying devotion to Whig principles. Convinced that they are the Whig principles which will bear the test of time, and declaring that stern obedience to laws as a cardinal point of Whig faith, we pledge ourselves that as far as our influence may extend all laws shall be sustained until they are voided by constitutional means.

S. S. Hutchins, Esq., first spoke to the resolutions. The old Whig party he declared was far from being extinct. Its vitality remained, and as long as this vitality existed, they would oppose resistance to the laws of the State. He did not approve of all the laws passed by the last Legislature, but as long as they were the laws, he believed it to be the duty of every citizen to yield obedience to them.

WM. B. LEGGETT, Esq., said he understood that an armed organization has been got up to support Mayor Wood, and oppose the laws of the recent Legislature. He considered it the duty of good Whigs to declare their opposition to any military or other association formed with a view to resist the laws of the State. He did not believe any blood is shed would come of the present anarchical state of things. There would be a good deal of talk among the opposition and but little action.

The resolutions now passed unanimously. There being no further business, an adjournment took place to the third Tuesday in June.

The Mayor's Volunteer "Army."

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, May 26, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

A captain of a target company who paraded last April, thinks the TIMES could enlighten nearly all the captains in the City by stating who and how many individuals met together and elected Alderman WILSON Commander of the Citizen Volunteers, who, under said WILSON, propose to do such great things, said Captain not having as yet heard of nor seen any officer representing a company who is possessed of the slightest knowledge concerning these alarming movements, beyond what he has read in the papers.

The writer is slightly of the opinion that when Alderman WILSON calls out his army it will consist solely of certain Aldermen and Councilmen who appeared beside him in high-top boots and short breeches on the 23d of April last. If the public understood as well as the Captains do the difference between this Alderman WILSON and the "late" Commander-in-Chief HENRY WILSON, they would regard the proceedings of these widely-reported meetings as decidedly rich, and would not experience the slightest uneasiness therefrom.

QUARANTINE.

A Quarrel Among the Oystermen About Squatter Sovereignty.

The Commissioners of Emigration and of Quarantine at Loggerheads.

Probably No New Buildings This Season.

The troubles of the Quarantine Commissioners are not yet at an end. Every week discovers new obstacles and accumulated vexations. Seguine's Point is still there for them to build their hospitals upon, and a portion of Raritan Bay is there for anchorage ground. But the people of Bloomingview and the region round about, cry out against their raising a single timber upon the ons, and the oyster beds protest against being disturbed by the letting go of an anchor in the other. If they do anchor there, the men of Jersey declare they will seize any vessel that the storm may blow over the State line; and if they erect hospitals, the threat is that they will be burned: and even if the threat should not be executed, the Commissioners of Emigration are about to declare that they will furnish neither doctors, nor medicines, nor nurses, nor food, for any "temporary accommodations." Such, at least, was the state of the case when our reporter left Seguine's Point yesterday afternoon. There is now but little left upon the farm to mark where the incendiaries did their work, except the broken foundations of the former buildings. Nearly every charred stick has been

The National Academy Exhibition.

The month of May, which has undergone of late years such serious mutations of physical character as to be no longer recognized by its best friends, can still fortunately be identified by its anniversaries. We know that May comes in with the philanthropists, and goes out with the painters. In the merry olden days of rose-garlands and May-poles, the philanthropists would doubtless have been the more welcome of the two. But now that we sing the old song in a new sense and congratulate ourselves exceedingly that "it is not always May," the painters who scare away the ogress Spring will be crowned with the swallows who bring in the pleasant Summer. Very glad then we are to see the doors of the National Academy once more opened—the good old doors of the good old place. For our first word with the artists must be a word of thankfulness that they have got back into their old rooms. Not that these rooms are by any means ideal rooms, as Mr. Rossiter's "Wise and Foolish Virgins" have no doubt by this time sufficiently satisfied all gazers, but because they are so much better than the dingy styes into which the pictures of the year have so long been crammed and crowded.

The Academy Rooms are sufficiently capacious and sufficiently well-lighted to allow the Hanging Committee a fair chance of making themselves personally odious to many painters. For there are so many good lights to be had, that everybody who is not lucky enough to secure one will be sure to swear Punic wrath against the ely barnarians of the Committee. But that is the affair of the painters, and not ours. We may be allowed to delectate ourselves in such pictures as we can pleasantly see without meddling with the politics of the atelier. The only economical criticism we have to make concerns the portress of this Paradise, who strikes us as being a trifle too "fierce and froward" for the minister of such a gentle brotherhood. Passed the Scylla of this stern lady, however, and the Charybdis of the cave into which canes and umbrellas vanish, we find ourselves in a very agreeable saloon.

For what saloon is more agreeable than the large room of an Academy Exhibition in the opening of a new season? here quiet broods, refined, warm, thoughtful quie—there voices are lowered, and the minds of men are pleasantly busy. And all about you grow the new thoughts of many lovers of the beautiful, who have tried each in his way to make the beautiful lovable to all the world besides. Our first criticism is always a general sensation of comfort, repose and cheerful excitement. This is a tribute to Art itself, and he who does not pay it, has never tasted the secrets of the palette and the easel.

Then for the artists, man by man! How rapidly and fruitlessly we scan the list of names at the end of the catalogue, partly for the certainties of pleasure assured to us by the names we know now, and partly for the hopes of pleasure inspired by the new names that we shall always know hereafter! Few of those who may be figuratively called the veterans are this year missing from the roll, though some of them are not very brilliantly represented on the walls.

The widest gap is made by the utter absence of DARLEY, who can hardly be said to be present in virtue of a few bank note vignettes. For though a bank note is by no means a bad thing—and though a man may know himself as clever, or as stupid, in sketching a vignette as in frescoing the dome of a cathedral, we hold DARLEY to higher things, and pass him by therefore as willfully incognito on this occasion. The landscapists, on the other hand, are in force. KENSETT, CHURCH, CROPSEY, DURAND, HUBBARD, are all here, and others, the white-robed of last year, past their candidacy, now second to no stable rank. SHATTUCK, COLEMAN, HART, are names which we shall henceforth expect to see.

Of course no particular system has been adopted in hanging the pictures. There is no reason why you should begin or end at one point rather than at another. You may wander about with us and stop where you and we shall please. As, for instance, before this No. 23, which arrests everybody, and holds you the third time more firmly than the first. You hardly need be told that these are the Andes spreading out so vast and far before you—peak beyond peak—with such wonderful depths and the breadth of valley between. For the waving palms, the giant ferns bring before you the realities of tropical America. You do not wonder that the man who could so completely master a landscape so grand and vast as this, should have been the successful lover of Niagara. Mr. CHURCH's pictures, like TURNER's, are triumphs of intelligent audacity. Like the great Englishman to whom, in truth, he is allied in boldness of hand, he is certainly not inferior. Mr. CHURCH handles the grandest effects of Nature as lightly as the least. He understands that it is not really more difficult to paint the most magnificent mountain landscape, or the most sublime cataract of the New-World, than it is to paint the neatest church-porch, or the prettiest village green of the Old, provided the painter will be contented in the one case, as in the other, to paint precisely what he sees, and not what he thinks he ought to see, or imagines that he has seen, or fancies that somebody else will expect to see; the latter of these mistakes being the snare into which the vast majority, not of painters alone, but of artists in general, and private men and women, do continually fall.

One of Mr. CHURCH's qualities is the tact with which he secures his "point of view." This is admirably displayed in his "Niagara." He has given up the attempt to represent the Falls from below, perceiving, no doubt, that one of the most striking features of the Cataract—its grandeur—must be inevitably belittled by the introduction upon the canvas of the surrounding landscape; for it is impossible to put on the canvas the mighty thunderous roar which concentrates the attention upon the Fall itself in the actual scene. The actual curve and plunge of the river make up the body of his picture, while the lovely landscape of the far, with charming banks, is deliciously subordinated, and takes its fitting place as a relief and not as a distraction of the mind. So in this picture of the "Andes of Ecuador," Mr. CHURCH has seized the ample scope of the mountain landscape and conveys that idea to our mind rather than the ideas of gigantic height and mountain bulk, which no painter can do more than adequately suggest. Your first thought on gazing into the picture (for so luminous and real is the atmosphere that it is really almost a misuse of language to talk of gazing upon it) is of the wonderful expanse before you. By slow degrees you come to feel the sentiment of altitude and majesty growing out of your fuller sense of this expanse, and relieving it by the harmonious contrast and balance of emotions. There is nothing raw and unredeemed in the picture. The intense brilliancy of the pervading sunlight is made endurable by the wealth of luxurrant verdure, and by the delicious coolness of the dusky-green ravines through which the rivers flow and the cascades leap, diffusing a delicate haze of softest vapor. The truth of such a picture as this is not the truth which has been made a lie by the Pre-Raphaelites—it is not the truth of a photograph, but pure, pictorial truth—truth, that is, to the perceptions of a human being. This is the truth which redeems all the falsehoods of CLAUDE LORRAINE throughout his career, as well as all the willfulnesses of TURNER in his later days. Mr. CHURCH does not always exhibit such a mastery of this truth as in this No. 23, in the "Niagara," or in the exquisite No. 522, the "View on the Maddalena," which is one of the freshest, and sweetest, and most seducing pictures of the exhibition. The "Autumn," No. 142, with all its splendor of color, is not so true in atmospheric sentiment—and singularly enough, for such a man is not quite correct in drawing. But the No. 26 and the No. 522 would suffice to put their author at the head of our landscapists. As we remember the gorgeous descriptions of Amyas Leigh, in looking upon the former—so the latter recalls the most tranquil chapters of Paul and Virginia, and suggests a truer and happier image of "Primitive Life" than Mr. ROSSITER's rather melodramatic notion of that subject gives us in No. 5. Mr. ROSSITTER is a skillful painter, but where did he ever see such a moon in such a sky? He has combined in this picture an effect of vaporous moonlight with an effect of flaming torches, and if we stop at the mere mingling of tones where the immediate radiation of the torchlight mingles with the diffusion of the moonlight, we must pronounce the combination to have been cleverly enough handled. But look at the color of the savages in the boat, and you would suppose that the torches and the moon together made up a dawning day! The composition of the picture, too, is awkward and crowded. It does not please the eye. The same criticism is provoked at once by the more conspicuous No. 163. The "Wise and Foolish Virgins," we believe, won a prize at the Exhibition in Paris, and we infer that this distinction must have been accorded to the handling of the picture, which is precisely the quality of it least appreciable in its present position. A more utterly unimaginative picture of an imaginative subject we have rarely seen. The "Wise Virgin," who would be called "a very decent body" in Scotland, is walking along quite composedly with a kind of jar in her hand, and is apparently very unconscious of the presence of the "Foolish Virgin," who is sauntering across her path in a very négligé costume, and with a very dégagé air, accompanied by a small negro page, who shows his teeth, and holds up a pink umbrella over his mistress' head. Now what has such a composition in common with the parable it is supposed to illustrate? It might just as well be set down in the catalogue as the meeting of Rebecca and Cleopatra, or a view in the streets of Naples.

Mr. ROSSITER has clearly missed his domain in venturing into the realm of illustrative and imaginative art. He has only not gone quite so far wrong as Mr. HALL has, in his indescribable assault upon the character and memory of the late WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. There is a tradition, we know, that "Glorious Will" came to his end in consequence of a fever brought on by over-indulgence in good Sherry with "rare BEN JONSON." But this was in his jovial days of repose. The poet who created "Portia" and "Imogen," formed his reveries in his brain and not in his bottle, and we shall never forgive Mr. HALL for presenting the first of English poets as sunken into a boozy slumber, and surrounded by a troop of dowdy divinities, the "Visions of his Dream." There is a good arm-chair in the picture, and a group of neat substantial females, which facts will doubtless secure for the painter an admiring public, and we shall not quarrel with that if he will have the kindness to re-baptize his handiwork by a less pretentious title.

It is a relief to turn from such a picture to the quiet, unobtrusive, and promising No. 75 near by. Mr. LAMBDIN? The name is new and (oh, rare conjuncture!) the picture is new also. The subject naturally is rather old, for it is the oldest subjects which make the newest pictures, the newest poems, the newest of all new things that are good. In a perfectly simple room sits at her piano a fair young girl, such a girl as we all know or should like to know—sufficiently pretty—and sufficiently unconscious that she is so—a warm-hearted girl, you would say, favored by Heaven with a sweet voice to utter her warm heart's emotions. She has been singing the pathetic songs that SHELLEY loved—the "sweetest songs that tell of saddest thought"—and her soul, and her voice, and the song together, have entered the heart of her friend, who stands by her side, and buries her face in her hands. That must be a face worth seeing, we feel, and are half angry with the art which kindles a wish it never can grant. Mr. LAMBDIN has not lived in a vain show it is clear. If this picture does not satisfy you of this, look at another from the same hand, and of similar character—No. 121. Here are two lovers—or two who are like to be lovers soon—talking together in the twilight, which reddens the distant sky, and deepens the light of the heart in the maiden's face. Both pictures exhibit the same qualities—simplicity, sentiment without sentimentality, and that fidelity in material details without which sentiment and taste may make an amateur but never an artist. We congratulate Mr. LAMBDIN on his success, and shall look well for his name in the future.

Here, too, is another new name not likely to be forgotten soon. Mr. JAMES HART has not misnamed his landscape, No. 65, in calling it a "Summer Afternoon." It is a work full of quiet power and sincere feeling, and we are glad to see that it has already found a purchaser. There is nothing conventional in Mr. HART's treatment of a subject which is a perpetual temptation to conventionalities. His distance is treated with not less of thought than of sentiment; his coloring is simple and skillful; his lights are handled with very remarkable truth, and unaffected effectiveness. A charming little glimpse of "Scotland," near by this picture, No. 56, also bears the name of HART. Whether WILLIAM HART and JAMES be brothers by blood, we do not know; but brothers in the delicacy and force of their artistic qualities they certainly are. The sentiment of No. 56 would remind us of KENSETT were it not for a thought more of freshness and vivacity in the tone of the picture than is common in those of that amiable, accomplished artist, and were not KENSETT himself so close at hand. No. 72 is one of Mr. KENSETT's most agreeable cabinet pictures. Fond as KENSETT is of his amethyst or sapphire hills, and of his soft horizons—mellowed down with floating vapors and the declining light of day—we find him more at home in reaches of quiet upland, or in stretches of still sea-beach. The less he deals with clouds the better his pictures always are. Compare the astonishing and delicate exactness which distinguishes CHURCH's handling, whether of cumbrous masses or cirrous wreaths, with KENSETT's indications of similar sky phenomena, and you will be very apt to agree with us, that his strength is in dealing with the deep-blue or the misty-gray heavens, and, above all, in producing simply atmospheric effects, over which his control is amazing. What a delicious little piece of tranquil nature he has caught and fixed forever in the frame of the No. 72! Turbulent spirits must grow calm in gazing on such a scene—and the painter who can so transfuse his pencil with the spirit of the sky and fields needs no sermon preached to him by evangelical Ruskins or Ruskinites.

Still more charming is the artist's landscape numbered 482. This is one of the gems of the exhibition, and is in the painter's very best vein. If the pleasant weather had not yet come we should find it here, and it is so pleasant when we find it that to leave it again is not easy. Yet, as we must go for to-day, we prefer to go with such thoughts in our mind as this scene suggests, that we may come back again in an amiable mood to talk of the many other pictures which demand a word from us, and combine to make up, on the whole, the most interesting exhibition which the Academy has ever given us.

☞ Says a Jamaica (L. I.) paper: "Mrs. JOHN WATTS, (widow,) living on the Merrick Plank Road near Valley Stream, about five miles southeast of Jamaica, 'has not eaten a particle of solid food for more than seven weeks.' She has taken nothing but liquids, and almost to the exclusion of everything else, 'drinks nothing but tea.' She is around and in good health."

ECCLESIASTICAL

General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church.

FIFTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

After the customary devotional exercises, Rev. Dr. FINDLEY hoped that the amendment to the resolutions on the basis of union, which had been offered on the previous evening, might now be taken into consideration. He deemed it the most important matter before the Synod. He read a dispatch from Rev. HUGH BLAIR, of the Associate General Synod at Philadelphia, which said that that body had adopted the basis, with a trifling amendment of the argument and illustration, and that a delegation would be sent on, to confer with the Associate Reformed General Synod, who would probably arrive that day.

The amendment is attached to the first resolution, the rest of the preambles and resolutions remaining the same. The resolution as amended reads thus:

Resolved, 1. That the Associate Reformed Church does hereby declare her acceptance of the Testimony proposed as a basis of union by the Associate Synod, and overtured by the General Synod of 1846, to the Presbyteries, in the confidence that any modifications or amendments necessary to harmonize said basis with the faith and practice held in common by the two churches, or render it more entirely acceptable, will be in due time effected by the united church, and in the confidence that reasonable forbearance will be exercised toward any member of either body that may feel constrained to dissent from any article in the basis.

Rev. J. B. PRESTLEY moved that the matter lay on the table until the delegation should arrive. The motion did not prevail, however.

Dr. FORSYTH said that the remarks he made yesterday on this subject he thought had been misunderstood by the reporters. He did not intend to say—and thought he had not said—that there were no weighty objections to the proposed basis. He meant to say: 1. That the A. R. Church had legislated on each of the articles of the basis. 2. That, nevertheless, there is a radical difference of opinion in the Church in regard to several of the articles. 3. That the practical question, therefore, is just this: Supposing this basis to be now adopted, can any method be devised by which those who object to it can go along with their brethren with a good conscience?

Rev. Mr. NESBITT, of Illinois, spoke in favor of the amendment, as it gave him the privilege of pursuing any course he deemed proper in relation to the binding obligations of the basis.

Rev. Mr. BALDINGER, of Indiana, also spoke briefly in favor of the resolutions for the adoption of the basis as they were amended.

He said that without the amendment the Presbytery he represented was opposed to the adoption of the basis; but with it they were unanimously in favor of union.

Elder MOVAY, of Caledonia, N. Y., and Rev. Mr. LORIMER, of Steubenville, both expressed themselves in favor of adopting the resolution as amended.

Rev. Mr. MCNULTY objected to the Testimony, because they were asked to accept some of those very doctrines which their fathers excepted to when the Associate Reformed Church was formed. He presented his views on the objectionable points at some considerable length.

Rev JAMES PRESTLEY forcibly advocated the adoption of the resolutions as amended, and felt that it would be foolish not to accept the union on those terms.

Rev. Dr. FINDLEY asserted that he would rather the amendment should be voted down, than that it should be adopted with the understanding that it permitted such latitude as several brethren were disposed to claim for it.

After brief explanations from various gentlemen:

Professor ALEXANDER YOUNG said that he held that no decision could be arrived at without causing one party suffering, and that the subject should not be pressed now. The testimony was overtured, either for adoption or amendment, and opinion was very much divided on the best course to pursue. Under such circumstances, would it be prudent for the majority to press the matter to issue? If they adopted the basis, no harm would accrue to the Associate Church; their principles would not be disturbed to the slightest degree; but, on the Associate Reformed Church would fall all the hurt. He could not, as an honest man, enter into the union—his conscience would not permit him to do so. If the measure passed, he hope would be officially sealed as a minister of Christ in the Associate Reformed Church. He advised that the discussion should now be closed, and that they should go home to pray, and ask God's guidance in the matter.

Rev. Mr. LOVE did not see difficulties in the way of the union, as did some of the brethren. To the an endment, however, he strenuously objected. With such latitude as that allowed them, they would always be looked upon with suspicion by their associate brethren. The amendment proposed a "reasonable forbearance" with one another, but forbearance, he considered, had always been a characteristic of the Associate Reformed Church; and, if they entered the union, the combined churches would none the less fail to practice it. It had been stated that the majority had no right in their strength to force this matter upon them, but he wanted to know how any decision could ever be arrived at, unless the majority principle were acted on.

Rev. G. W. FOWDY, of Columbus, Ohio, opposed both the resolutions and amendment, and was in favor of postponing the question for further consultation with the several Presbyteries.

Rev. J. A DICK favored the adoption of the resolutions, in order to show the Presbyterians that the confidence of that Church was undiminished in their own standards.

Rev. Mr. MCKINSTRY had no idea that the amendment would be interpreted with so much latitude, else he should not have offered it.

Rev Dr. MCCARROLL said if this Church was merged into the Associate Church they would cease to exist, and be remanded to a position which their fathers and themselves had ignored. This Synod had no authority to do that.

The hour of adjournment having arrived, the Rev. gentleman postponed further remark till the afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Moderator, after the usual preliminary business, announced that he had received a dispatch from Philadelphia, which he read as follows: "The Associate Synod have adopted the basis almost unanimously. A Committee have left for New-York in the 2 o'clock P. M. train."

Rev. DAVID CUBBIN briefly reiterated his sentiments against the proposed basis.

An ineffectual attempt was made to limit members to five minutes each in the further discussion of the question.

Rev. Dr. MCCARROLL resumed his remarks on union. He asserted that the Constitution of the Associate Reformed Church was diametrically opposed to many of the articles in the basis: and besides, if that were adopted, they would have to violate a solemn compact made with the Synod of New York. Those who were opposed to the consummation of this matter now, were not blamable for occupying the time of the Synod in debating it, for they were fighting for their lives.

Another attempt was made to enforce the five minutes' rule, which also failed.

Rev. Dr. PRESLY replied to Dr. MCCARROLL. He could not agree with his respected brother in saying that they would go on a rocky shore, when they went over to the Associate Church. It had been said too, that they gave up everything and the Reformed Church nothing, but he did not see the matter in that light—it was not going over into the Associate Church, but it was meeting them on a common ground. He believed that it was their duty to unite, particularly after this amendment, where there was no imposition upon conscience. The Reverend Doctor made an affecting allusion to the remark of Rev. Prof. YOUNG, who, in the morning, had stated that if this resolution passed, it would forever seal his lips as a minister of Christ. The allusion brought Prof. YOUNG to his feet, who, in a voice subdued with emotion, reaffirmed his statement, saying that if the basis were adopted, he should either have to accept it in its integrity, or not at all. In the former case he would be called upon to teach doctrines which he did not believe, and which he could not conscientiously teach; therefore no other resource would be left him.

The Professor then offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the subject now under consideration be referred to a Committee, to consist of a member from every particular Synod, to propose such amendments as may harmonize our views in such a way as to present a distinct issue, acceptable to us and our associate Brethren.

Rev R. D. HARPER inquired whether it was constitutional for the Synod to take a vote upon the adoption of the basis at present.

The Moderator said that they would have no occasion to do so if the resolution of Professor YOUNG was carried.

Elder T. M. NAVIN favored the resolution of Professor YOUNG, and thought that the whole proceedings of the Synod were unconstitutional in relation to this matter. The Synod had no right to vote on the subject.

A vote was then taken on Professor YOUNG's resolution, and it was lost.

Professor YOUNG then inquired if this vote would be binding, and was answered in the affirmative.

The original resolutions, as amended, were then voted on. The ayes and noes were called for, with the following result:

Considerable excitement was manifested during the taking of the vote, and when order was restored, several gentlemen gave notice that they should enter protests against those parts of the basis that they did not approve.

A resolution appointing a Committee of Four to confer with a Committee to be appointed by the Associate Synod on the subject, was passed, and the Moderator named Rev. Dr. J. T Prestley and Revs. Drs. S. C. Baldridge, S. Miller and J. Prestley as such Committee.

EVENING SESSION.

The Synod convened at 8 o'clock, and Rev. R. D. HARPER opened the proceedings with prayer.

Rev. HENRY BLAIR announced that a delegation from the Associated Synod at Philadelphia was present, and Rev. Messrs. PRESSLY, MCKINSTRY and BALDRICH were assigned as a Committee to introduce the delegation, whom they led into the room and announced as follows:

Rev. J. T. COOPER, D. D, Rev. JAMES PATTERSON, D. D., and JAMES MCCANDLESS, Esq

As soon as the delegation were seated the Moderator said the Synod was ready to hear their report.

Dr. COOPER then stated that they were from the Associate Synod at Philadelphia, the bearers of a report, and that the earnest desire of that body was to promote an organic union.

Dr. PATTERSON and Mr. MCCANDLESS followed with remarks of like import.

The report of the Committee of Missions was taken up for consideration.

The report of the Auditory Committee was recommitted to them.

Old School General Assembly.

[REPORTED FOR THE NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES.]

LEXINGTON, Ky., Saturday, May 23.

The Assembly spent half an hour in devotional exercises, and then proceeded to the regular business. The Committee appointed at the last meeting of the General Assembly to consider the subject of opening a fraternal correspondence with the Associate Reformed Church of the South, reported that a correspondence had been opened with the General Synod of that Church. The Synod had responded by appointing a delegate, Rev. N. M. GORDON, to the Assembly, and requested this body to send a delegate to them. The Synod had also appointed a large Committee of two from each Presbytery, to consider the practicability of a closer union. The report was referred to the Committee on Foreign Correspondence.

VERMONT.

Rev. F. BUTLER, representing the General Convention of Vermont, presented the congratulations of that body, together with a short statement of the affairs of the churches and the state of religion in that region. The Moderator responded to the happy remarks of the delegate, with kind expressions of gratification at the good feeling existing between the bodies, and welcoming the delegate to the favor of the Assembly.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Rev. D. C. JONES, of Georgia, Chairman of the Committee on Domestic Missions, presented the Report.

The number of Missionaries engaged in the service during the past year, is 590.

The total amount of receipts from all sources from March 1, 1856, to March 1, 1857, is $93,248 99, to which add balance on hand in different treasuries, $21,133 17, making the available resources of the Board during the year, $114,382 16.

The amount paid out during the same time is $95,121 76. The amount due to Missionaries on March 1, 1857, was $12,964 86, leaving an unexpended balance of $6,295 54

The Report closed with a series of resolutions, followed by an urgent appeal from Dr. JONES, pressing the claims of this Board.

Dr. MUSGRAVE, Secretary of the Board, made a few remarks on the subject of those Churches which had been for a long time under the care of the Board, and which ought now to be self sustaining. Although the receipts had been less during the past year than the year previous, the Secretary felt encouraged by the increased demands upon the services of the Board, from every part of the country. After a somewhat lengthened discussion, the Report was recommitted.

But little business was done further, and the Assembly adjourned until Monday morning.

The Streets—Communication of the City Inspector.

To the Hon. the Common Council of the City of New-York:

GENTLEMEN: It becomes my duty to call your attention to the filthy condition of the streets, and to the necessity of immediate action on the part of your honorable body to enable me to cause them to be placed in a cleanly condition, and thus to preserve the public health against the origin of pestilential disease.

The crisis demands action without delay, and unless such action is taken by the municipal authorities self-preservation will ere long compel our citizens to consider and act upon the subject in their own behalf.

On the 19th day of March last, proposals were, in accordance with previous advertisement, received and opened by the (then) Commissioner of Streets and Lamps, who forwarded a list of the bidders, and naming the lowest to the Board of Aldermen for confirmation; no action has been had in said Board. Since the date mentioned, I am informed the Mayor, Comptroller, and Commissioner of Streets and Lamps entered into an agreement with the parties named as the lowest bidders, whereby these parties came in possession of the streets under the stipulation for said parties to cause the work to be performed; and, on the part of the Corporation, to pay, if the work should be performed as per specification.

A copy of these agreements are annexed hereto, marked "A" and "B" respectively.

It will be perceived that although certain persons were named as the sureties of the parties submitting proposals, these sureties are not parties to the agreement subsequently made; and although large payments have been made the streets of many of the Wards have not been attempted to be cleansed—not a broom, hoe or shovel having been made use of since last Fall for that purpose; yet, in consequence of the non-confirmation and execution of the contracts, the Corporation has, in my judgment, no claim or redress against the proposed contractors; neither have I, for the reasons mentioned below, power to perform this very necessary service. On assuming the duties of the "Bureau of Street Cleaning," in accordance with the provisions of the amended charter, on the 1st instant, I found the condition of this matter to be as stated above; on the 9th day of May bills were presented to me for he two weeks prior, these were approved by Mr. EBLING to the 1st of May, who had also approved of the previous four weeks. It was urged that the weather had been such as to prevent the execution of the specification, and under the circumstance of the approval by Mr. EBLING, and feeling disposed to give these parties a fair opportunity to perform their agreement I consented to the payment of the work to the 9th inst., but caused a notice to be served on each and all of the contracting parties to the effect that, satisfied that such progress in the work agreed to be performed by them had not been made, as in my judgment could have been done, and that if greater exertion to fulfill the agreement was not made in the future, I should not feel justified in approving bills for the work. Such exertion has not evinced itself, if we view the present condition of the City; and I have refused to certify further drafts upon the treasury, satisfied that the parties agreeing to give our citizens clean streets can wait for the pay for a work which they have no right to expect or demand payment until the service shall have been rendered—a service which if neglected, at this advanced season, must jeopard the prosperity of the City and peril the health and lives of its citizens.

Some of the parties having entered into this agreement have doubtless entered into the same in good faith, and have performed some work, manifesting a desire on their part creditable to their undertaking, but none of them have complied with any part of their specification, and however indulgent it would be my wish to be to these parties, yet my regard for the public interests and my duty will not permit me to give sanction to a longer delay to ward against the consequences which must inevitably result from further neglect.

The subject is now submitted for your action. May I ask "What is to be done?"

Respectfully,

GEO. W. MORTON, City Inspector.

MURDER ON THE HIGH SEAS.

Trial of John Smith, John Brown, Jose Ned and John De Costa for the Murder of Captain Lawson.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—MAY 26.

Before Judge Ingersoll.

The United States vs. John Smith, John Brown, John Ned and John De Costa.—These four men, part of the crew of the brig General Pierce, were, this morning, put upon trial charged with the murder of the Captain of the brig on the high seas. Alanson Nash, Esq., appeared as counsel for the prisoners, and Mr. McKeon and Mr. Joachimssen for the prosecution. Mr. Nash moved the Court, that as the accused were Portuguese, the Jury by which they were to be tried should be composed of six Portuguese and six Americans. He also moved that the prisoners have separate trials, so that the prisoner on trial might have the benefit of the testimony of the other three.

Judge INGERSOLL said that the law was, that the selection of a Jury in criminal cases in the United States Courts was to be governed by the laws of the State at the time, not by the laws of the State at the time of the passage of the act regulating trials; that there was nothing in the laws of the State of New-York which warranted the formation of a jury in the manner moved for, and that the Court, therefore, had no power to grant the motion. That by the decisions of the Supreme Court it had been held that persons indicted for the same offence, but not jointly, could not be witnesses for each other, and that these men, therefore, could not testify in each others' behalf, even were the Court to order separate trials.

Both motions, therefore, were denied.

Mr. Nash then said that, for the sake of saving the point, he would also move to quash the indictment, on the ground that it did not state with sufficient definiteness that this District was the one into which the prisoners were first brought after the offence was committed.

Judge INGERSOLL said that that objection could be taken just as well after the trial if necessary, and it would be better not to consume the time of the Court with the matter at present.

Mr. Nash said he only made the motion for the purpose of saving the point.

Mr. McKeon then proposed to have Mr. Tinelli sworn as an interpreter.

Mr. Nash inquired if Mr. Tinelli was a native of Portugal, and being informed that he was not, said he should prefer some one who was a Portuguese by birth; that in a former case which he once tried, a person from the Portuguese Consulate was sent for to interpret.

Judge INGERSOLL said it would be well perhaps to have two interpreters.

Mr. McKeon said he had no objection, and requested Mr. Black, who was sitting by, and as he said was counsel for most of the Portuguese about here, to write to the Consul informing him that no interpreter was required. Mr. Black said he had no control whatever over the Consul's motions, but would write the note with pleasure if the Government desired it. Judge INGERSOLL said the Government did desire it, and the note was accordingly sent.

THE TRIAL.

The following Jurors were empaneled:

James Thomas,	William Campbell,
John Barronpole,	Sam'l C Waite,
William Sylam,	Joseph M. Dale,
Rufus T. Hibbert,	S Alair,
John F Craddock,	Cornelius Hartned,
Patrick Lynch,	Sam'l P. Sammis.

OPENING FOR THE PROSECUTION.

Mr. Smith, the Associate of the District Attorney, stated the case on behalf of the Government.

In this case the prisoners at the bar stand jointly indicted before you for the crime of murder. This indictment has been brought by the Grand Jury, and you have been empannelled, one of the most serious duties which can be imposed upon a Jury, because upon the rendition of your verdict in this case the life or liberty of these parties who now stand charged before you depend. Before stating the facts which the prosecution will lay before you by the testimony of witnesses, I think it right to impress upon you the necessity of divesting your minds from all prejudice, or any feeling of prejudice that may ignore either the prisoners or the administration of Justice. It becomes your duty as citizens to uphold the laws of the United States where they provide for the punishment of an offence, and it is your duty as Jurors to protect those laws. The prisoners formed a portion of the crew of the American brig General Pierce, which originally belonged to Baltimore, but finally became registered in this district as an American vessel, and was here in January of the present year. About the 21st of January she left New York, bound on a voyage to the Coast of Africa, having on board her as master, Capt. Lawson, two mates, a cook, and seven seamen,—eleven individuals in all, upon board of this vessel, and it is for the murder of Captain Lawson that these prisoners are charged, and brought here before you to-day. The vessel cleared from New York about the 21st January, and proceeded on her voyage until about the 10th February, when this murder was committed. Up to that time no difficulty of any importance had occurred on board this vessel. The Captain was a man, as I am instructed, of about 50 years of age, and a strict disciplinarian, a man who, when he gave his orders, expected them to be obeyed immediately, but further than using hard words, or rash expressions to his crew in giving his orders, there does not seem, up to the 10th of February, to have been any difficulty of any greater moment than that. However, on the 10th February, as this vessel was proceeding on its voyage, at about seven o'clock in the morning, while it was the first mate's watch upon deck, the Captain directed the mate, who will be placed upon the stand, to prepare the rigging to be set up upon the foremast of the vessel, and he directed the mate to take with him one of these prisoners, John Smith, and have that work prepared. The mate, in pursuance of these orders, took that man with him and went aloft. He remained aloft for some time,—I think till between ten and eleven o'clock. He came again upon deck, and the Captain directed him to send this man, Smith, to the wheel and to take with him a man named Morris, who will also be a witness before you, to carry on the work that he had directed to have done. The mate took Morris, and sent Smith to the wheel and Brown remained at the wheel until about twelve o'clock. At about half past eleven the mate came down from aloft again, for the purpose, as he states, of finding the latitude of the ship. It is part of the duty of the mate to do so, and about twelve o'clock every day they ascertained by observation the latitude of the ship, and the Captain and the mate then proceeded to take, as they called it, "the sun." As soon as they had finished that operation, eight bells, or 12 o'clock, was struck, and the watch upon deck was sent down below to dinner. All the four prisoners, with the exception of the man Smith, went to dinner, and the Captain, becoming dissatisfied with the manner in which Smith was steering the vessel, went up and struck him, either with his hand or some instrument in his hand, and the effect of the blow was such as to bruise the face of this man Smith, and blood caused to flow from his person. Smith was then relieved at the wheel, and a man of the name of Brown was sent to it, and Smith, De Costa and Ned, one of the three prisoners, went down to dinner with the rest of the crew. While they were at dinner, these three men sat together and conversed in some language which was not understood by the remainder of the crew, who were in the forecastle at the time. However, they conversed for some time, and after they had conversed those three men went and provided themselves with knives or dirks from their chests, and proceeded to the deck of the vessel. While this was going on, the mate was in the cabin making up his reckoning, and, of course, not anticipating that any difficulty or danger would occur. There three men left, as I have stated, the forecastle and one of them, John Ned, went directly to Captain Lawson, who was then standing upon the deck, and asked him why it was that he had struck Smith at the wheel. What reply the Captain made I cannot tell you, but De Costa, who also accompanied this man Ned, struck the Captain with a "heaver," as it is called, which is a piece of wood, about three or four feet in length, and about three or four inches in thickness, upon the head, which felled him, and while he lay upon the deck he struck him several blows again. The Captain arose and parleyed with them. An axe was lying on the deck, and he took it in his hands and tried then to get from forward to aft, for the purpose of getting into the cabin of his vessel. These men anticipated that movement, and got between him and the cabin door, and prevented him from going further. The Captain was then amidships, or about half way between the fore-cabin door and the bow of the ship. While they were there, the Captain stood with his back to the main-rigging, supporting himself, and very faint from the loss of blood. When the first mate came upon the deck, and the Captain made the remark, "Have I any officers upon board?" to which this one responded, "Yes, Sir, I am your first officer." He was proceeding towards the Captain to assist him when Brown presented a dirk knife at him, and made use of the expression, "If you come on we will kill you." Then Ned ordered Morris—not one of those implicated—to go and relieve Brown who was at the wheel. Morris did so, and Brown came forward to where the rest of the crew were, and while those four men were together, De Costa again struck the Captain, after having come parley with him, in which the Captain stated "that they had no mutiny might command the vessel, might navigate her where they pleased, and he said to the mate, that he might go into St. Thomas, and pay those men off. These four men again commenced together for some time, and De Costa again struck him a blow which felled him to the neck, and while he lay there, the prisoner Brown plunged his dag twice into his breast, killing him immediately. After that was done, they called for all hands to assist in throwing the Captain into the sea, they being then under he come out, I saw a man in the act of stabbing the cook; the captain was then apprehending with the men; I tried to supply them too. When they threw the captain overboard, then they cried out, "now for the cook," and they threw him overboard. Then they began to wash the deck, and John Ned and the others told me not to be afraid.—but, I was Captain, and I should take her to St. Thomas; the four prisoners then asked me to go into the cabin; all four of them came into the cabin; they demanded the log book, and I brought it forward; they all spoke jointly, and demanded the log-book; I mean Ned, Brown and Smith, but not De Costa, for he did not speak any English; they then ordered me to put down in the log-book that the cook and the Captain had died; to note a little further back that they were sick, so that it would appear they were first sick, and then died; they made me put the death of the Captain a few days before the cook's; I did this for the sake of my life; at this time we were in latitude 210 51', dead reckoning, and longitude 240; I then shaped our course to St. Thomas; we were seventeen days going to St. Thomas, making it the 27th of February when we arrived; when the Captain was thrown overboard I was midships; I never saw the body since; there was no vessel in sight; the vessel was navigated in English; we had no explain the orders to De Costa.

Cross examined—I did not see the Captain have anything in his hands; when I went down to work up the day's reckoning, the second mate or the Captain had charge on deck; when I came up from my state room, the Captain was standing on spars forward; I saw nothing in his hands; I was sworn in the United States Commissioner's office, in this case, when the men came in; I sent all the crew, except the man at the helm, to go forward and get their dinner, at 8 bells; it was Smith's turn to be relieved at the wheel then; when I came up, Smith, De Costa, Ned, the captain and second mate were forward; I saw a dirk in Brown's hand, and in Smith's; the captain was a Norwegian; I was a Dane; I saw the caotain strike Smith at the helm about 11 o'clock; I have never made a voyage to the coast of Africa before; the captain engaged me himself; we were going to six or seven places on the coast, to bring away palm oil; I believe the vessel was consigned to some one in Monrovia; the captain said he expected to be six months on the voyage; we had a general cargo; there were 13 or 15 water casks; could not say how many kettles or boilers were on board. That belonged to the cook; from the time I went forward until the captain was stabbed was, I think, about 20 minutes; he and I spoke to the men; he spoke to no one in particular; I could not say why the Captain went forward, but always considered the Captain had a right to go where he pleased on a ship; when the Captain struck Smith at the helm, Smith did nothing, but said "Don't strike me." There was a good deal of blood on deck before they threw the Captain overboard. The prisoners did not give any reason why they wanted to go to St. Thomas; there were ten men on board, all told, in the Captain, two mates, cook, and six men; here was no mutiny or trouble on the part of any of the men but the prisoners, that I saw.

Re-direct—The prisoners told me to keep dark about what happened, when we got to St. Thomas; that I should go to the Consul as mate, with the log-book, and show him that the Captain and cook had died, and no one would think anything was wrong. I said Yes. I did this to save my life.

The Court adjourned to 10 o'clock to-day.

Important Libel Suit—The Burdell Murder Again—A New Phase of the Affair.

SUPREME COURT—Special Term—May 25.

Before Hon. Justice Clerke.

Alexk Blaisdell vs. Hen y J. Raymond.—This action is brought to recover damages for the publica ion of an alleged libel in the New-York Daily Times, the 27th of last February, relative to the Burdell murder. The article in question, which was by a correspondent, was a somewhat elaborate review of the evidence before the Coroner, and particularly of Dr. Blaisdell's testimony. The complaint sets out the article at length, avers that the defendants, the proprietors of the Times, published it with intent to cause it to be believed that the plaintiff had been guilty of the crimes of perjury and murdar, and it contains innuendoes so interpreting the article. These inuendoes the defendants move to strike out as irrelevant and redundant. For example, the following extract from the article is interpreted by the plaintiff in his complaint as below:

"Dr. Blaisdell (meaning the plaintiff) had held business relations for a long time with Dr. Burdell. He had been his partner. He had had access to the rooms of deceased, and it is not unreasonable to suppose was necessarily familiar with the mode of ingress and egress, and might have the means by keye or otherwise of gaining admittance to them. There seems to have been important business, or other intimate relations, subsisting between Dr. Blaisdell and deceased, as the latter, he says, came quite frequently to see him. Dr. Blaisdell informs us he had not, for some time previous to the murder, been a frequent visitor to the house of Dr. Burdell. Yet, in the afternoon preceding the murdar, he is shown to have been there on two occasions. We have not referred to the evidence since its publication, but that he was there twice was disclosed by other witnesses, if we recollect correctly." (Meaning thereby that the said murder was committed by the plaintiff, and to create a public impression and belief that the plaintiff was the murderer of the said Dr. Harvey Burdell.)

These and a number of similar inuendoes the defendants moved to strike out. The motion was argued Tuesday by Lyman Abbott, Esq., for the defendants, and Charles F. Witmore, Esq., for the plaintiff.

Mr. Abbott said that the motion was one of great importance not only in relation to the particular case under consideration, but also because it would settle the practice on a point on which there had been no adjudications since the Code. The motion was founded upon two grounds: first, that the inuendoes were not properly framed, and secondly, because they were not supported by the article which they sought to interpret.

The Court—Have you not mistaken your remedy? Is not the meaning of the article one of the very questions to be submitted to the Jury?

Mr. Abbott—Upon that point there are two classes of authorities, apparently in direct conflict. On the one hand, it is well settled that in no case is the truth or falsehood of an inuendo a question for the Jury, and that an answer taking issue on the inuendoes is bad. This was so held in Fry vs. Bennett, 5 Sandford, 65; Van Vechten vs. Hopkins, 5 Johnson, 211; and Caldwell vs. Raymond, 2 Abbott, 193. And the same rule is laid down in 1 Starkie on Slander, 428, where the English authorities on the subject may be found. On the other hand, it seems to be equally well settled that when ever the article is ambiguous, its meaning is to be determined by the Jury. To this effect are Snyder vs. Andrews, 6 Barb., 43; Ex parte Bailey, 2 Cowen, 479; Goodrich vs. Woolcot, 3 Cowen, 290; Dex ar vs. Taber, 12 Johnson, 239; Dolloway vs. Turrill, 26 Wendell, 383—394. It is this problem of this motion to reconcile these authorities in so far as they are reconcileable.

If it is the object of the inuendo to explain the meaning of the words, these authorities are entirely irreconilable, but if its office is to connect the article with antecedent matter which affords the desired explanation, they are not inconsistent. I submit to your Honor the following propositions as upon the whole fairly deducible from the authorities, and as containing an explanation of the object of the inuendo, which renders both of the above apparently inconsistent propositions entirely consistent.

1. Where the article is not ambiguous, the question whether it constitutes a libel or not must be determined by the Court.

2. Where the article is ambiguous, but its meaning depends upon facts about which there is no dispute, the question whether it constitutes a libel or not must be determined by the Court. (Van Rensselaer vs. Dale, 1 Johnson's Cases, 279.)

3. When the article is ambiguous, and its meaning depends upon facts which are in controversy, the meaning of the article as explained by the facts must be determined by the Jury.

4. When the article is ambiguous, its meaning can only be ascertained by proof of extrinsic facts to which the article relates, and from which in connection with the article its true interpretation is to be deduced by the Court or Jury. The opinion of witnesses conversant with the facts as to the meaning and intent of the article are not admiseible, at least in this State. (Van Vechten vs Hopkins, 5 Johns., 211. Gibson vs. Williams, 4 Wendell, 320.)

5. The facts by means of which it is sought to prove the signification of the article must be distinctly averred in the complaint by way of inducement. (Caldwell vs. Raymond, 2 Abbott, 195. Pike vs. Van Wormer 5 How., 171; 6 ibid, 99. Fry vs. Bennett, 5 Sandf., 54.)

6. To this should be added a colloquium stating that the article was published of and concerning the facts set ont in the inducement, as well as of and concerning the plaintiff.

7. The object of the inuendo is then simply to connect such phrases of the article as are ambiguous with the facts stated in the inducement, concerning which the article was published and from which its meaning is to be deduced. It ought neither to contain an averment of facts, nor the legal inference to be drawn from the article. It is simply a link which connects the article with the facts explanatory of its meaning.

After citing authorities in support of these propositions, Mr. Abbott said that the question raised by this motion was one of the principal issues in the case, nor was he able to perceive how it could be raised except by motion. Under the old practice the proper course was to deny the publication, and the plaintiff was then bound to prove upon the trial the meaning which he had attributed to the article by his inuendoes. Under the Code, it was probably not possible for the defendants in this case to deny the publication in a verified answer. And to admit the publication was to admit it as interpreted in the complaint. This was so decided in Talcott vs. Cheetham, 5 Johns., 56, and in Fiedler vs. Delevan, 20 Wendell, 57. The defendants, however, he said do most emphatically deny that the article bears any such injurious construction as that which is put upon it in this complaint. The issue thus raised is a most important one. If this article is an unwarranted attack upon an innocent man—a charge of murder first, and of perjury to conceal the murder and throw the suspicion of it upon innocent parties—it is a most serious libel. On the contrary, if its object is what it is avowed to be—not to implicate the accused, but to relieve the innocent from suspicion—if libelous at all, it is not one for the publication of which the defendants would feel the least regret. Your Honor will recollect that when the murder was first discovered, and the Coroner had taken possession of the house, and placed Mrs. Cunningham and Eckel in custody, and had commenced—I will not say the investigation of the murder, but the trial of the accused—your Honor will recollect how public opinion, led by his Inquisitor, grew virulent against Mrs. Cunningham and Eckel; how not they only but the two Miss Cunninghams, Snodgrass the guest and even the little boys were not free from suspicion; how the City press, with one single exception, joined in the public hue and cry, and how the ancient maxim was reversed and Mrs. Cunningham and Eckel were presumed guilty until they were proved innocent. Your Honor may also recollect how the New York Daily Times alone of all the City press faced this public opinion, combated its unfair conclusions, threw a shield and a protection from unjust aspersions and unwarrantable intrusion around the unfortunate inmates of that house and, not so much defended Mrs. Cunningham and Eckel as sustained law and justice against an excited public opinion and insisted that they should be tried, even when public opinion was the jury, according to principles of common sense and common justice and with a decent regard to rules of evidence. If, as we contend, this article is but part and parcel of the course of the Times in this regard, then, now that Mrs. Cunningham has been tried and acquitted, not only by a jury, but I venture to say also, by the opinion of most thinking men, it is to be regarded not as a libel to be condemned by all good men and true, and punished by the law, but as a disinterested defence worthy of commendation.

All that the defendants desire is to have the complaint so drawn that this question—the object and meaning of the article—may be submitted to, and passed upon by, a jury. The decision of that jury they will accept, and any determination of this motion which leaves the way open for the defendants to raise this issue and obtain such a decision will be satisfactory to them.

Charles F. Wetmore, Esq., for the plaintiff, made and argued the following points:

Sec. 160 of the Code, p. 229, authorizes pleadings to be amended on the application of opposite counsel, when the allegations are indefinite and uncertain, and to strike out what is irrelevant or redundant by the party aggrieved. (2 Sandford S. C. R., p. 702, Smith vs Greening.)

No pretenses is made by the defendants of either.

The only way that the defendant could take advantage of the portions moved to be stricken out is by demurrer.

If an inuendo enlarge the sense materially, the proper course for the defendant is to demur. (Fry vs. Bennett, 5 Sandford, p 65.)

It is not a matter for a motion to strike out. It is only proper for a demurrer.

But in this case the motion is improper, and a demurrer could not be sustained.

As to the merits of the motion, all the authorities refer to 5 Johns, R. 211 Vanvechten vs. Hopkins, for a true definition of an inuendo &c.

An inuendo is explanatory of the subject matter expressed before. It cannot extend the sense of the words beyond their own meaning, unless to explain them by reference to some preceding averment or colloquium. (5 Johns, R. p. 211, Vanvechten vs. Hopkins.)

An inuendo may apply what is already expressed, but cannot add to or enlarge, or change the sense of the previous words. (Miller vs. Maxwell, 16 Wend., p. 9; Goodrich vs. Woolcott, 3 Cowen, 231.)

The meaning of the defendant as averred by an inuendo, is a question of fact to be decided by the Jury. (9 East., 96, Roberts vs. Cambden; 5 East., 463, Woodworth vs. Meadows.

In slander, where the plaintiff in his declaration, after setting forth the words spoken, avers that the defendant, by means of the words, insinuated and meant to be understood as charging the plaintiff with the crime of murder. Whether or not such was the intention of the defendant, is a question of fact, to be determined by the Jury upon the evidence in support of the averment. (4 Wendell, 320. Gibson vs. Williams.)

Where there is any ambiguity of the terms used in reference to the offence charged, to render the complaint good, it must be averred that they were spoken with the intent to charge a particular crime. (Andrews vs. Woodmaine, 15, Hend., 232. Pike vs. Van Wormer, 5, Pr. R. 176. Caldwell vs. Raymond 2 Abbotts P. R. 193.)

The defendants deny that the words published charge murder and perjury upon the plaintiff. The plaintiff insists they do, and this is sufficient to refer the meaning to the Jury under the inuando.

Sec. 164 of the Code does not dispense with the necessity of an averment or inuendo, when it is essential to show the meaning of the words.

It is only as to the application of the words to the plaintiff. (Fry vs Bennett, 5 Sandf. R. 65. Pike vs. Van Wormer, 5 Pr. R. 176.)

The defendants move to strike out some of the inuendoes, especially those that insist that the words published mean to charge the plaintiff with murder—and yet they leave in those regarding perjury.

If one is proper to be given to the Jury certainly the other should be submitted also to the Jury.

The Judge took the papers and reserved his decision.

Charles F. Watmore, for plaintiff; Abbott Brothers, for defendants.

SPICES—Are rather quiet, yet held with much confidence.

SUGARS—Appear inactive, the large receipts and high claims of experts inducing great reserve among buyers. Many in the trade think that the present heavy arrivals are in anticipation of the demand during the Mid-Summer months, for which importers desire to be prepared, so that the possible rigid enforcement of our Quarantine laws may not delay importations. This course, it is said, has been adopted in order to avoid the serious obstacles encountered last year. Hence the leading factors are not alarmed by the current large receipts, and they do not manifest any unusual eagerness to sell. From other Ports, to latest dates, 206,191 bbls. Flour; 220,6[illegible] bushels Wheat; 138,147 bushels Corn; 17,980 bushels Rye.

Per Asia.] [NEW-YORK, Tuesday, May 26, 1857—A. M.

As yet there has been no considerable amount of Produce received by the Erie Canal this season—the supplies from Buffalo and the West not having been able to get through,—and with moderate stocks here and in prospect for some short time ahead, there is much firmness on the part of receivers although there is a desire to realize, and prices in consequence fluctuate daily and are quite unsettled. At most of the large receiving towns of the West there has lately been shown a strong speculative feeling, based on the backward Spring and the wants of the country, which has a tendency to sustain present high rates. In this market the trade in Flour is confined almost entirely to the City and Eastern demand, which is to a fair extent. The export inquiry is quite suspended, only 3,383 bbls. Flour, 50 bbls. Corn Meal, and 32,[illegible]8 bushels Indian Corn, have been shipped from this port in the fortnight to Liverpool, London and Glasgow. There is rather more Wheat offering, (here and to arrive shortly,) but the absence of a foreign demand is seriously felt, and the City and local millers operate cautiously at present rates; consequently sales are effected with difficulty and at irregular prices. Rye remains scarce and tends upward in value. Oats, and all descriptions of coarse feed, are uncommonly high. Indian Corn has again advanced, and closes firmly.

FREIGHTS.—In the absence of an export trade the rates continue extremely low, but have slightly improved in the fortnight. To Liverpool, 7d.@9d. ₱ bbl. on Flour, and 3d @4d. ₱ bushel on Grain, would be taken. To London the asking rates are 4s. 6d @5s. 6d. on Flour, and 5d. @6d. on Grain. To Glasgow, is. 6d.@2s. on Flour, and 5d. @6d on Grain.

PERSONAL.

TO MISS M——A F——T. BY E. D. M.

There's a fond, loving heart, that's throbbing for thee,
Thou beloved, adored of my soul;
Oh! prithee, dear girl, will thou listen to me;
Of my happiness, thou art the goal.

Oh! my love, it is like the bright angel's dream,
(Who dwells in the realms above,)
As pure as the whispering angels that seem Surrounding, and hallowed by love.

If during the voyage with the battle of life,
The horizon is darkened to me,
It pleases kind Heaven to call thee my wife,
With a smile will I always greet thee.

I have told thee, dear girl, the tale of my love,
I swear it is holy and true;
'Tis true, I declare, by the heavens above,
It is true, and only for you.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Nineteen out of the twenty-six Counties of Kansas have sent in their returns of the census, showing an aggregate, so far, of 9,250 registered voters. Acting-Governor Stanton has issued a proclamation for an election of Delegates to the Constitutional Convention, to assemble on the third Monday in June. The character of the emigration to the Territory this Spring is greatly better than it has yet been. Improvements are going on rapidly, and capital is readily invested. We receive detailed accounts of the recent difficulty between Geo. W. Brown, editor of the Herald of Freedom, and Gov. Robinson. The quarrel is purely personal, and on Brown's part somewhat spiteful.

The annual meeting of the New-England Emigrant Aid Company was held in Boston yesterday afternoon. In consequence of the great rise in the price of land in Kansas, the affairs of the Company are represented to be in a very favorable condition. The receipts of the Society last year were $42,000—$37,000 by subscription and $5,000 by donation. The old Board of officers were generally reelected.

Colonel Benton was yesterday somewhat injured by an accident on the Pennsylvania Railroad. By the breaking of an axle one of the cars was upset and dragged a short distance. Several other persons were more or less injured.

Senator Butler, of South Carolina, died on Monday evening, of dropsy. The event had been anticipated for some time.

Dred Scott and his family have been emancipated by Taylor Bloom, Esq., for which purpose they had all been conveyed to him by Mr. Chaffee. The family consists of a wife and two daughters.

Gov. Gardner, of Massachusetts, yesterday vetoed the Hoosic Tunnel bill, passed by the Legislature, and the House immediately passed the bill over the veto. It is thought the Senate will do the same.

Another General Order was issued yesterday by Superintendent Tallmadge to each of the police captains as continue to recognize the authority of Mayor Wood, charging them that they send in future all their returns and reports to Deputy Carpenter, at his office, No. 88 White-street, on pain of dismissal. Mayor Wood has expressed himself determined to continue his opposition to the new Commissioners, until the final action of the Court of last resort. He declares that he is pleased at the decision of the Supreme Court, because he can now press the matter before the Court of Appeals.

The Old Line Whig General Committee held a special meeting last evening. A letter was read from Hon. Superintendent Tallmadge, resigning the Presidency of the Committee. Resolutions were passed denouncing the action of the City Government in endeavoring to prevent the execution of the laws of the last Legislature, and declaring undying devotion still to Whig principles.

There was more than usual excitement at the meeting of the Board of Governors yesterday, arising out of the unsettled state of our police and municipal relations. A threatening letter has been sent to the warden of the City Prison by some one evidently familiar with the place. The warden asked advice of Gov. Anderson, who went with him to speak to Mr. Draper, "as an old and tried friend, and late President of the Board," who forwarded two policemen, who were subsequently withdrawn. Gov. Townsend complained that the proceeding was irregular: that the warden had no business to counsel with Mr. Draper, and that the action of the parties advising him was blameable. He introduced a resolution and preamble, which, in the opinion of other members, indorsed the opposition to the State enactment. After every member had spoken, the preamble was laid on the table, and the resolution referred to a Committee.

The difficulties in the way of the Quarantine Commissioners are on the increase. The opposition continues as strong as ever, and now the Commissioners of Emigration are about to decline having anything whatever to do with furnishing the new hospitals. They claim that under the new act they have nothing whatever to do with any "temporary accommodation."

The General Synod of the Associated Reformed Presbyterian Church, after spending nearly all yesterday in debate on the resolutions, to accept the basis of union, finally adopted them by a vote of 64 to 38. A delegation arrived from the Associate Synod, now sitting at Philadelphia, and presented a report of the action of that body on the proposed basis of union, showing that the Synod had accepted it after some slight amendments.

The Sixty-first Anniversary of the Orphan Asylum Society was celebrated, yesterday, at the Asylum, corner of Seventy-fourth-street and Broadway, by addresses, songs, dialogues, &c., and a dinner. There are 165 children in the Institution. The Society owns nine acres, extending from Broadway along the line of Seventy-fourth street to the North River.

The Hicksite Quakers are in session, and have been so every day since Saturday, in their new house in Twenty-third-street. Not a shower has visited the City, notwithstanding this, since Saturday night!

August Parot, Edward David and Louis Gerlet, the prisoners in the French Railway case, were yesterday removed from Eldridge street Jail. They are at present confined in the United States Marshal's Office, in charge of three Deputy Marshals.

The Young Men's Christian Union (mem., not the Christian Association) met last evening and discussed the theatre question. The majority of the speakers leaned hard toward the theatre.

James Quinn, the Hackman who was stabbed last Sunday evening, during a fight on one of the Staten Island Ferry boats, died at 10 o'clock yesterday P. M. A young man named "Mosey," or Mosely, is in custody, charged with inflicting the fatal wound upon Quinn. Coroner Perry will hold an inquest upon the body to-day.

The trial of the four sailors jointly indicted for the murder of the captain and cook of the Franklin Peirce, came up yesterday in the U. S. Circuit Court. Their counsel moved that, being foreigners, half of the jurors should be foreigners, but it was denied.

The brig Bloomer was libelled for refusal to pay pilotage on Monday, under the new pilot law. It is the first case of legal proceedings under the act which provides that a pilot who speaks a vessel shall be paid equally if he is rejected, as if his services are employed. The demand and costs being paid, the Bloomer went to sea yesterday.

The steamer Northern Light, which was accidentally sunk at her dock on Saturday while repairing, has been nearly freed of water by the aid of steam pumps, and the repairs upon her will soon be resumed. None of her cabin furniture was materially damaged.

The Twenty-Seventh Anniversary of the Brooklyn Sabbath School Union was celebrated yesterday. Some twenty thousand teachers and children appeared in procession, bearing banners and headed by a band of music. It was a great day for the children—and the old folks.

The New Police Law—Judge Roosevelt's Opinion.

We do not intend to discuss the Constitutionality of the New Police Law. We are content, as is the public at large, to leave that point to the decision of the judicial tribunals. Thus far its validity has been sustained by the Courts:—whether this decision, given by the Supreme Court first at Special and now at General Term, will, or will not, be reversed, must be for some weeks to come matter of conjecture; and we prefer to rest our decided belief that Mayor Wood, in offering continued resistance to the law, is acting in violation of his duty, upon the clear and admitted principle that the decision of one Court is valid and binding until reversed, rather than upon any opinions we might have of the Constitutionality of the law itself.

But Judge Roosevelt's opinion, dissenting from the decision of the Court, and maintaining the unconstitutionality of the law, contains two or three very striking mistakes upon points of vital importance to the argument which it embodies.

1. The Judge refers to the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution and thus sums up its provisions:

"It makes all the enumerated county officers elective; and all county and town officers not enumerated elective, except as the Legislature may direct them to be appointed by the local authorities. It leaves all village and City officers to be elected at large or by divisions, or to be appointed by local authorities as the Legislature may direct.

"The Constitution does not say or intend that all officers whose offices may thereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people or appointed as the Legislature may direct—but all officers 'other' than county, City, town and village officers, and 'other' than the specially enumerated State officers."

Now, here we believe is a mistake of fact. The Constitution does say precisely what Judge Roosevelt says it does not say, though the manner in which he fell into the error is easily explained. The section to which he refers, as given in the Legislative Manual and the other ordinary editions of the Constitution, after providing for the election of county, City, town and village officers in the manner stated by the Judge, proceeds thus:

"All other officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, and all officers whose offices may hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people, or appointed, as the Legislature may direct."

This version sustains the Judge's quotation. But it was stated upon the argument of Mr. Field, and we believe is well established as a matter of fact, that in the original, official draft of the Constitution on file in the office of the Secretary of State, the word "other" does not occur. In the official report of the debates of the Constitution published at the office of the Albany Atlas, it is not found—and we believe the clause actually reads as follows:

"All officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, and ALL officers, whose offices may hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people, OR APPOINTED, AS THE LEGISLATURE MAY DIRECT."

This certainly puts a very different face on the matter, and entirely vitiates the Judge's argument; for it shows that the Constitution does say and intend precisely the opposite of what the Judge supposes.

2. The Judge makes another very strong point upon what we conceive to be the erroneous assumption that the new Police Commission supersedes certain City officers. He says:

"The objection stated will equally apply to the case of City officers as such—the Mayor, Recorder, City Judge and Chief of Police, and their subordinates. The act in question, so far as relates to police administration, substantially nullifies them all. It ignores the Recorder and City Judge, places five Commissioners, appointed by the Governor, over the Mayor to outvote him, and supersedes the Chief formerly appointed by the City authorities by another Chief called a "General Superintendent," to be appointed by the Governor's Commissioners. This is something more than simple evasion—it is absolute nullification of the "electors of the City" and of the "authorities thereof." It is a sort of political decapitation of both the people and the people's functionaries."

The Judge assumes that the People of the City have elected certain Police Commissioners, and that by the new law they are ignored, superseded and "decapitated" by State authority. This is not the case. The People of this City do not elect Police Commissioners; they never have done so. There is no such office voted for, or heard of, at the polls. No ticket "for Police Commissioner," is ever seen or provided for by law. The People elect a Mayor, a Recorder and a City Judge;—and each one of these officers enjoys all the rights, powers, privileges and emoluments of the office to which he is thus elected, under the new law, precisely as he did before its enactment. Those men are made Police Commissioners by a State law,—precisely as the new men are under the new law. There is not a shadow of difference in the principle, or in the source of the authority, by which the two Commissions exist. Both are equally, and in precisely the same way, the creation of State legislation. Here are the two laws side by side:

THE OLD LAW.	THE NEW LAW.
The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:	The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:
ART. III. § 1. The Mayor, Recorder and City Judge shall constitute a Board of Commissioners for the trial of officers, policemen and doormen of the Police Department; and all officers, policemen and doormen shall be appointed by the same Board, in the manner herein provided.	§ 1. The counties of New-York, Kings, Westchester and Richmond are hereby constituted for the purposes of this act, into one district. There shall be appointed by the Governor, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, five Commissioners of Police, &c.
§ 3. The Mayor, Recorder and Chief of Police of the City and County of New York, shall constitute a Board of Commissioners to prescribe rules for the discipline, conduct and government of policemen, which shall be binding, under penalty of removal or suspension.	§ 2. Three of said Commissioners shall be appointed from the City of New-York, one from Kings County, one from the County of Richmond or Westchester.
§ 7. All ordinances, parts of ordinances, resolutions and acts now in force, and inconsistent with this act, shall be, and the same are hereby repealed.	§ 35. All statutes, parts of statutes and provisions of law, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.
§ 8. This act shall take effect immediately.	§ 37. This act shall take effect immediately.
Passed April 11, 1849.	Passed April 15, 1857.

Here it will be seen that the law of 1849 appointed a Police Commission, just as truly and directly as the law of 1857. Yet Judge Roosevelt speaks of the former as a "Constitutional statute," and of the latter as unconstitutional, because it repealed the other and "thrust it aside!" If the State had a right to pass the law of '49, had it not a right also to repeal it? The Judge is either misled by sophistry, or he has unthinkingly adopted the cant by which Mayor Wood and his partisans seek to mislead the public.

These are the two main points of Judge Roosevelt's dissenting opinion. If they fail, the whole argument fails with them. The Judge also charges the Legislature with having attempted in this law to "avoid Constitutional difficulties,"—and he doubts whether a law framed with such an intent can be "sustained by the Courts." This is a very curious doctrine indeed. It can hardly be deemed criminal or wrong in the Legislature to do everything in their power to avoid violating the Constitution. The only question that can be raised is,—have they succeeded in their attempt? The Judge intimates that if they have, the bill must be unconstitutional. We should say exactly the reverse.

The Reeside Claim—Enormous Expenses for Lobby Services.

This claim was interesting in itself, and has been for a long time before the public. Its prosecution, probably, never would have resulted in success had it not been for the interposition of the Court of Claims.

That Court, after an elaborate and full consideration of the subject, in every aspect, rendered judgment in favor of the claim. We gave, in our columns, quite a full abstract of the grounds of that decision, and at about the time it was rendered. The bill reported, with their opinion, to Congress by the Court of Claims, provided for the payment to Mary Reeside, executrix of James Reside, deceased, as a debt due from the United States, of the very considerable sum of $188,496 06, with interest thereon at 6 per cent. from December 6, 1841.

This Bill, as so reported, passed the House of Representatives during the session before last. Early in the short session, it was taken up in the Senate, out of its order, and passed there also, but with amendments, one of them striking out the important item of interest. This would have sent the bill back to the House, but somewhat later in the session, the friends of the claim mustered in full force, reconsidered the previous vote, caused the amendments to be rescinded, and the bill passed the Senate in the form as it came from the House. President Pierce promptly approved it, and thus the Act became a law of the land.

Mrs. Reeside, in March last, at the citation of a creditor, filed her account as executrix. That sworn statement suggests some rather curious revelations. By it Mrs. R. charges herself with the sum of $326,501 70, received by her from the Treasury under the said act in her favor, the Department "having refused to pay and retained the sum of $34,149 56 under alleged claims against decedent," James Reeside, "arising since the rendition of said verdict and judgment," viz: the verdict in his favor rendered Dec. 6, 1841, in the United States Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

Among the credits claimed in the account by Mrs. Reeside, for "disbursements and payments made on account of said estate," are these two:

"By cash paid Joseph B. Stewart, Esq., on account of his fee for professional services in prosecuting the claim of said estate against the United States before the Court of Claims and Congress, for more than three years, and including the expenses of prosecuting said claim, as per agreement, $83,044 99."

"By cash paid John E. Reeside for his services and traveling expenses and expenses at Washington, as Agent of the estate, during a period of over fifteen years, as per agreement, $18,849 60."

Thus, according to the sworn account of Mrs. Reeside, the sum of $106,894 59, about one-third of the amount received by her, went to agents and for—expenses. As yet it does not appear what these expenses were, or for what purposes precisely, or into whose pockets this $106,894 59 went; but, in vouching the account, which is before a tribunal where settlements of the kind, involving high trust and confidence, are conducted, thoroughly, with method and without any humbug, some light may escape to enlighten our readers.

The final success, however, of this Reeside Claim, so eminently just in itself, furnishes a striking argument for the great utility of the Court of Claims, and is an indication of the confidence its decisions already command from Congress and the country. This claim was, year after year, since 1841, before both houses of Congress, upon petition or memorial, and in almost every variety of shape, but without any results. Soon after the Court of Claims entered upon its labors, that claim was presented to them for examination. The proofs there were short, and comparatively inexpensive, although involving a large amount of money.

The subsequent almost incredible outlay actually incurred, if the account is to be relied on, is another proof of the evils of the former system of direct congressional action on private claims, and at the same time is a conclusive fact to demonstrate the necessity of another step in advance. The Court of Claims, under proper restrictions, or safeguards to prevent possible abuses, should be freed from the ordeal of congressional action upon its judgments. A court of justice, high, not only in grade but for the standing of its bench, makes a deliberation with almost painful care, and renders a decision upon the law and facts, which it reports as its adjudication. Yet this solemn judgment is submitted to lay committees, and from their unskilled hands, in fact, passes for review before a body that is not a Court: which is, indeed, excluded from the exercise of every judicial function. This is simply absurd.

But the remedy is quite apparent. Make judgments of the Court of Claims, subject first, if you please, to review and correction, at the instance of claimants or of the Government, by the Supreme Court, payable, as of course, at the Treasury. Final decisions of Departments, specially or generally authorized, are so responded to daily without direct interposition by Congress. The national Legislature has, time and again, instituted by law Commissions, or Boards of Claims, whose decisions were final and paid as of course.

There is a vague idea afloat, which has done much harm, to the effect that the State or Government cannot be sued without, ipso facto, an abdication so far of its sovereign power. No idea is more fallacious. Subjection involuntarily to compulsory process or action may be deemed, and not without truth, inconsistent with the attribute of sovereignty; but there is no likeness between such a subjection and voluntary submission, as by the United States, to a peaceable course of law upon its contracts before a competent and an impartial judicial tribunal. A general act, directing the Treasury to pay, as, of course, judgments of such a Court against the Government, would be equally unobjectionable with the laws, scattered through every volume of our ponderous statutes at large, directing the Treasury to honor the decisions, as veritable drafts upon its coffers, of this or that accounting officer, or this or that Board of Commissioners, and what a vast saving it would be not only to the public creditor, but to the Government itself!

Policemen and their Pay.

The position of the subordinate members of the Police Department is becoming one of great hardship. They are nearly all men of families, with their wives and children dependent upon their salaries for their support;—and it is now over a month since they have received a dollar from the City authorities. The Comptroller, we understand, regards it as his duty to recognize and abide by the State law until it is reversed by some competent Court,—and he refuses to pay any of the men claiming to hold office and to render service under the nullifying and illegal régime of Mayor Wood. The Mayor has given them to understand that if they recognize the new law they shall be instantly dismissed, and he will use all his power to prevent their being paid. He insists that they shall stay and starve,—or else go and starve;—and in this dilemma the only thing they can feel reasonably certain of is, starvation.

The decision of the Supreme Court, however, has cleared up some points in the case, of which, if possible, the members of the Department should have the benefit. It is certain that whatever just and proper action may be taken by the new Commission, acting under the law which has been affirmed by the Court, is legal and must be sustained by the Courts. If they employ men under that law, they can pay them. The Courts of law will not only sustain but will compel, payment; and that, too, even if the Court of Appeals should reverse the decision of the Supreme Court, for until reversed, that decision is valid and binding. On the other hand Mayor Wood has now no warrant of law for any action he may take. He cannot bind the City to the payment of a single dollar for services under the old law; and if the Comptroller should refuse payment, it could not possibly be enforced. The only way in which Police officers and men can establish any legal claim upon the City for payment for their services, is by accepting the decision of the Supreme Court as valid and binding until reversed.

Now, Mayor Wood owes it to the twelve hundred men whom he keeps in his Police, to assent to some arrangement by which their services can be legally recognized and legally paid. His legal advisers will undoubtedly tell him that he is now compelling these men to sustain him gratuitously,—that he is sacrificing them and their families to his own personal and political purposes, and that as things now stand they can have no legal claim whatever upon the City. He should permit them to recognize the legal authorities so far at least as may be necessary to establish a claim to payment for their services. And the men themselves have a right to insist upon this small measure of justice at his hands.

High-priced Negroes.—We saw recently, in an Alabama paper, an account of a sale in Perry County, of two negroes who were "sold on the block" for four thousand and seventy-five dollars. It was stated that they were "well-borers," and must, of course, have been skillful and reliable laborers to bring so large a price. As negro slaves of good character who have been trained to any mechanical business bring such high prices, it is a matter of surprise that slave owners do not take more pains in educating and improving their human stock. A common field hand in Alabama is not worth more than a thousand or twelve hundred dollars, but a well-borer, it appears, is worth nearly double the price of a common negro. But well-boring is not a difficult art to learn, and, if a slave who is an adept in such a business is worth twice as much as a common laborer, what must a good blacksmith, carpenter, shoemaker, engineer, or mason be worth? And if, in addition to knowing some mechanical business, a slave is possessed of good moral sentiments, and has a conscientious sense of his obligations to his master, his value must be increased four-fold. The negro has a natural tendency to religion, and the more his moral nature is elevated the less likely he becomes to be afflicted with a desire to run away. The Toussaints and Uncle Toms are not the kind of negroes who create revolts and become fugitives, excepting when they are driven to it by the cruelty of their masters. It is surprising, therefore, that the negro breeders of Virginia do not take, at least, as much pains in improving their slaves as they do in improving their horses and other cattle. Yet we hear of no efforts ever being made to improve the African stock which has now become so important a branch of the export trade of the Old Dominion. But, on the contrary, the Law rigidly forbids the cultivation of the intellectual qualities of the negro, by making it a crime to teach him the art of reading and writing, without which his moral elevation and his usefulness must always be confined to a very low standard. While in the free States every inducement is offered to the laboring population to aid them in acquiring a scientific education, that their usefulness may be increased, and their tendency to vicious habits be lessened, the South endeavors to keep its laborers in the most degraded and useless condition possible.

Slave owners have a most absurd fear of an educated and intelligent negro; they naturally imagine that the more knowledge a negro has the more likely he will be to feel his wrongs, and endeavor to escape from his owner. But we believe that history does not sanction any such conclusions, and the fact that the more skillful and intelligent a slave is the higher price he brings, shows that the experience of the slave owners is altogether against their own theory.

Western Hospitality.—The Cities of Cincinnati and St. Louis are making very extensive arrangements for the reception and entertainment of the immense number of invited guests who are expected there next week, on the occasion of the great Railroad Celebration on the completion of the Ohio and Mississippi and the Marietta and Cincinnati roads, which, with the Baltimore and Ohio, of which the other two are continuations, form a line of nearly a thousand miles in extent. Every road and line of steamers west of Boston have furnished free passes to the guests who have been bidden to the festival, or, rather, the celebration, for there is not to be any special feast. It was found that the guests would be so numerous that anything in the shape of a dinner to accommodate them all would be an impossibility; therefore the authorities of the two cities have recommended the citizens generally to open their doors and give a hearty welcome to all their visitors. This was a most sensible recommendation, and it will add greatly to the general comfort and good feeling of all who participate in the celebration. The citizens are also recommended to abstain from their ordinary business, and make a day of festivity of it generally. After all the guests have assembled at Cincinnati they then proceed to St. Louis to continue the festivities, and then disperse to their homes. It will prove one of the most imposing celebrations of the kind that has ever been witnessed in this country, and will not be equaled again, probably, until the completion of the Pacific Road, when a festival may be anticipated on a scale of grandeur worthy of the occasion. But when that festive event will take place we will not venture to predict just now.

The Fashionable Season.

Whatever unfashionable people may think, or say, to the contrary, it is unquestionably true that Fashion and Comfort are very nearly allied; and it is for this reason that the majority of people have an instinctive desire to belong to the fashionable world. As soon as hot weather sets in, and the streets begin to be uncomfortably dusty and otherwise disagreeable, then the fashionable season commences for running into the country, and it becomes unfashionable to be seen in town. Many people who cannot get away shut up their front blinds, and actually render themselves uncomfortable, for the sake of making others believe that they are fashionably spending their time in the country. But, it should always be fashionable for any family to remain at home, as it is in Paris, where the city is as comfortable at one season as another; and it would be, too, if the streets were properly drained and swept, so that they would always be comfortable and healthy.

Yesterday the thermometer suddenly rose to 84, in the shade, and the Fashionable Season commenced. The scramble for the sea-side, the mountains, the Lakes, the Springs, and all those hot-weather resorts called "watering-places," will commence at once. It does not become absolutely disgraceful to be seen in the City until the 4th of July; but, after that period, no person with the slightest pretensions to a fashionable position would dare to be seen within the lamp and gas district.

The fashionable season is profitable to Railroads and Steamboats; to hotel keepers at Newport, Saratoga, Long Branch, and many similar places; but it deprives the City of an immense local trade, and the loss to our merchants caused by so great a number of our inhabitants deserting their homes for nearly a quarter of the year must be very great. As a mere pecuniary consideration, therefore, it is of the greatest importance that the City should be always kept in so sweet and healthy a condition that the inhabitants shall never be compelled to leave their own homes to preserve their health and maintain their position in fashionable society.

Those who can afford to keep a country house as well as a house in the City will, of course, always flee to their rural retreats when the hot weather sets in and business is slack. But, to the great majority of our citizens, the necessity of fleeing from their City homes during the hot months, to escape the pestilential vapors of the streets and preserve the lives of their children, is a costly inconvenience which the Government of the City should save them from. Then there are thousands of poor families who cannot leave, and the weekly hills of mortality reveal the fatal consequences to the wretched victims of our ill-governed Metropolis. But, though there are parts of the City which are so unhealthy and uncomfortable during the hot months, there are other parts which are as cool and comfortable, and quite as healthy as Newport, or Long Branch, or Saratoga. Our great hotels are all well situated and there is no danger, or discomfort either, to the traveler who seeks a temporary home in them in mid-Summer. It is the permanent population of our filthy and over-crowded back streets who suffer in hot weather, and perhaps they will make the discovery one of these days that is of the first importance to their welfare that they choose proper men to take charge of the City's affairs.

A Breeze from the Interior.—We have evidently offended the Syracuse Journal—perhaps, also, we have done it injustice. We didn't intend to do either—and if the Journal were not needlessly and somewhat suspiciously sensitive and peppery, we are confident neither result would have followed.

When we stated, in the course of a business announcement some days since, that in its discussion of political topics, the Times would hereafter be wholly independent of political parties—expressing its own opinions of public men and measures instead of simply echoing partisan decrees and pandering to partisan interests—the Journal very coarsely stigmatized such a proceeding as involving treachery to the Republican Party, and spoke of the Times as a "discontented servant" of that political organization. We inferred from the bitterness and severity of its comments upon this matter, that the Journal was not likely to commit the sin for which it so roundly denounced the Times, and spoke of its position as a contented party "servant" accordingly. But it seems we were mistaken. The Journal resents our intimation, and asserts its own complete independence of party control. It says:

"It was expressly stipulated, on the part of the present editor, before entering upon his duties, and readily concurred in by the proprietor, that the Journal, while it should advocate the principles of the Republican Party, should yet be an out-spoken, independent paper—because both proprietor and editor were aware that in Syracuse, of all places in the State, such a paper was imperatively demanded. We can point the 'metropolitan' editor of the Times to various articles in the columns of the Journal, in which the course of various Republicans is commented upon and reprehended in the plainest terms; and can furnish additional evidence of the independence of the Journal in the fact that certain individuals, who have personal ends to serve, have taken umbrage at its honest course, and spend more time than they can afford to spend, in abusing its editor. * * We do not take any credit to ourselves for pursuing an independent course, for in so doing we perform what we conceive to be our duty. But that the Journal has been and will be an independent paper, none will deny or doubt who are familiar with its columns."

The Journal then stands upon precisely the same platform as the Times. The language it uses in stating its position is quite as strong as ours. Here is what the Times said, as copied for condemnation by the Journal itself:

"The Times will be hereafter, in its political conduct, entirely independent of all Political Parties—judging all events and all men upon their merits, and giving praise and censure, support and opposition, where either may be deserved, by a strict and impartial regard to the public welfare. It will not be reckless or independent of principle in its political discussions,—but will aim to conduct them always with dignity, discretion, and a due sense of responsibility. But it will not receive its guidance or inspiration from the dictates of any political party, nor consult the fortunes of any political aspirants in preference to the requirements of the public good. It will appeal always to the great body of the people against mere party projects and factious schemes, and will seek constantly to represent and to advocate the welfare of the masses rather than promote the designs of those who seek to use them for their own aggrandizement."

Now we submit to the Journal that it had no right to condemn in us precisely the course of action which it professes to pursue itself, and for which it "takes no credit, because it is doing only what it conceives to be a duty."

The Journal loses its temper in replying to our comments upon its censure, and like all people when in a passion, it vents a great deal of very gross personal abuse. We pass all this by as very harmless and as quite likely to occasion the utterer of it a good deal more uneasiness than the one whom it is expected to render unhappy. The Editor of the Journal will permit us to say that independence of the ordinary courtesies and decencies of life is not the kind of independence in which we shall attempt any sort of competition or rivalry with any of our cotemporaries. But although we have no taste for it ourselves, we have still less disposition to interfere with the tastes of others. If the Journal, however, is really so independent and high-toned as it claims to be, it will soon find out that epithets and personal vilification injure only those who use them.

Neighborly Intentions.—We are delighted with the assurances of the Tribune that "the Times is a journal with which it is determined to agree where it can and differ kindly where it must differ." But, if our neighbor will excuse us, we will venture the suggestion that the best way of fulfilling these fraternal intentions is not by talking about the "inveterate blockheads" who write in our columns. That is not a proper mode either of expressing agreement or kindly difference. The best way is to take whatever may be in the Times as you find it,—and either reply to it by logic, rhetoric, sarcasm, or any other of the recognized weapons of such warfare, or let it alone. It is not becoming or needful to make personal allusions of any kind to either the Editor of the Times, or to those who write for its columns. If our neighbor will place its journalistic intercourse with us upon this basis, we shall be most happy to reciprocate its charitable and decorous purposes.

We are sorry to see that we are understood by the Tribune to have accused it of wishing to exterminate by a wholesale butchery the twenty thousand rascals who infest this City. We did not so understand its expressed wish that the population of the City might be reduced by that amount, nor did it enter our heads that anybody would interpret our figurative allusions in so literal a manner. If any of our readers did so understand our reference to the Tribune's "depletive process," we beg at once to undeceive them. It meant only that the rascals aforesaid should be "compelled to emigrate." We are not quite sure that hanging would not be better for most of them, but the doubt is ours, not the Tribune's.

Apologetic!—We assure the Auburn American that in speaking of journals published out of New-York City as the "rural press," we did not intend the slightest disrespect! We used the phrase as a common and convenient mode of distinguishing papers out of the City from those published in it. It strikes us that some of our "rural" neighbors are a little more thin-skinned than is either necessary or comfortable for themselves.

A Movement of Progressive Reform—Mayor Wood and the Old Charters.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

It is refreshing to an old conservative to see the party which now rules in the corporate councils of our City coming back to what he considers sound principles. I allude to the appeal made by the Mayor, and so favorably received by the Aldermen, to the ancient charters of the City of New-York. I trust they will go forward, and never rest until all the rights reserved in those instruments are restored to their legitimate owners. In those charters the Corporators, the "Commonalty" of the City, as distinguished from the office-bearers, are the freeholders of the several wards and the freemen resident therein. The former have been disfranchised by all the more recent charters, and the latter no longer exist at all. Whether this disfranchisement be within the constitutional powers of the Legislatures that have inflicted this penalty, or not, the officers elected under the disfranchising laws can claim no rights which are not conferred by those laws. The reservation of privileges granted by Royal Charter cannot enure to the benefit of those elected in defiance of those very charters. If, then, these reservations be of any practical value in our Courts of Law, that value can be manifested only by a restoration of the ancient constituency and the vacation of the seats of all the Aldermen and Common Councilmen, because they have not been chosen by the Corporators, in whom alone the right of election was vested.

I trust, therefore, that the Mayor and his satellites will go manfully forward, and by the aid they are said to expect from the Court of Appeals, destroy all the pretended charters by which the freeholders of the City of New-York have been robbed of their "chartered boon," and that when the order of freemen shall be again created to share their privileges, we shall see excluded from that portion of the constituency the hordes of Irishmen, Germans, Swiss and Italians who now vote for Corporation officers, not to mention the Yankees, Jerseymen and Albanians who have intruded themselves into the sanctuary, which ought to be sacred to the native-born burghers of New-Amsterdam. As my opinions were, until within a few days past, far behind this progressive age, and as your readers may perhaps think that I have slept ever since the downfall of the Dutch Dynasty, I subscribe myself

Rip Van Winkle.

The French Extradition Prisoners.—Since the death at the Eldridge-street Jail of Eugene Gerlet, one of the prisoners in the French Railway case, the friends of the other prisoners have been using every effort to effect their removal from the prison. The argument insisted on is the unhealthy condition of the jail. After calling upon various Judges and Attorneys, it was finally decided that the men were in the keeping of the U. S. Marshal, and that the power of their removal lay entirely with him, he being the party responsible for their safe detention.

In pursuance of this decision, Captain Rynders, the United States Marshal, gave instructions yesterday to have them taken from the jail in Eldridge-street. They have been removed to the Marshal's office in College-place, and given in charge of three Deputy Marshals. Here they will remain for the present. The prisoners are, August Parrot, Edward David and Louis, Gerlet, (brother of Eugene Gerlet, deceased.)

Mr. Montholon, the French Consul-General, has insisted on behalf of the French Government in paying the funeral expenses of Eugene Gerlet. A subscription was taken up for the purpose, and more than enough subscribed by French residents of the City, who attended the funeral. But Mr. Montholon has directed the money subscribed to be returned.

Coney Island.—The people of the town of Gravesend, it is said, are considering the matter of resuming the jurisdiction over that extensive and celebrated watering place known as Coney Island, and Governor Davis is likely soon to receive notice to abdicate. The lessee, it seems, learning that the law against the sale of intoxicating liquors there would be enforced by the town, thought it a good occasion to dispose of his lease to the Quarantine Commissioners. He offered to sell first, at $17,000; but after the buildings at Seguine's Point had been burned, his price went up to $35,000. As the townspeople are opposed to the establishment of Quarantine at the place, they will probably revoke the lease and take charge themselves.

The Arrest for Piracy—Extraordinary Proceedings of a United States Commercial Agent—The Circumstances of the Case.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 25, 1857.

The telegraph will have informed you of the arrest of JONATHAN S. JENKINS, late Commercial Agent at Apia, Navigators' Islands, on the charge of piracy, preferred by Dr. A. VAN CAMP, his predecessor in that office. The circumstances out of which this proceeding sprang are somewhat curious and interesting. Navigators' Islands, as everybody knows, constitute one of the out-of-the-way corners of the earth, remotely isolated from all other habitable countries, and not often heard or thought of, except by the very few persons whose enterprise has stretched itself in that direction for purposes of gain. Its native population are savages, living quite in a state of nature, repudiating almost entirely the encumbrance of clothing, ruled by petty chiefs, and entirely without law or courts. Though inveterate thieves, they are otherwise harmless, are very docile, and easily influenced and controlled by the superior intelligence of a civilized white man.

It was to Apia, the chief port of the Friendly Group, that Dr. A. VAN CAMP, of San Francisco, obtained the appointment of U. S. Consul, not because of its emoluments, for pecuniarily it is worthless, but because of the facilities it gave him to do business there as a member of the firm of V. P. CHAPIN & Co. In the course of his official career, VAN CAMP was called upon to sell, for the benefit of whom it might concern, two American barks and their cargoes, the Elvira and the St. Marys, which came into Apia in distress, and were unable to proceed on their contemplated voyages to Australia. In all these proceedings he appears to have been scrupulously careful to follow every form, and take every receipt and voucher demanded by consular or maratime law. In each case, vessel and cargo were sold by order of her commander or his agent, after regular survey, condemnation and order of sale. Subsequently the owners of the vessels receiving false accounts from their agents became dissatisfied with VAN CAMP's course, made complaints against him at Washington, and procured his summary dismissal, without any opportunity to meet and answer the charges preferred. Of course months elapsed before VAN CAMP heard anything of these proceedings, dependent as the islands are upon chance vessels for communication with the United States. Commodore MERVINE, happening in at Apia in the course of his cruise, first apprized VAN CAMP of the complaints made against him, examined his books, papers, &c., until entirely satisfied that the complaints against him were groundless, advised him to return home and meet his accusers, and offered him and his family a passage in his ship to Valparaiso.

VAN CAMP at once settled his business for departure, turned over the effects of the Consulate to his partner, and chartered a vessel called the Eudorus to carry to Valparaiso a valuable cargo of property, belonging to himself and to the firm of which he was a member. He also shipped a considerable quantity of oil and whalebone, taken from a deserted vessel, and belonging to a house at New-Bedford, I believe. The very next day after he left for the United States.

JONATHAN S. JENKINS, of whose appointment to supercede him he had heard nothing, arrived at Apia, bringing with him Capt. MARTIN, formerly of the bark S. Marys, and an associate upon whom he had conferred the title and dignity of Deputy United States Marshal. MARTIN had made affidavit charging VAN CAMP with piracy, in taking forcible possession of his vessel, and appropriating its proceeds entirely to his own uses. The affidavit in fact charged the Consul with the whole value of the ship and cargo, making no allowance whatever for some fifty tons of cargo thrown overboard in a gale, or of $8,000 advanced by VAN CAMP on the vessel prior to her sale.

As soon as JENKINS set foot on shore and heard of VAN CAMP's departure, he seized the Eudorus and cargo at once, and early as convenient took similar possession of all his predecessors property and effects. His next proceedings were to erect a 'Consular Court' as he styled it, of which he assumed to be presiding Judge, appointing two Englishmen and the Captain of the Eudorus as associates. This self-constituted Court proceeded to try the complaint of MARTIN against VAN CAMP, disregarding and repudiating altogether the protest of his partner and agent, and affording "Defendant" no opportunity whatever to save his reputation and his property from sacrifice at their hands. MARTIN's complaint of course was adjudged to be true, and execution was issued.

That case disposed of, a similar complaint against VAN CAMP, in the case of the Elvira, was made and tried. The associate Judges found in favor of the defendant, but the ruling not suiting the self-styled "Vice-Commissioner" JENKINS, he took the responsibility of setting it aside, and rendering a judgment for plaintiff for $6,000, his full demand. This accomplished, the "Deputy U. S. Marshal" appointed by JENKINS, in execution of the orders of the latter, sold all of VAN CAMP's property, and the entire cargo of the Eudorus, including some $70,000 worth of property, which V. P. CHAPIN swore, from personal knowledge belonged to other parties than VAN CAMP—evidence which there was no attempt to contradict. MARTIN pocketed his share of the plunder, and left at once for Australia. SEAMEN, Captain of the Eudorus, after acting as a Judge in the suits against VAN CAMP, was awarded $4,000, the sum which he was to have received from VAN CAMP, had he taken his cargo to Valparaiso according to the charter party. This was paid him out of the proceeds of sales, and he also cleared. Altogether, something near $200,000 worth of property was sacrificed for about $16,000, every cent of which was appropriated one way or another by JENKINS.

Pretty summary proceedings these, it must be confessed, even if legal. I need scarcely say that they were entirely without warrant of law or custom. JENKINS was simply a commercial agent, clothed with no extraordinary powers, and his erection of a court and trial of complaints were the grossest usurpation. His seizure and sale of property under the circumstances, was as clearly a robbery of the most audacious kind as though he had been an Algerine corsair or a genuine "Sydney Cove," instead of a commissioned officer of the United States. Of course he had no power to appoint a United States Marshal, and the worthy acting in that capacity has earned an indisputable title to board and lodging at the public expense should he ever be so unwise as to set foot within American jurisdiction.

VAN CAMP has been here some months making redress. His books and papers on file at the State Department are acknowledged to contain amplest refutation of every charge made against him; so that he receives the entire sympathy of the Administration, which cannot hardly fail to urge upon Congress to recompense him at least in part for his losses directly consequent upon his removal from office on ex-parte representations now known to have been false, and the appointment of a successor who wielded the power and influence he acquired there by reason of his commission, for the ruinous robbery of an absent man. JENKINS was promptly removed upon presentation of authenticated evidence of his proceedings. Upon that point there could be no hesitation, for even had VAN CAMP been the vilest wretch alive, JENKINS had no more right to judge him and confiscate his property than had the "King of the Cannibal Islands." What will come of the complaint of piracy against JENKINS I know not, but if his counsel will put in a plea of insanity on his behalf, that possibly may find him an avenue of escape from a very bad scrape.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 26, 1857.

As much excitement is yet kept up concerning the appointment of Major BEN. MCCULLOCH to Utah, who is yet expected to accept the appointment, I send your readers an interesting sketch of him.

Major MCCULLOCH was born in Rutherford County, Tennessee, in 1814. His father, ALEXANDER MCCULLOCH, was Aid-de-camp to General COFFEE, and fought under General JACKSON at the battles of Talladega, Tallahassee and Horseshoe, during the Creek war. His father emigrated to Georgia while BEN. was very young, and BEN. was kept at school in Tennessee until he was fourteen years old. After this BEN. was kept hunting until he was near twenty-one. At that time the bears were so bad in Tennessee that the settlers could not raise their hogs. Hunting bears in the cane required much caution, and if a man's gun snapped he lost his breakfast. Young MCCULLOCH frequently killed as many as eighty bears during a season, and never less than twenty in the course of a Winter. This life gave him a taste for wild adventure, and when he became of age he determined to go on an expedition to the Rocky Mountains, and left his home, for St. Louis, to join a company of trappers. He arrived too late, however, and likewise failed in joining a company of Santa Fe traders.

He returned home, and soon after called on Colonel DAVID CROCKETT, who was making up an expedition to go to Texas, to take part in the revolution. The whole Southwest at that time was alive with feelings of sympathy for the Texans, and men were daily flocking to their standard. Nacogdoches was appointed the place of rendezvous, from which the expedition was to start, and Christmas of the year 1835 was named for the day of meeting, when, as "Old Davy" expressed it, they were to make their Christmas dinner off the hump of a buffalo! MCCULLOCH again arrived too late, and finding the party gone, he proceeded on by himself to the river Brazos, where he was taken sick, and he did not recover until after the fall of the Alamo. MCCULLOCH's disappointment was very great at not being able to join the gallant band of patriots, but it afterwards proved very fortunate for him, for Col. TRAVIS, after having sustained a siege of 13 days, with only 180 Texans against SANTA ANA's army, fell with his brave little band, after having killed 900 of the enemy!

Major MCCULLOCH, on joining the Texan army under Gen. SAM. HOUSTON, was assigned to the artillery, and made Captain of a gun. He served gallantly at the battle of San Jacinto, where SANTA ANA was taken prisoner, and his army of 1,500 men killed or taken prisoners. MCCULLOCH afterwards settled in Gonzales County, Texas, and was employed on the frontier surveying and locating lands. He frequently led the wild border scouts against the Indians and Mexicans, which service he entered before the celebrated JACK HAYS. He also distinguished himself at the battle of Plumb Creek in a fight with the Indians, who at the time burned and sacked the town of Linnville. He joined the expedition against MIER, but, not agreeing with the plans of the leaders, he returned home before the fight, and escaped the cruel hardships and imprisonment of that command, which had surrendered to the perfidious AMUDIA.

When the war broke out with Mexico, he rallied a band of Texan warriors on the banks of the Guadaloupe, and set out for the seat of war on the Rio Grande. The company arrived four days after the battles of Palo Alto and the Resaca. His company was accepted by General TAYLOR, and he was afterward employed in the daring scouting expedition toward Monterey, in which battle, as well as that of Buena Vista, he won imperishable renown. He after ward joined General SCOTT's army, and continued with it to the conquest of the City of Mexico. For his gallant services, General PIERCE created him Marshal of Texas, which office he now holds.

Major MCCULLOCH is a thin, spare man, of great muscle and activity, and is now about 43 years of age. He has a pleasant face, and is mild and courteous in his manners, with an air of diffidence. He is very cool, and of determined bravery, is yet a bachelor, and is the very man for Governor of Utah, which it is hoped he will become.

There was a larger reception at the President's yesterday than there has been for some weeks, and the press for office is unabated. The Jersey Blues are very thick here, and a regular war is going on among the Jerseymen. The two Senators, WRIGHT and THOMPSON, are divided in the feud, and consequently head opposite factions. Senator WRIGHT, for instance, supports Gov. PRICE for the Ministership to Mexico, and Senator THOMPSON bitterly opposes him.

Two Indian Chiefs of the Passamaquoddy tribe, Gov. SAINT FRANCIS, and Lieut.-Gov. JO SOLOMO, had an interview with the President yesterday. They represent that their tribe, which now only consists of 500 Indians, have but ten acres allowed them in the State of Maine, and that they have no room to hunt. That they have been gradually deprived of their lands and have appealed to the Governors of Maine in vain. They now come to the Great Father to petition for more room.

Hon. ISAAC E. MORSE, Commissioner to New-Granada, has arrived here from New-Orleans. He says that Government has no way of paying any indemnity to the United States, and the only course will be to take possession of the Isthmus.

Telegraphic dispatches were expected here to-day from New-Orleans, bringing the news by the arrival of the steamer Empire City, now some days over due. To-morrow, no doubt, will bring the news, which is anticipated with the greatest interest.

Private advices received here from TEXAS speak of the general flattering prospects of the crops, and of the perfect success of the Celestial Sugar-Cane, of which, it is said, cattle are ravenously fond. The first experiment to naturalize Sugar-Cane in the South, was made by the Jesuits in 1751, but it was not cultivated to any extent. In 1759, the first Sugar plantation was opened and cultivated by DUBREUIL, in Louisiana, which is now the lower part of the city of New-Orleans, known as the Suburb Marigny. It was on this plantation that the first sugar mill was erected in this country.

The sale of the furniture of the National Hotel commenced yesterday, and there was an unprecedented attendance of bidders, notwithstanding it was thought the disease confined to the hotel, was contagious. The effects sold very high, and some even above store prices.

The serenade of Hon. D. S. DICKINSON did not come off last Saturday as was expected, and as many reported. Last evening, however, it became un fait accompli. There was a very large crowd which greeted the EX-Senator, after several airs were played by the band, who appeared in front of WILLARD's balcony. He was introduced by Dr. EVERETT, of the Patent Office, "in a few brief remarks." The venerable looking EX-Senator then made a very patriotic address, which, ere this, no doubt, has been telegraphed in substance. After he concluded, Mr. WALTER LENOX was called for, and he also addressed the crowd in flattering terms complimentary to the Hon. EX-Senator, when the assembly dispersed to sleep and dream.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW-ENGLAND EMIGRANT AID COMPANY—THE RELIGIOUS ANNIVERSARIES—THE HOOSAC TUNNEL.

BOSTON, Tuesday, May 26.

The New-England Emigrant Aid Company held their annual meeting this afternoon.

The report of the Directors exhibits favorable results, in consequence of the great rise of lands in Kansas. Notwithstanding the losses of last year, by the destruction of the Free-State Hotel in Lawrence, the investment will probably be returned to the stockholders, with perhaps a considerable advance. The prospects of the triumph of Free-State principles in Kansas are considered flattering. The payment of damages for the destruction of the Free-State Hotel is to be pressed on Congress, and ultimate success is considered certain.

General POMEROY delivered an address, giving his experience in Kansas, with the particulars of the purchase of Atchison by the Free-State men.

AMOS A. LAWRENCE, Esq., resigned the office of Treasurer. The old Board of officers were generally reelected.

The receipts of the Society last year were $42,000—of which $37,000 was by subscription and $5,000 by donation.

The anniversary meetings were largely attended today, and the reports of the various societies show a progressive state of educational and religious interest throughout the country. The American Education Society was eloquently addressed by Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER. Rev. H. CLAPP, of Providence, and Rev. SAMUEL HARRIS, of Bangor, addressed the American and Foreign Christian Union Society in Tremont Temple, which was crowded. The American Tract Society elected President HOPKINS, of Williams College, one of the Executive Committee, which is looked upon as a request to the New-York or parent society to appoint him on their publishing Committee, in place of Rev. NEHEMIAH ADAMS.

The levee of the Young Men's Christian Association in Music Hall, this evening, was very crowded. HENRY WARD BEECHER and other eloquent divines were among the speakers. The exercises were varied by good music and a bountiful collation.

Governor GARDINER to-day vetoed the Hoosac Tunnel bill.

The House, this afternoon, passed the bill over the Governor's veto. The present indications are that the Senate will do the same.

The Troubles at Dr. Cheever's Church.

In accordance with a requisition for a meeting, signed by ten members of Dr. CHEEVER's Church, a meeting was held in the lecture room of the Church last evening, at which about fifty persons were present, and Dr. BALL presided.

Mr. SETH B. HUNT moved that a Committee of three be appointed by the Chair, to consider the propriety of amending the by laws, to enable the Church to nominate three additional deacons, for appointment at the next annual meeting.

The resolution was adopted, and the Chair appointed Mr. CHARLES ABERNETHY, and Professor THOMPSON, and Mr. WILLIAM C. GILMAN as such Committee. The two latter declining to serve, Messrs. E. W. CHESTER and CHARLES B. HAVEN were appointed in their stead.

Mr. E. W. CHESTER proposed a number of amendments to the by-laws, among others, that there should hereafter be seven deacons, instead of four, as formerly, the present deacons to hold office till 1858; after that time the election of deacons shall occur annually; also, that female members should be entitled to vote.

These amendments were laid over until the annual meeting, under the rule.

Mr. R. N. HAVENS entered his protest against the meeting held on the 18th instant.

Mr. F. W. KING asked him to explain his grounds of protest, but Mr. H. declined at that time to give them.

It was suggested that, as the present meeting might also be considered illegal, one should be called in due form, so that of its legality there could be no question.

Professor THOMPSON moved that the Committee previously appointed be instructed to report at a subsequent meeting, which was agreed to.

The meeting then adjourned.

Presbyterian General Assembly—New-School.

On Friday, at Cleveland, the Trustees of the Church Erection Fund reported:

Fifty-five churches have been aided during the year; and $19,343 have been appropriated, in loans, without interest for three years, to forty-three churches, and donations to twelve churches.

The Assembly recommended the observance of the first Monday of January as a day of fasting and prayer for the conversion of the world; and the last Thursday of February as a day of prayer for colleges.

The order of the day, the Report of the Committee on Education for the Ministry, was taken up, and read by the Secretary, Rev. THORNTON A. MILES. The report comprised, in detail, the incipient plans of action by the Committee, and of coöperation by the Synods and Presbyteries, some of which have been visited; and circular letters have been sent to all the Presbyteries, and sixty of the Stated Clerks of the same have responded. As the result, a few Presbyteries are found to have systematic presentation of the subject to the churches; some have plans of coöperation with the Committee. Synods, in some cases, have adopted concerted plans of coöperation with the Committee, or with one another, as the Synods of Ohio and Indiana, and Wabash with Cincinnati, or Lane Seminary, as their centre. A considerable number of students for the ministry are reported. The Central Education Society and the Philadelphia Education Society have been in operation—the latter assigning sixty-seven young men in Theological Seminaries and twelve in Colleges and Academies. The American Education, to some extent, may have been also aided by the churches.

POWERS' GREEK SLAVE AT AUCTION, at the Merchants' Exchange.

B. H. LEEDS & CO. beg the attention of art lovers to the above important sale of the celebrated marble statue, by HIRAM POWERS, which will positively be sold at auction at the Merchants' Exchange, New-York, on TUESDAY, June 23, at 12 o'clock.

THE GREEK SLAVE.

This world-renowned statue, which is valued at over $6,000, is the original Greek slave which was exhibited through the country several years since for the benefit of Mr Powers, and afterward purchased of him by the Cosmopolitan Art Association of Cincinnati, who awarded it as a prize to the present possessor, Mrs. Kate Gillespie, and on whose account it is now to be sold, as will be seen by the following correspondence:

"BRADY'S BEND Pa., May 6, 1857.

H. H. LEEDS, Esq., Auctioneer, New York—Sir: I have in my possession the original and world-renowned statue of 'Powers' Greek Slave,' which was awarded to me as a prize by the Cosmopolitan art association some three years since. Not being able to retain so valuable a work, I have, at the suggestion of several friends, been induced to write you as to the propriety of selling the statue by auction. Please inform me what you think of the plan, and whether in your opinion I would realize a good sum from the above mode of disposing of it, and oblige yours, &c.,

KATE GILLESPIE."

"NEW-YORK, May 10, 1857.

Mrs. KATE GILLESPIE—Dear Madame: We have the pleasure of acknowledging yours of the 6th inst., and in reply beg leave to say that if the Statue in your possession is the original Greek Slave, by Hiram Powers, we have no hesitation in saying that—with proper publicity and the facilities enjoyed by ourselves for the sale of works of art—the Statue would realize for you a very satisfactory price. Very respectfully, &c.,

H. H. LEEDS & CO."

"BRADY'S BEND, Pa., May 17, 1857

H. H. LEEDS & Co.—Gentlemen: Your letter of the 10th is at hand. After due consideration I have concluded to risk the sale of the Slave at auction, and have accordingly had it shipped to you in charge of my friend Mr R., who will call and arrange matters preliminary to the sale, and also place in your possession the proof of the genuineness of the statute over Mr. Powers' own signature. Trusting you will give the sale a wide publicity, and receive a good price for the marble beauty which I so reluctantly part with, I await the result with the greatest anxiety. Yours, truly, KATE GILLESPIE."

The above Statue will be placed on exhibition one week previous to the sale in the Rotunda of the Merchants' Exchange, and sold as above without reserve, presenting probably the only opportunity in a life-time for securing the greatest work of the most celebrated living sculptor.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—A regular meeting of this Association was held at the small chapel of University Monday evening, Mr. BLISS, President, in the Chair. After the usual preliminary business was passed upon, the resignations of some half dozen members were received, and a large number of new names for membership handed in, after which the names of candidates awaiting action were voted upon for admission affirmatively without exception.

Mr. C. JONES, pastor of the Mariners' Church, delivered an essay on the relation of seamen to the extension of the Gospel and the Christian Church.

The speaker was limited in his time to twenty minutes, which was by hearty consent extended to thirty-five minutes, with a final request to extend the subject at another time. Brief remarks were made by Rev. Dr. CUTLER and others at the close.

THE SABBATH SCHOOLS AT HARLEM.—The Sabbath Schools connected with the Union in the northern part of the island, including Harlem and vicinity, held their anniversary on Monday afternoon and evening. The turn-out was unusually large, and the speaking and other exercises were spirited and effective. A procession was formed at the church in Fifth-avenue and One-Hundred-and-Twenty seventh-street, which marched through several of the streets of Harlem, and the children sang in chorus several hymns, after which they were dismissed to their homes. At 7½ o'clock in the evening a large assemblage gathered in the church corner of One-Hundred-and-Twenty-first street and Third-avenue, to listen to Rev. Mr. PENDE and other speakers, who were expected to be present.

The anniversary was in all respects most satisfactory and agreeable.

ESCAPE OF ONE CHARGED WITH MURDER.—A letter was received yesterday by the United States District-Attorney, from A. D. GALL, United States Consul at Antwerp, announcing the escape of SIMON ELBRIGHT, first mate of the Benjamin F. Aymar, recently arrested at Antwerp, upon a charge of having murdered two sailors, (belonging to the vessel,) named FRANCIS STROVEL and GEORGE BARRETTE. ELBRIGHT was placed on board the Troy, to be brought to the United States for trial. He was heavily, and they thought, securely ironed. His escape is believed to have been effected through the connivance of the first mate of the Troy. The Captain and several of the crew of the Benjamin F. Aymar, who have been detained as witness against ELBRIGHT, will be released from custody. STROVEL and BARRETTE, the victims of the murder, had shipped from New York on the Benjamin F. Aymar, and both have families living in the City.

CRICKET—ELEVEN OF NEW-YORK VS. SIXTEEN OF NEWARK.—This exciting match was concluded yesterday, at 5 P. M., after a hard battle of two days' duration; the New-Yorkers winning the game by thirteen runs only. The fielding was excellent the first day, but fell off toward the close of the game. The bowling was also very good, but the batting was not up to the mark. The reverse may be said of the Newark players, as their batting was excellent. The match was one of considerable interest to a large number of spectators on the ground. The weather was all that could be desired on both days.

SING SING FIRE DEPARTMENT.—The last Legislature made an appropriation of $2,000 to the village of Sing Sing for the purchase of a fire engine, in consideration of the services rendered in past years by citizens of that village in extinguishing fires at the prison. The Sing Sing Fire Department is now in a highly efficient state, having two fire engines and a hose cart, all new or nearly new, besides the machine about to be purchased. The number of men enrolled is over one hundred. On Monday DAVID S. LUNLAM, Jr., was unanimously reelected Chief of the Department, who, after the result was announced, invited the firemen and citizens to an entertainment.

ONE PRAYS AND ANOTHER PUMPS.—The ship Senator, which arrived at this port from Liverpool last week, in a leaky condition, met with a very severe gale of wind just after leaving port, on the 9th of April, in which she shifted her cargo and sprung a leak. After several days of hard pumping, the crew, becoming exhausted and discouraged, notified the captain that they should not pump any longer. Capt. COFFIN hereupon assembled all hands. Taking out his watch, he looked at it and then at the men, and said, coolly: "It is now just twelve o'clock; at the rate the ship is now leaking, I calculate we shall all be in the other world at about half-past two. I am going below to say my prayers," and went into his cabin. A consultation was soon held. One old fellow declared he had rather pump than pray, as he understood it better, and it agreed better with his constitution. In a few minutes, the Captain heard the pumps going again as lively as ever, and they did not cease going, except at short intervals, until the ship arrived in New-York.

Coroner's Inquests:

ACCIDENTAL DROWNING.—Coroner PERRY held an inquest upon the body of a colored man named COLLINS, who was drowned early Monday morning, at the foot of Murray-street. He was seen lying on the string-piece of the pier about an hour previous to his death. He appeared to be drunk, and falling asleep, probably rolled into the river. Verdict, "Accidental drowning." Deceased was about 35 years of age, and a native of New-York.

The body of an unknown man, about 42 years of age, 5 feet 7 inches high, sandy hair and whiskers—slightly gray, plain undershirt, white shirt, blue overalls, black pants, long boots, black vest, no cost, was found on Monday morning, in the river, at the foot of West Twenty-eighth-street. It appeared to have been in the water about three months. An inquest was held upon it by Coroner GAMBLE. Verdict: "Death from drowning."

FATAL FALL WHILE INTOXICATED.—The same Coroner held an inquest on Monday, at the Sixth Ward Station-house, upon the body of MARY BAIRD, a native of Ireland, aged 40 years, who came to her death the previous night, at her residence, No. 55 Mulberry street, from compression of the brain, the result of a fall while in a state of intoxication. The deceased was a woman of very intemperate habits. She was married, and leaves several children.

FIRES IN BLEECKER-STREET.—At 3½ o'clock on Monday afternoon, in the daguerreotype saloon of WM. H. NESBIT, on the third floor of the building No. 316 Bleecker street. It originated in consequence of the carelessness of the errand boy, who threw a lighted match among some chemicals. All the stock and fixtures were badly damaged. Mr. NESBIT estimates his loss at $150. He is insured for $200 in the North River Insurance Company. The building was damaged to the extent of about $200. Mr. WHITTON, who kept a confectionery store below, sustained some damage by water.

The alarm at 10 o'clock Monday night was caused by the accidental burning of a window curtain in the dwelling No. 131 Bleecker-street.

FALL OF A BUILDING—TWO CHILDREN BURIED BENEATH THE RUINS.—The sidewalk of the building on the corner of Broadway and Cedar streets, which was in course of demolition, fell about 6 o'clock on Monday afternoon, and buried beneath its ruins two children who were standing near by picking up chips. The Reserve Corps, of the First Ward, were soon on hand, and by the aid of some citizens, cleared away the rubbish, and rescued the two children—a boy and a girl—who were found not to be seriously injured. Their escape was most miraculous. The excitement about the place, while the children were being excavated, was most intense, as the little sufferers could be plainly heard screaming bitterly for help. They both reside with their parents in Trinity-place.

Wire Railing and Iron Fences.

From the Courier and Enquirer.

[Gen. J. W. WEBB.] Nearly five years ago, we caused a quantity of this fence to be put up as a road fence on the old Highland Turnpike, just above Tarrytown; and now, after having undergone the test of our severest winters and hottest summers, it is to all intents and purposes as perfect as it was the day it was completed; and, in consequence, we have given directions to have this fence put up on our entire front on the road. Not one panel of this fence has varied an inch from its original position, nor has there been expended upon it one hour of labor or care of any kind. In short, it is the very perfection of a fence; and being on a public highway very much traveled, it tells its own tale and can be examined at any time. This fence referred to, is set in stone steps, as all similar fences on a public highway should be; but Mr. WICKERSHAM has introduced the hurdle foot for partition fences, which we consider a very decided improvement, besides causing a saving of a dollar a rod.

We have been familiar for years past, with every species of fence invented for our Western prairies; and we feel no hesitation whatever, in saying that for economy, convenience and durability, that which Mr. WICKERSHAM calls his Corrugated Flat Rail Iron Hurdle Fence, is without a rival. One of its great recommendations for the Western farmer, is the great facility with which it can be put up for shipment by railroad and other conveyances, without the possibility of injury from careless handling.

In connection with this subject, a friend has prepared the following, upon Iron Wire generally, which is so rapidly being introduced into this practical economy of the farm, in making it answer all the purposes of the willow, by twisting and turning it into any required shape, at very little additional expense; while of course, its almost imperishable character, constitutes its greater economy:

"It is no more impossible to twist and turn iron into curious forms, in these days of ingenious contrivance, then to bend a willow wand. Yet have willow wands grown for ages, and iron slept for thousands of years unmolested in the 'lowards' of the earth, with only half the uses of either known, till some individuals, blessed in the possession of a practical nack, have brought out their hidden virtues. As with the willow, so with iron. Smart men have taken fast hold of a new idea, and that idea being practical, took hold of this material and this material, hard as it is, unruly and difficult to manage as everybody once supposed it to be, springs upon the instant into graceful forms and has shot up at once into a monument of the enterprise and skill that combined to elevate its uses from the grosser to the finer and delicate grades of manufacturing art. And so, through progressive steps, the iron business has worked its way to a remarkable position among the ornamental branches of our industry, as well as the heavier and coarser. And just as easily, as years ago, the pliant willow came to be fashioned into the semblance of couches and chairs, and airy furniture for Summer delectation, so easily have the rods of the day brought these ribbons of iron into our houses, into our dress, in pleasant forms, in our parlors and I to invade our Summer gardens, arranged it permanently to those adjuncts of social economy without the existence of which we are not civilized, and by the use of which we are in so much better condition in the world than our fathers were, that it is getting to be matter of wonder how those very respectable people, our progenitors, contrived existence at all in the total lack of these our essential comforts. A few years only have passed away since the utility of this metal for the purposes of every-day life came to be acknowledged or understood. The branches of active occupation which now centre upon this simple article, in the United States alone, reckon up a yearly aggregate of millions of dollars' valuation, nor is the improvement of the past five years exhaustive of our resources. American inventors have by no means yet reached the end of the chapter. With a pleasant pertinacity, they persist in turning over new leaves in the book of our Industrial Art, and each time the page is turned, out sparkles some new affair which increases its growth so very rapidly as to eclipse that which has gone before it. We have recently had occasion to pay attention to one or two of these new developments. Since the introduction to notice of the so called process of Weaving Iron—by which is simply to be understood the art of interlacing bars of wrought iron, by the aid of mighty but simple machines—the application of wrought iron to the uses of the farm, the garden, and the house, has become a decided feature in our manufacturing economy. The latest improvement introduced in this vicinity is a Composite Railing. This is formed, first, of wrought-iron rods, of any size required, 'crimped' and 'woven,' to which are added cast-iron ties and ornaments, cast directly upon the rods. The process is as follows: The pattern having been deposited in the foundry, the size of rod required for the specified article is selected, and passed, first, to the 'cutting' machine, where it is severed into lengths of uniform degree; second, to the 'drop press,' a ponderous machine whose falling weight would kill half a dozen men, and knocks wire about unmercifully; third, to the 'casting mould,' where the centres are 'run on,'—that is, the mould being fixed upon the intersection of the wires, the metal runs around the rods, and while it compacts and binds them together firmly, also forms a rosette of elegant pattern, the subsequent painting and bronzing of which lends to the Composite Railing its peculiar comeliness of design, and the peculiarity of which utterly prevents the admission of moisture: fourth, the third process having been finished, the workmen proceed to 'run on the rails,'—which means nothing more than the connection of long strips of iron to the extremities of the rods, the rails being held in place by rosettes cast on, (as before,) forming a 'shoulder' for the rail to rest upon, and thus entirely excluding the use of rivets; the fifth process being what is technically termed the 'making,' in which the joining of the sections and the 'casting-on of the pickets' are the final operations. These pickets are of solid cast-iron, attached in the same manner as the rosettes, the rods running up into the pickets. The parts which support these railings have wrought iron 'lugs' cast into them, to furnish means of connection with the separate sections of the work. These processes are very speedy, and the result is, a fence that is not only possessed of greater strength than any other, but one which never needs repair, is always ornamental, and will outwear all other styles. This work is chiefly employed for ornamental purposes. The workmen turn out hundreds of feet in a day. Like other branches of the iron manufacture, to which we shall presently refer, this work is turned out by the New-York Wire Railing Company—J. B. WICKERSHAM, No. 319 Broadway, Superintendent.

The advantages to be derived from the use of a railing that combines the security, ornament and cheapness of this Composite, are briefly these: 1. It will out-last all cast-iron railings. 2. It is much more readily and cheaply made than cast-iron. 3. It is especially adapted to cemetery purposes, by its lightness, ornamental character, facility of transportation and ease of adjustment. 4. It makes a better gate than any other material, because its firm bracing purposes, in the question, and its durability will bear any amount of hard usage. 5. It is adapted for use in bridges, from its qualities of endurance, strength and ease. 6. For rural fences, garden enclosures, &c., nothing is better, nor, indeed, so cheap and certain as this.

II. Weaving Wrought-Iron.—Every one who has given attention to the manufacture of iron in its various branches during the past few years, has hardly failed to notice the progress made by the invention of the woven iron fence. Yet, somebody may ask, what is the meaning of this phrase, Woven Iron? It is nothing but the interlacing of wrought iron bars into fanciful shapes, much as a lace-machine, weavee lace. The meshes are formed in the same way; not so delicate, to be sure, but still wonderfully delicate for the material. We enter the manufactory, and there, driven by powerful machinery, huge strong machines, out and into which go masses of iron wires, of all sizes; and going in straight and fair, emerge bent and twisted, with their backs apparently bent beyond hope of redemption; yet these bends or 'crimps' are excellent places for another wire, bent in the same way, to fit into, and when once fitted into the curves, there is no separation. The first applications of this invention were to ore and coal screens, park and cemetery fences and office railings, &c., the prices of which were placed low, and the success of which has been wonderful. The gradual improvements introduced, chiefly through the ingenuity of Mr. WICKERSHAM, have resulted in the following processes of manufacture:

III. A Corrugated Band Iron Fence, in which rod and band iron are tied and supported by corrugated rails and posts, either with or without the use of wedges, keys or bolts, in such a manner as to render it entirely impossible for the fence to give way. This fence is manufactured with reference especially to farm and garden use, is turned out cheaply and with celerity, and meets with universal favor. The substitution of flat rails for wires in connection with this corrugated patent, is received with the attention it merits, as forming an effectual safeguard against the breaking through of cattle. This fence also presents an object sufficiently apparent from a distance to mark the boundaries of the land, while it is perfectly light and airy, not subject to get out of repair, requires little care in putting up, and being set in blocks for a permanent fence, or with hurdles for a moveable one, becomes either a permanent enclosure or one for hurdling stock. The fence is formed of five rails or more, as occasion requires, and its height is four feet. The bars are as easily removed as those in a common rail fence, in case a passage through them is needed, or made permanent if occasion demand. Its cost ranges from $1 50 to $5 per rod, its price being guaged according to weight and quality. They who have used this fence, particularly for farm purposes, commend it in the highest terms.

The old branches sold for these times, when five years produce such extraordinary changes in men and things) are prosecuted by this Company as usual. The iron bedstead is an institution; there is one in almost every house. The iron couch, iron chairs, iron gratings, verandahs, Summer-houses, trellis-work, and window guards are made as usual. Wire-hulwarks have been introduced by the Company on board the Arago, Fulton, Adriatic, the City of Buffalo, and other splendid steamers.

Sufficient has been said to indicate the rapidity of the development of this branch of Industry in our midst. It has taken an important place, and merits attention, not only for the variety and elegance of the fabrics into the constitution of which Iron so largely enters, but from the superior cheapness, durability, and readiness of manufacture, lightness, portability, and strength of the materials so made."

THE AMERICAN DISEASE, DYSPEPSIA.—When any particular disease is indigenous to a country, nature generally provides a remedy. Brandreth's pills are a sure cure for this disease. They should be taken in doses of one every night, and in a week or two the cure is effected. The first symptoms of dyspepsia is costiveness, arising from a torpor of the liver and a lessening of the peristaltic action. The symptom is immediately cured by the pills. The next worst symptom is heartburn and acid eruptions after taking food, caused by the want of sufficient gastric juice to digest it. The stomach has just power enough to throw out a small portion of juice, which just suffices to sour the whole contents of the stomach, without dissolving them, and hence the difficulty. BRANDRETH'S PILLS so stimulate the stomach that it secretes ample gastric juice for the purposes of digestion, and remains after their use permanently strengthened. Alkalies may relieve, but never cure. BRANDRETH'S PILLS cure dyspepsia when taken as above described. Principal office, No 43 Brandreth Building. Sold also at No. 52 Division-street, and by A. CUSHMAN, Broadway, corner of Twenty-second-street.

TUESDAY, May 26—P. M.

The Bank Statement published this morning is deemed extremely favorable to continued ease in Money: the movement proving an ability in the Banks to meet the liberal export demand for Specie, without the slightest disturbance to their ordinary line of accommodation. Outside Money lenders are also persuaded that higher rates of interest are not in immediate prospect, and are taking paper, strictly first class, within ½ ₰ cent. of the Bank rate. The Brokers make temporary loans with ease at 7 ₰ cent. The last advices from England in regard to the dullness and tendency to decline in Bullion have advanced the price of Sterling Bills ¼ ₰ cent., and the business to-day was done at 109¼@109⅜ ₰ cent., as against 109⅝@¾ yesterday. The transactions were light at the extreme rate. The shipment of Specie to-morrow will be about the same as by the last direct Cunarder, say $1,550,000. The Sub-Treasury received to day $264,392; paid, $248,351, and held at the close, $13,392,066.

The following comparative analysis of the Bank averages, including the Clearing House and Sub-Treasury operations of the past week, was accidentally omitted in our last paper. The comparison is with the previous week, and also with the corresponding week of last year.

In point of numbers, the buyers and sellers at the Stock Exchange are becoming more equally divided, but the power of control over the market is still apparently with the Bears. At the same time we remark in the large and active business of the past day or two a growing purpose among the buyers to take advantage of the low prices and easy money market to increase their operations while awaiting of the contrary disposition among the speculators for a further fall, to make the lowest terms. To-day a preconcerted attack was made upon New-York Central, which was done at 84, seller's option. New-York and Erie Shares were also freely put out, notwithstanding large bona fide purchases at the opening of business in the forenoon. The transactions in both were heavy in amount, and the brokers of the party operating against the market dispensed their sales liberally on all sides of the Board room. Encouraged by some borrowed Stock, they also sold large amounts of Southern Michigan at a decline of 1@2½ ₰ cent., though this in turn brought in good buyers at 60 ₰ cent., and the Stock closed 60¼@½. A part of the programme, as rumored on the Street, was to make a demonstration upon Reading, though this turned out but indifferently, as the Stock was well cared for at the close at 78½ ₰ cent. If there be any new cause for all this, beyond the fact above referred to, that the Board is becoming a little more equally divided in their views of the future of the Stock and Money Markets, we have not been able, after the most careful enquiry to discover it. The fall of 8 ₰ cent. in a single week in New York and Erie, and 2½ ₰ cent. in two days in New York Central, ought of course to have some foundation in new discoveries as to the condition of the finances or course of business on one or both lines. Yet neither company has undergone the slightest change in or incurred the semblance of embarrassment to their credit. The Central has not yet been ruined in its freight traffic by "the enlargement of the State Canal," nor the Erie brought to bankruptcy by undue competition with the Central. The general market closed steady this afternoon, after a heavy day's work, and the promise of further excitement to-morrow. A state of things is shown in the official list of sales more singularly at variance with the ease of the money market, the healthy condition of trade, and the workings of Exchange and Bullion than has seldom heretofore been exhibited. The panic prices of the Summer of 1854 were as low, but the unsoundness of the market then was at least more consistent.

QUARANTINE.

NO MORE SQUATTER SOVEREIGNTY.

Notwithstanding the late general order requiring all the Police Captains to make their returns in future to Deputy-Superintendent Carpenter, at the office in White-street, only one additional Captain.—Turnbull, of the Eighth Ward,—complied, and he imitating the example of Captain Hopkins, of the Third District, sent a duplicate return to the office of Mr. Matsell.

At the meeting of the Commissioners, yesterday forenoon, the Committee on General Discipline reported regulations for police uniform, as follows:

Captains.—Blue frock coat, double breasted; plated shield, with "excelsior" in a scroll in the beak of an eagle.

Sergeants.—Blue frock coat, single breasted; brass shield—badge on the right arm; white stripe on pants.

Patrolmen.—Blue frock coat, single-breasted, low standing collar, gilt buttons, arms of the State; blue vest, gilt buttons, with arms of the State; blue trowsers, with small white cord on the sides; blue cap; brass star, with arms of the State.

President DRAPER offered the following resolutions, and they were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the duties of the Board, set forth in section 5 of the law of April 15, relative to the "removal of nuisances existing in public streets, roads, places, and highways, on the public health," be referred to a Special Committee of Two, to report, as early as practicable, what provision is necessary for the utmost security of our citizens against pestilential disease.

Resolved, That our fellow-citizens be and are hereby requested to notify the Superintendent of any omission of the Police force, as well as others, in reporting duties neglected, as well as wrongs committed, in any part of the Metropolitan Police District.

The Deputy Superintendent will to-day issue an order calling the attention of Policemen to these resolutions.

No further business was transacted by the Board.

The following orders were issued yesterday forenoon:

F. A. Tallmadge, General Superintendant of Police:

By order of the Board of Commissioners, they have requested me to say that Robert Bowyer has been detailed to-day at your office. G. W. EMBREE,
NEW YORK, May 27, 1857. Clerk. pro tem.

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE METROPOLITAN DISTRICT POLICE, No. 88 White-street.

Daniel Carpenter, Deputy Superintendent:

SIR: The Board of Commissioners have directed me to request you to detail Robert Bowyer to this office. F. A. TALLMADGE,
NEW YORK, May 27, 1857. Gen'l Sup't.

Later in the day, Deputy Carpenter notified Mr. Bowyer of the action of the Board, and that gentleman repaired at once to the office in White-street and reported himself ready to obey the orders of the new Commission. He will be to-day detailed for special duty.

The number of applicants for place increase daily at the office in White-street, but only a few appointments have as yet been made.

The old Board of Commissioners did not hold a formal meeting yesterday, but Mayor Wood, City Judge Russell, and one of the Democratic Aldermen, were closeted in the Mayor's office during the afternoon. Towards evening, Mr. Matsell was sent for. The result of these conferences was kept secret.

Mr. Bowyer's obedience to the new Commissioners is expected to have much weight in determining the wavering to come out.

The Brooklyn Police Coming into Line.

Four of the nine Captains of Police still stand out against the law. There has been a change, however, among the men in the Ninth and Fourteenth Wards, in which places all obey the new law now. Heretofore they have been with the opposition.

The Policemen Won't be Paid Till the Court of Appeals has Settled Matters.

The police force over which Mayor WOOD presides have not received a stiver of their pay for month. Thirty days is not a very long space of time to one who is in funds, but it must be to a policeman, who seldom has any funds in reserve, and relies on his official stipend with which to satisfy the claims of the bakers and grocers who supply him with bread and beans. We hear of no actual starvation yet in the ranks of the Mayor's followers, but inasmuch as the City Treasury is to remain sealed to them until the Court of Appeals utters the "open sesame," they are like to be reduced to great straits, at least. Nor can the appointees of the new Board crow very loudly over their brethren of the old, for as we understand the Comptroller, neither party shall draw a dollar until the last Court has said which is the head.

Mr. FLAGG being seriously inquired of yesterday, expressed his opinion that the "times are sadly out of joint," and he hardly knows what to do in this conflict. It seems hard to hold on to the just dues of these poor policemen whose families are like to suffer from the want of necessaries of life, but melted as is his personal and human bosom with pity for the poor fellows, he can have no official—no financial bowels; he can extend no dollar unless he finds it so nominated in the bond. In a word, we judge from the drift of his remarks that Mr. FLAGG will not open his coffers to the applicants under either Board until the decision of the Court of Appeals has been announced.

But, on the subject of that $10,000 voted by the Common Council to Mayor WOOD, to test the validity of the new Police act, the Comptroller is inexorable. He holds it preposterous that any set of men should undertake to repudiate the whole body of laws passed by the Legislature applying to this City, and wish to open the Treasury to support their action without regard to expense. "I shan't open the Treasury," said Mr. FLAGG, "for any such purpose. The idea of paying for an object like this is simply ridiculous. I shan't open the Treasury to pay any $10,000, until I am compelled to do so by order of Court.

That appointment of five patrolmen by the Board of Supervisors showed, he thinks, a want of good sense and propriety. It was done, evidently, to embarrass the new Commissioners, and, of course, is wanting in good faith. The Courts would undoubtedly say—they could not help saying—it was not an honest exercise of the power vested in the Board, and should not therefore be held of any weight, or entitled to respect.

It is one of the Comptroller's virtues that he always obeys such orders as command him not to pay out money. But, on the last day of April, the following resolution was adopted by the Aldermen:

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and is hereby requested to issue no warrants for or in favor of any person claiming or exercising any official position, by virtue of the recent acts of the State Legislature of this State, relating to this City—namely, an act to build a City Hall in this City; an act to amend the Charter of this City; an act to create a Metropolitan Police; an act to regulate and improve Central Park; and that his Honor the Mayor, and the Clerk of the Common Council be, and are hereby directed to withhold their signatures from any such warrants, if issued, until said acts of said Legislature are established by the Court of the State, before which the legality of said laws is now being determined.

It is another of the Comptroller's virtues that he always sticks to his promises of not paying out. But on the 1st day of May he sent the following circular to those heads of departments whose offices are abolished:

FINANCE DEPARTMENT, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, (No. 5, Hall of Records,) NEW-YORK, April 2, 1857.

SIR: You are hereby notified to discontinue all work for the Corporation after this date, as no further payments can be made for work done under you after April 30, 1857. Yours, respectfully,
A. C. FLAGG, Comptroller.

Meeting of Franco-American Citizens.

A meeting of Franco-American citizens was held on Tuesday night at the hotel of Mons. GAILLARD, in Walker-street, to take into consideration the present state of affairs in our City. At 7 o'clock the meeting was called to order by Mr. J. TARTTER, who moved that Dr. CHARLES KAEMMERER do take the Chair. The motion was carried by acclamation; after which Mr. AUGUSTUS P. MANES was appointed Secretary. Dr. KAEMMERER being conducted to the chair, proceeded to address the meeting in French, denouncing the late acts of the Legislature regarding the City Government. A Committee appointed to draw up resolutions, submitted the following, which were read by the Secretary:

Whereas, It is the duty of legislators to enact laws for the comfort and the prosperity of those they represent; and whereas, the Legislature of the State of New-York, at its last session enacted laws against commercial freedom and against the liberty of the citizens of New-York, in consequence of which enactments our property and our personal liberty stand in danger; and whereas, the people have not only the right to oppose such laws, but it is also their sacred duty to crush down, any and every attempt to put such laws into execution; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we will not sustain the law to suppress intemperance, (so called,) nor the new Charter of the City of New-York, nor the new Police law, all being illegal and unjust laws.

Resolved, That, on the contrary, we will use all constitutional means in our power to prevent such laws to take effect.

Resolved, That we consider the legislators authors of the aforesaid laws, as having enacted them contrary to the mandates of the people they represented, and as having grossly abused their power and authority.

Resolved That we will sustain with all our might the conduct adopted by his Honor Mayor WOOD, and the municipality of the City of New-York.

After several spirited speeches, the resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Patch-work Legislation.

From the Brooklyn Daily Times.

As an instance of the criminal haste and recklessness with which eight hundred laws were passed at Albany during the last session, we call attention to sections 6 and 7 of the act published in our columns of to-day. There we have the "Chief of Police" continued in office after the expiration of his term, and arrangements made for the perpetuity of the position held by him; we have it expressly and particularly set forth how his successors shall be elected. While one batch of our sage legislators was arranging these matters, another was employed in putting through the Metropolitan Police bill, which provides that this same office of Chief of Police should be forthwith abolished. We are not aware at this moment which of the two laws passed after the other, but the point is one of some importance. For if the Brooklyn Charter passed only an hour after the Metropolitan Police law, then the latter, so far as it relates to Brooklyn, to the Chief of Police, the Deputy Superintendents, &c., will become null and void by the action of the repealing clause of the Charter bill. Such incongruous and bungling legislation is almost enough to account for Mayor Wood's contempt of the laws, though it does not justify him in resisting them.

The trouble of our neighbor is easily removed. The Brooklyn City Charter passed April 6—the Brooklyn Times being authority—the Metropolitan Police bill passed April 15—so that if they conflict, the latter is law.

Liquor.

PETER COOPER APPOINTED EXCISE COMMISSIONER.—Hon. Justice DUER, of the Superior Court, Judge INGRAHAM, of the Court of Common Pleas, and Recorder SMITH, upon whom, under the new Excise law, devolves the appointment of the Excise Commissioners, met yesterday at 10 A. M., at the Common Pleas Court Chamber, to appoint a Commissioner to fill the place of ROBERT T. HAWS, Esq., resigned. A large number of names were before them, none of which they were able to agree upon. As a compromise, a choice was made of PETER COOPER, Esq. A letter has been sent to Mr. COOPER, informing him of his appointment. It is not known whether he will accept the proposed honor or not. The Excise Commissioners were to have met at 11 A. M., but as Mr. HASKETT only was present, he announced an adjournment to Thursday morning.

LIQUOR DEALERS' MEETING.—The Liquor Dealers' Society held a special meeting last evening at their head-quarters, Metropolitan Hall, Hester-street. There was a large attendance and the proceedings were unusually animated. The special object of the meeting was to ascertain to what extent the liquor dealers of the City were preparing applications for license to present to the Excise Commissioners. A rumor had got in circulation that large numbers were secretly getting up their petitions, and that they had sent into the Commissioners a good many already. After several speeches denouncing any such procedure, a resolution was passed that not a single member of the Society would present a petition to the Commissioners for a license, and that whoever did should be expelled from the Society. It was stated in this connection, that there were some 1,500 liquor dealers in the City who did not belong to the Society, and who probably would go before the Commissioners.

Opinions were freely expressed upon the appointment of PETER COOPER as Excise Commissioner. It was pretty generally thought that a much better man for the liquor interest might have been named. The objection to Mr. COOPER was, that he would be too pertinacious in giving a literal construction to the new law, and requiring that each applicant should "keep at least three spare beds," besides "stabling and provender."

Port Matters.

LIBELLED FOR PILOTAGE.—The first case of difficulty has arisen under the new Pilot laws. The brig Bloomer, of Weymouth, N. S., it seems, was spoken by a pilot when inward bound on the 15th inst., but refused a pilot. He was informed of the new regulations, and though somewhat in doubt about the matter, expressed his willingness to pay what was legally required of him. He was presented with the bill of pilotage, $30 50, last week, while lying at Brooklyn, but having been misinformed by his consignee as to the law, and told he was only liable to pay half pilorage, he did not pay, but went with the pilot to the consignee's office, where, after much parleying, the parties separated without settling the bill. Things remained in this state until Saturday, when the brig, having discharged her cargo, anchored off the Battery, ready to go to sea, in ballast. Here she was boarded by the Pilot, again demanding his fees. Capt. HANKINSON says he referred him to his consignees, Mr. C. L. DIMON, with whom the business had been left for settlement; that the Pilot said to him, "You foreigners don't mean to pay anything when you come to New-York, unless you are obliged to," to the truth of which Capt. H. assented. Hereupon the Pilot, fearing the brig would sail and avade the payment of the legal fees, libelled the vessel, and Capt. H. on going to the Custom House to clear, found he was anchored. The pilotage, however, was paid at once, and after getting a certificate from the United States Marshal to that effect, he was released. The trouble in this case arose in part from misunderstanding, and partly, no doubt, from disinclination to pay. The costs must have equalled the original bill, besides the detention of the vessel for 24 hours. This is Capt. H.'s first visit to New-York, and he hopes it will be his last.

THE PORT WARDENS.—The Port Wardens are doing a good business, and seem to have their hands full. The average number of their surveys per day is about 47. They have at last found a tangible case for prosecution under the new act. The bark Lucy Ring, lying at Atlantic Basin, was surveyed on Tuesday by a Mr. AVERY, on his own book; the Port Wardens have commenced a prosecution against him, and intend to do the same with all cases of the sort hereafter. Mr. AVERY, it is said, has, since Tuesday, obtained an appointment from Mayor WOOD, under the old Dongan Charter, and will act under it.

In many cases where they have notified agents of vessels that they were violating the law, they have discharged the outsider and sent for the Port Wardens to make the survey.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—A special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, called by the written application of five members, convened at 1½ o'clock yesterday, P. PERIT, Esq., in the Chair. On motion of G. W. BLUNT, members proceeded at once to ballot for three Pilot Commissioners. The present incumbents were unanimously elected, viz: CHARLES H. MARSHALL, ROBERT L. TAYLOR, and E. E. MORGAN The President announced that the Port Warden Committee would report at their next regular meeting. The Chamber then adjourned.

Commissioners of Emigration.

The Commissioners of Emigration met in Worth street, on Wednesday, the President, G. C. VERPLANCK, Esq., in the chair.

The following communication was received from the Commissioners for the removal of the Quarantine. The communication was referred to the President and counsel of the Board, (Mr. JOHN H. DAVIES,) to report to the Board next week. Mayor POWELL, of Brooklyn, took a seat at the Board, being, ex officio, a member of that body.

Upon a communication being received and read from a gentleman in Virginia having lands for sale, which he judged would be very eligible for emigrants, a good deal of badinage was exchanged among members of the Board. The Secretary was directed to reply to the letter, stating that the Board declined taking part in attempting to direct emigration either from any place or into any particular channel.

After the transaction of some other unimportant routine business, the Board adjourned. The following is the usual weekly report:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS FOR THE REMOVAL OF THE QUARANTINE STATION, No. 23 William street, New York.

Metropolitan and Suburban Squatters.

A law was enacted by the last Legislature which completely upsets the doctrine of "Squatter Sovereignty" as found in the case of people who pitch their shanties on unenclosed grounds without paying rent, or saying "by your leave." Hon. JAMES S. SLUYTER introduced this bill into the Assembly more particularly at the instance of F. B. CUTTING, Esq., who stands seized of some open land in Brooklyn, bordering on Gowanus Bay, which is densely inhabited by a colony of Connaught men or some other clan.

This locality, known to the residents of the vicinity as "Tinkersville," was visited by the Tenement Committee last Summer, and then graphically described in the TIMES. The yellow fever made a partial lodgment here, and the authorities threatened to indict Mr. CUTTING for permitting such tenants to occupy his premises, to the great danger and jeopardy of the lives of the citizens. Under the old provisions of the law the only legal remedy was an action of ejectment, likely to be prolonged six or eight months, if the defendants chose, and to cost the plaintiff from $100 to $150. The design of the present act was to place the power of a speedy dispossession in the hands of the owner of squatter lands, to be used whenever a sudden exigency may arise, as in the case of yellow fever. Now, on a notice of ten days given to the squatter, the owner may enter and immediately proceed to remove the interloper.

Preliminary steps have already been taken by owners of property in New-York and Brooklyn which the squatters at present occupy, to have them removed. In accordance with the provisions of the bill, notices have been or will be served upon them, commanding them to take up their shanties and walk. The Sheriff of Brooklyn, yesterday, was expecting to receive a large number of these notices with the intention of having them served by his deputies. He apprehends no resistance on the part of the squatters, but is prepared to call the power of the county to his aid, if it should in any case be offered.

What Shall be Done with the Crystal Palace?

Yesterday afternoon the Special Committee of the Board of Aldermen, of which Alderman WILSON is Chairman, met in the City Hall to hear evidence in reference to the removal of the Crystal Palace.

JOHN H. WHITE, Esq., the receiver of the Crystal Palace, stated that he wished the Committee to hear only one witness, namely, Mr. GEORGE W. STANTON. That gentleman was a machinist and had been Superintendent of the building. Mr. STANTON on being called, deposed that in his opinion it would require 10 months or a year carefully to take the building down. There were several thousand screws, they are oxidized, rusted, and would require careful removal. Five hundred men had been employed in putting up the building, and the time occupied was more than nine months. It would require 200 men to remove it, and three months time, if demolished and converted into old iron. If taken down with the intention of being re-erected elsewhere, the material would be worth $150,000. The original cost was $550,000 for the entire erection. There had been employed 1,800 tons of cast iron, and 200 tons of wrought iron, and many thousands, perhaps millions of bolts. The Crystal palace had been built in sections, but it was not possible to take it down by sections in the order as erected.

Mr. WHITE then stated that he had a number of signatures of property-holders in the vicinity, appended to a memorial asking for the permanent continuance of the Palace in its present location. He desired to leave it with the Committee.

A gentleman stated that he owned half a block on the corner of Sixth-avenue and Forty-third-street he had signed the memorial, and thought the Palace an advantage to that locality. He thought the resident population were generally favorable to such a view of the subject.

Mr. JOSEPH B. SIMPSON, who stated that he represented the American Institute, expressed his anxiety to be heard.

A gentleman present objected; attention ought to be confined to the property-holders pro and con. It had been understood there should be no speeches. He proceeded to argue the importance of the retention of the Crystal Palace. The Chairman said that was not the question, and checked that line of argument. A sufficient number of petitions had been received, and from the American Institute in particular.

Mr. WHITE said the ground in dispute was derived from the Dongan Charter in 1686. It was intended for a burying ground, but was not adapted for that. On July 1, 1857 the resolution was adopted by the Mayor and Corporation appropriating the ground for a reservoir. That had never been rescindod, and while the City did not need it for that purpose, the City could not convert it into a park. The whole ground of the remonstrants was based on this, namely, that it had been dedicated for a park. Admitting that it had been done without the knowledge of the Corporation by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, it would be illegal to erect a park in that way. The Corporation counsel had certain requisitions of law to follow. Even if the map was valid, was there not a reservation on the face of the map, was there not a notice that the City should at any time use it for a station-house or other thing. Had not the City reserved their rights in the matter? Undoubtedly they had.

The remonstrants were chiefly non-residents. Mr. BANKS resides an Fifth-avenue. The petitioners reside chiefly near the Palace. A park is not required on that spot; the ground is not adapted to it; it would be a positive nuisance. Would it be doing justice to the City to create a Park there? The walls of the Reservoir render it unfit. It is a small plot of ground, wet and springy from the drainage of the Reservoir, and the large Central Park is near. The City ought not to give away a plot worth $75,000, merely to please these remonstrants. The Chairman well know that they had not visited, officially, the place with the Committee. Not a single remonstrant showed his head. He had thought it would be cheaper to buy out these remonstrants. In 1851, when everybody was going to get rich, these lots were let for a mere trifle, and now he supposed each lot would sell for $4,000.

If the Committee determine the Palace should come down, it is important to consider the time requisite. The American Institute would require it this season. In Winter, it could not be done, and could only be attempted after next frost. It would then have to be destroyed entirely or removed to the Central Park. He had called on Mr. WALDO HUTCHINS to ascertain how they were proceeding. He intimated there had been doubts as to the constitutionality of the law, and that no grading was going on, so that it would be impossible to talk in reference to the removal of the Palace thither for a long time, at least. Mr. WHITE then submitted a resolution authorizing the Receiver to have two years' time for the removal, if judged expedient. In the mean time to keep the ground in good condition.

Another resolution authorizes the Receiver a blank number of months for removal, after receiving notice to the effect that the Central Park was ready for its reception.

Mr. DATER, of Forty-second-street, argued, on the other side, that its removal would improve the value of property there. He admitted his purchase had taken place since the erection of the Palace. Between a park and a palace, he preferred a park, but did not know it was reserved for a reservoir. He had been a property owner there only three months. Had observed no bad characters about there. He thought people would build when it was settled that the Palace would be removed.

Dr JOHN MILBAU presented to the Committee for examination his deed of property on 40th street, in the vicinity of which he made a purchase at the Corporation sale. No first-rate dwellings would, in his opinion, be erected if the Palace remained. He had bought the property under the impression that a square would be there, he wished to have the place as a residence. Some classes of business might possibly be benefited by its remaining. He paid $1,270 for his four lots and rented them for $500 a year when the Palace was erected.

Mr. WHITE in cross-examination, inquired what he would sell his lots for. Witness declined to say, but if the Palace remained he should certainly sell them.

Mr. BANKS then read a communication from Mr. NESMYTH, a property-holder, who thinks the Palace a great nuisance, and proceeded to argue the general question that no privilege could properly be granted to the Crystal Palace Association. It had been declared dissolved by the laws of the State and that in truth the Receiver was proceeding in defiance of an order of a Judge of the Supreme Court.

The presumption was in favor of the right of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to dedicate as they had done this land for a Park. In addition to this an ordinance had actually been passed by the Aldermen in 1845 for planting trees on this very spot in connection with the Reservoir. He then read a letter from JOHN LEVERIDGE, Esq., Corporation Counsel at the time of the sale, stating that he had authorized the map to be drawn in which the property in question was marked as a part, and also setting forth the announcement of the auctioneer to the same effect. The last point made was, that the Common Council could not lease to Mr. WHITE as Receiver, or to any other person, any public land, under the Charter, unless at public auction.

After some indiscriminate asperity between the Receiver and his opponents the papers were taken up by the Chairman of the Committee and privilege given to gentlemen on both sides to introduce any further documents to be handed to him on the subject. Nothing definite was said as to any other meeting; it is believed, however, that the Committee will report in a fortnight.

Shall the Sound and River Steamboats Stop Up Town?

The Special Committee of the Board of Aldermen on the removal of the steamboat landings on the East and North Rivers, met in the library of the City Hall on Wednesday, Alderman STEERS in the Chair.

Mr. ROBERT SHIELDS, No. 245 East Broadway, argued in favor of the removal of these landings. He believed it would have the effect of relieving Broadway. Is a property owner on the East and North River, and also in the lower part of the City.

Mr. BRYAN MCCABILL, (member of the Board of Councilmen,) a property owner on the east side of the town, followed on the same side. He thought that danger to life resulted from the thickly congregated steam and ferry-boats.

Mr. GEO. H. TALLMAN, of Eighth-street, argued on the same side. He contended that, the greatest good to the greatest number ought to be the governing principle in this matter. The lower part of the City ought to be left exclusively for our foreign commerce. Monopolists ought not to incommode it by matters purely domestic. This gentleman owns property in Thirty-fourth-street.

Ex-Alderman KELLY contended at some length and warmly, against the removal. He feared the steamboats would go to Brooklyn or Jersey City, if they were removed.

Mr. TALLMAN said as to the signatures of carmen in favor of keeping the boats where they are it amounted to little—their occupation would be rendered more busy by the removal. As to the boats going to Brooklyn, it might be met by a prediction that other and new steamboats would take the passengers from the upper part of the City, and so the City would be accommodated just as well.

The question was agitated at some length by other speakers, but no further argument made.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

THE LATE FATAL AFFRAY ON A STATEN ISLAND FERRY-BOAT—CORONER'S INQUEST.—An inquest upon the body of THOMAS QUINN, the hack-driver, who died at the New-York Hospital on Tuesday from the effects of a stab in the abdomen, received last Sunday, during a fight on board the Staten Island ferry-boat Josephine, was commenced yesterday before Coroner PERRY, at the office of the Coroners' in Chambers-street. Several witnesses were examined, after which the inquest was adjourned until to-day.

Dr. George S. Kator deposes that deceased was admitted to the New-York Hospital on Sunday evening about 7 o'clock, suffering from a wound in the abdomen, near the median line, about 2½ inches in length, through which some 10 feet of intestines protruded; his general appearance was very fair, considering the amount of injury, and evinced proof that he had not lost much blood; he was so much intoxicated when admitted that he seemed not to be sensible to the pain of the operation performed of returning the bowels to the cavity of the abdomen by enlarging the wound; the wound was evidently inflicted with some sharp instrument, and was jagged, and looked as though be instrument had been ripped upwards; deceased appeared to do well until Tuesday forenoon, when his pulse became more frequent; he rapidly sank until 3 o'clock of that day, when he died from the effects of the injuries; I have since made a post mortem examination: I found in the abdomen evidences of peritoneal inflammation sufficient to cause death; the other organs presented a healthy appearance.

Andrew Donnelly testified that he accompanied Quinn (the deceased) to Staten Island on Sunday; that while on the Island they drank together several times: this witness continued, "we remained on the Island about two hours, when we took the boat for the City; we were on the boat but a little while when a fight began; I was so drunk that I remember nothing more that happened."

John McCarty, one of Donnelly and Quinn's associates, testified that Donnelly got a fighting with "Mose" immediately after the boat had started. Quinn tried to get Donnelly away, when "Mose" turned upon him, struck him with his fist, and following him up, stabbed him in the abdomen with a knife—a small pen knife—which he held in his hand. "Mose" then pursued Donnelly and a young man named Breslin, but they both managed to escape his knife, the former by leaping over a railing. Jacob F. Smith, Superintendent of the Staten Island ferry boats, swore to a different state of things. He said that Donnelly and Quinn, and the party who were with them, created a disturbance on board tha boat the moment they stepped aboard; that they assaulted and "hustled about" several unoffending passengers, and acted otherwise most shamefully. He (Smith) interfered to preserve order, when he was assailed with violent and obscene language; he essayed to put a stop to the trouble, and in this effort he had the approval of Mose, (the prisoner,) who was standing near by; Donnelly's party attacked "Mose," knocken him down and kicked him about the head, and left him lying bleeding upon the deck; Smith's attention was called to another part of the boat to suppress another disturbance, and on returning to the upper or pilot deck, where the first fight began, he found "Mose" bleeding badly, with a penknife in his hand; he soon afterwards learned that Quinn had been stabbed.

Several other witnesses will be examined to-day.

"Mose," the accused party, is a very respectable appearing young man. He asserts that he used the knife only in self-defence, to protect himself against the unprovoked and brutal assault of a gang of drunken and desperate villains, who seemed intent on mischief and murder. "Mose" was very roughly handled. His face is yet black and swollen from the treatment he received, and his head is cut in several places.

INDECENT ASSAULT.—H. G. Pekeler, keeper of a sailors' boarding-house at No. 2 Carlisle-street, was taken before Justice CONNOLLY, yesterday morning, charged with committing a rape upon the person of Eliza Faber, a domestic in his employ. The alleged outrage was perpetrated on Tuesday night in presence of Pekeler's own daughter, and was attempted to be renewed, when the victim, Eliza, screamed so lustily as to attract the attention of persons in the street, who, with Policeman Dwyer, forced open the doors and arrested Pekeler, and took him to the Station-house, though not easily, for he made a determined resistance. The accused was committed for trial in default of $1,000. The complainant was also committed as a witness.

STABBED.—Robert Jones, of No. 16 Clinton-place was stabbed in the shoulder on Tuesday night by one of two men who attacked him without cause in the vicinity of his residence. The wound is not considered serious.

GENERAL WALKER A PASSENGER!

GREAT EXCITEMENT

Close of the Nicaraguan War.

The Illinois en route with $2,000,000.

Island in Panama Bay Ceded to England.

NEW ORLEANS, Wednesday, May 27.

The steamship Empire City is coming up the river from New-York, on the 18th inst., viâ Havana.

She connected at the latter port with the steamship Granada, from Aspinwall, and brings the California mails and passengers of May 5.

The steamship Illinois left Aspinwall on the 19th inst. for New-York, with the California mails and passengers and about two million dollars in specie.

Among the passengers on board the Empire City are General WILLIAM WALKER and staff, who have abandoned the field of operations in Central America.

General WALKER capitulated, on the 1st of May, to Captain DAVIS, of the U. S. sloop-of-war St. Mary's, and with his staff and two hundred and sixty men, the remains of his army, were brought to Panama by the St. Mary's.

The Costa Ricans were not known in the articles of capitulation.

The Government of New-Granada has ceded an island in the Bay of Panama to England, in settlement of the McIntosh claim, which had nearly caused a war between the two nations.

A LATER DISPATCH.

The steamship Empire City reached her wharf at seven o'clock this evening. Ten thousand people were present to receive General WALKER, who was accompanied by Col. JACQUES, Mr. PILCHER and Mr. TURNER, Agent of the Associated Press, in a carriage, to the St. Charles Hotel, where General WALKER made a speech, expressing his thanks for the splendid reception given him, saying that in the mass before him he recognized the American love of liberty, and assuring them that victory was still sure.

The greatest excitement prevails in the city, and the St. Charles Hotel is besieged by thousands anxious and eager to see and hear the General. He was obliged to speak twice before the crowd was satisfied.

The California papers received, discredit the story of General CRABBE's defeat and execution.

General WALKER surrendered because Capt. DAVIS signified his intention of seizing the schooner Granada, which held his (WALKER's) reserve.

General WALKER was kept a close prisoner by the U. S. Commodore at Panama, notwithstanding the terms of capitulation which allowed him and his officers their liberty, and gave them the privilege of retaining their side-arms.

Lieut. STRAIN died at Aspinwall on the 15th inst.

The California news, though two weeks later, is unimportant.

The dates from Havana are to the 24th inst., but the advices received therefrom are uninteresting.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Piracy Case—Consular Plea of Ignorance—Probability of a Dismissal of the Case, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, May 27.

EX-Consul JENKINS, arrested on a charge of piracy at the complaint of Dr. VAN CAMP, is still lodged in jail. I understand that he expects to escape on the plea of ignorance of his powers and duties. Strange to say he has sent in no report whatever to the State Department as to the disposition made of the funds accruing from sale of the property of VAN CAMP and others seized by him.

The Consular regulations and instructions make it the duty of all Consular officers to report promptly every such transaction, and forward papers and vouchers, showing precisely what moneys are received, and what is done with them. JENKINS' failure to do anything of the sort will naturally be taken as prima facie evidence that he knew his proceedings were illegal, and, consequently, not calculated to be a profitable subject for official report.

The authenticated papers on file in the State Department, in relation to the case of the bark St. Mary's, out of which JENKINS' difficulty in part grew, show that there never was a shadow of justification or provocation for his proceedings. The charge, it will be remembered, was that VAN CAMP had piratically seized and appropriated the St. Mary's and her cargo, to which her former Captain, one MARTIN, made affidavit. Among the official papers filed are the complaint of Captain MARTIN to VAN CAMP, while Consul, calling for a survey of his vessel, the report of surveyors condemning her, the report of survey on her hatches, the conveyance of the vessel to her purchaser at the Consul's sale by Captain MARTIN, a power of attorney from MARTIN to JOSEPH A. WILSON to settle with Consul VAN CAMP, on account of the sale of the St. Mary's and cargo, and WILSON'S receipt in full, as agent of MARTIN, given to VAN CAMP when the business was closed. Thus, it will be seen, that it was impossible for a charge of fraud to lie against VAN CAMP, and that MARTIN'S affidavit, under pretext of which JENKINS proceeded against VAN CAMP, is flatly contradicted by written documents under his own seal. ECCLESIASTICAL.

General Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church.

SIXTH DAY—Morning Session.

After the usual devotional exercises the report of the Presbytery of Big spring, Pa., was read. It accepted the proposed basis of union, one ministerial member alone objecting

After considerable discussion the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That $1,400 be apportioned among the delegates, according to the distances they have to travel. 2. That the delinquent Presbyteries be required to raise the amount assessed upon them for the delegate fund of last year. 3. That the delinquency of those Presbyteries who have not raised the amounts assessed shall be deducted from moneys due them from the Synod.

General A. C. Niven presented the following protest, which sufficiently explains itself:

The undersigned, Ministers and Elders, being delegated to the General Synod of the Associate Reformed Church of North America, now in session, do protest solemnly against the action of this Synod in reference to an organic union with the Associate Church.

Because 1st. The whole of the said proceedings are unconstitutional and void for this reason, among others: because of the complex and uncertain state of the vote of Presbyteries, on account of which the Synod had not the constitutional power to decide at this time.

Because 2d, While the basis in question was overtured to the Presbyteries for adoption and amendment, it was adopted by this Synod without amendment. Although only eight Presbyteries out of twenty-seven were without exception in favor of such action, of the remaining nineteen Presbyteries, six rejected the basis without qualification, seven required essential amendments, and the remaining six desired amendments.

Because, 3d. The basis of union contains articles of union which are contrary to the constitution of the Associate Reformed Church, and others of doubtful disputation.

Because, 4th. The said basis contains terms of communion which virtually cut us off from all Christian fellowship with other evangelical denominations.

Because, 5th. These objectionable principles are forced upon the minority by the arbitrary exercise of the rule that a majority shall govern.

Because, 6th. After having tried in good faith for years, we believe it to be utterly impracticable to adopt any testimony as a term of communion in addition to our present standards, as they are now declared to be our fixed testimony.

Because, 7th. The union with another and distinct body of Christians, and the adoption of additional terms of communion are a positive violation of the treaty or compact by which the Associate Reformed Synod of New-York united with the Synods of the West in 1855.

Because, 8th. These additional terms of communion have no warrant (in our judgment) in the Word of God, the example of Christ, the teachings of the Apostles, or the constitution and standards of the Associate Reformed Church.

For which causes, we, the undersigned, to maintain a good conscience before God and men, to vindicate the integrity of the Church, and to preserve its peace and harmony, do enter this our solemn protest.

Wednesday, May 27, 1857.

This protest was also presented:

We do here respectfully inform this Synod that we enter our dissent from every term of communion additional to those already held by the Associate Reformed Church.

Wm. McMillan,
J. R. McCallister,
John R Warner.

Rev. James Presely presented another protest as follows:

We dissent from the action of the General Synod in adopting the basis of union—

1 Because of its form. A "fixed testimony" separate and apart from the Confession of Faith, we believe to be an unnecessary multiplication of the forms of communion and standards of the Church. We are all conscious that we have more terms of communion, now, in all the Churches, than we can practically administer; to multiply them and the books that contain them can do no good, and may do harm.

2. Because, in our opinion, matters of doubtful disputation are made terms of communion in the church by this basis. The eighth Article teaches, or appears to teach, that the "assurance of salvation" is of the essence of saving faith.

The ninth Article teaches that evangelical repentance is a fruit of a justifying faith. Thus making repentance a means instead of an immediate work of the Holy Spirit on the heart. And, because this has been introduced as an argument into the body of a declaration which is to be a term of communion.

We dissent from the Article on "Covenanting," because the Article does not define what the "Social Covenanting" contemplated in the Article, is. Some say it is a simple vowing—others, what is technically known as "Public Social Covenanting." We believe that while this is the least exceptional Article ever presented to this Synod, yet it is liable to the principal objections which have been made against this, as a moral duty.

We dissent from the "Formula of Questions," because it is our opinion that the drafting of such a formula belongs to the United Church.

Lastly, we dissent from the action of the Synod in adopting the basis, on constitutional grounds. We believe no definite overture was sent down to the Presbyteries—the true being for adoption or amendment. The Synod has not made any amendment, thus disregarding the opinions of the Presbyteries. And because it is not competent to this General Synod to close this union with the Associate Presbyterian Church unless the question of union be definitely presented in overture to the Presbyteries.

James Presely,	P. C. Robertson,
Arch'd Nesbitt,	Robert Ross,
J. R. Andrews,	W. M. Boyce,
M. M. Brown,	W. H. Presley.

A discussion ensued, which resulted in the appointment of a Committee to answer the protestants. Rev. Messrs. Finley and McKinstry, and Elder Huey were the Committee.

Rev. Dr. Pressly offered the following resolution, which, after considerable debate, was withdrawn:

Resolved, That the word "forbearance," as used in the amendment to the resolution on the basis, should not be understood as giving a license to any one to teach or propagate any principle inconsistent with the article in the basis, but as comprehending the case of those who, though not fully prepared to express their entire approbation of every one of those articles, will not, in the meantime, offer any practical opposition to them.

That part of the report of the Committee on Missions which referred to the estate of the late Henry Smith, of Indiana, was then considered. The proposition of the Committee was, that the balance of the money from said estate which would accrue to the Synod should be appropriated to the support of Foreign Missions. An amendment was offered to devote the funds to the use of the child of the deceased; but after long conversation, the proposition of the Committee was adopted.

A resolution was offered that the memorial to establish a mission in Northern India should be referred to the Board of Agency. The resolution was amended by Rev. J. G. Brown, of Pittsburg, so as to give the Board power to act on the subject before the next meeting of the General Synod, and in its amended form it passed.

Rev. Dr. Forsyth was instructed to present the memorial (adopted some days since) to the Evangelical Conference to be held in Berlin, in November next, as he intends to meet with that body. Rev. John R. Clement was deputed to represent the Associate Reformed Church, as a corresponding member, in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, and to convey to that body such resolutions as the Synod might send.

The following gentlemen were elected members of the Board of Agency for the ensuing year: Messrs. J T. Pressly, J. B. Dale, R. D Harper, Robert Dunlap, T. B. Rich, S T. Huey and Robert Gracie.

It was resolved that Messrs. Pressly and Dale should be a committee to print ten thousand copies of the minutes of the General Synod, and that an order be given to the Treasurer of the General Synod to appropriate funds for the purpose.

There was an ineffectual attempt to make the order of the day for three o'clock, an extra judicial conference on the state of religion.

A resolution was offered by Elder Huey, in view of the fact that members of the Synod had left for home, and thus hindering the action of the body on important business, that in future, the several Presbyteries be instructed to ascertain if possible whether their delegates can attend the Synod at all its sittings, unless providentially called away.

Rev. Mr. McNulty closed the session with prayer.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Moderator opened the session with prayer.

Upon motion of Rev. Dr. Pressly, Rev. J. G. Brown was appointed on the Board of Agency in place of Rev. Robert Gracie, who declined to serve.

Rev. Dr. Pressly presented the report of the Committee appointed to confer with a Committee of the Associate Synod on the basis of union. It closes with resolutions that the basis as amended by the Associate Synod should be adopted and sent to the Associate Synod for concurrence.

The Auditing Committee reported in favor of the sale of the land in the State of Iowa, donated to the General Synod by Mr. James Irving, and the report was adopted.

The Auditing Committee reported in favor of assessing the several Presbyteries for $7,000, to be appropriated to the Domestic Missions. The assessment to be apportioned at the rate of 20 cents per member.

Thirty dollars were appropriated to Rev. R. D. Harper as compensation for his labor as clerk of the Committee of Missions, and $10 to the sexton of the Church, where the Synod held its sessions.

On motion of Rev. J. G. Brown, Dr. Forsyth was also appointed a delegate from this Body to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland.

Dr. Pressly, from the Committee appointed last year to print the testimony and basis of union, stated that the amount for this body to raise toward that object was $16, and he lacked $6 of that sum. The deficiency was immediately made up.

A resolution was offered and adopted that when the Synod adjourn it do so to meet in Xenia, Ohio, on Wednesday, the 13 h of May, 1858.

On motion of Elder Schooler, it was resolved that as there were no funds in the Treasury of the General Synod, all the appropriations asked for should be paid out of the Foreign Mission Fund, and that the congregations of the several Synods be urged to pay in their contributions to the General Synod fund immediately, so that the fund would be reimbursed.

Elder A. C. Navin, of Monticello, N. Y., at an early stage in the deliberations of the Synod, proposed resolutions in favor of union with the Associate Reformed Synod in the South, but they were laid on the table at that time, and to-day on being called up, met a like fate.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the Railroads that permitted the members to pass over their roads at reduced rates.

Revs. J. G. Brownе, R. D. Harper and Rev. Mr. Gowdy, were appointed a Committee to nominate clergymen to preach sermons before the Synod at its next session.

The Synod adjourned to 7½ o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

Rev. Dr. McCarroll opened the meeting with prayer.

The resolution appointing Xenia, Ohio, as the Synod's next place of meeting was reconsidered, and the matter was referred to a Committee to report upon. They recommended that the Synod should meet in November next in the First A. P. R. Church in Allegheny, and also that should the terms in which this Synod accepted the basis of union be satisfactory to the Associate Synod, this Synod should invite the other to a General Synod upon the same ratio of representation as this General Synod, to meet in Pittsburgh or Allegheny—prepared to make arrangements for the consummation of the union.

After considerable conversation, the report was amended, and the Synod decided to meet in Allegheny at the usual time in May next, and the invitation to the Associate Synod was referred to a Committee, to act upon at their discretion.

The Committee on the State of Religion reported a very interesting narrative of the operations of the Church for the Synodical year. It detailed the ministerial changes, ordinations, added licentiates, students of theology, certificates of dismission, deaths, &c., and the action and views of the Presbyteries with reference to the adoption of the basis. The report of the whole showed that the Church, in its varied fields of labor, received adequate support and was performing a good work, the fruits of which were visible in the increased feeling manifested in religious things. The report was accepted.

The Committee on Overtures on the Union of the Reformed Presbyterian Churches recommended that the overture on union from the Presbyterian Synod of North America be on the table till the next meeting of the next General Synod.

The Committee appointed to reply to the protest signed by Rev. Dr. McCarroll answered as follows:

The reasons of protest are expressed in eight propositions, containing statements of opinion or of fact, in regard to every one of which it were sufficient to say that the judgment of this Synod is in diametrical opposition to that of the Protesters. We may, however, briefly notice three reasons:

The constitutional principle represented to have been violated in the action of the Synod—supposed to be referred to in the 1st reason—evidently supposed that, after the Presbyteries shall have been consulted, the Synod shall exercise its own judgment in the disposition of the matter overtured. And this becomes especially necessary where the returns show the vote of the Presbyteries to be complex and uncertain. The 2d reason of protest shows that the basis was overtured to the Presbyteries for adoption if they should think proper, and it conceals the fact stated in the preamble to the resolution of the Synod that a majority of the Presbyteries did report in favor of accepting the basis as it is, rather than fail of obtaining the union.

In relation to the assertion which constitutes the third reason, it is sufficient to say that a large majority of the Synod has declared that in its judgment there is no article in this basis which is not embodied in the Standards of the A. R Church, or has in some way received its sanction. And that the General Synod of 1856, by an almost unanimous vote, declared that in the testimony there was nothing inconsistent with our ecclesiastical standards.

As the terms of communion, which is the fourth reason of Protest, are represented as "cutting us off from all Christian fellowship with other evangelical denominations," are not specified, it is enough to say that, in the judgment of this Synod, this basis contains no such terms of communion.

The Brethren have not assigned any reason why the exercise of the rule that the "majority should govern," should, in this instance, be considered arbitrary. This whole subject has been before the church for years; it has been discussed particularly and fully; the utmost liberty of debate was allowed, and the vote finally stood—yeas, 64; nays 38. We can see no reason why it should be considered arbitrary, that the judgment of this majority rather than of this minority should rule?

The sixth reason expresses a belief or opinion of these brethren. Let them enjoy their opinion. This Synod has believed differently. The Synod of last year virtually expressed a different belief, and several preceding Synods likewise. Perhaps the opinion of these brethren should be regarded as of more account than all these.

In reply to the 7th reason of protest, we remark that at the very time the union with the New-York Synod was formed, the Synod of the West was negotiating for union with the Associate Synod. The Synod of New York knew that; and it knew that at its previous meetings, the Synod of the West had pledged itself to receive a testimony as a term of communion. And at the very meeting at which this union was formed with the New-York Synod, a basis was proposed to the Associate Synod, by the Synod of the West, containing the very articles in the testimony now most objected to. How then can our brethren maintain such a position as is embodied in this reason.

With any such an understanding of its terms, the proposition for union with them would not have been entertained by the Synod of the West for an hour.

Finally, this Synod entertains a totally different opinion of the terms of Communion contained in this basis from that expressed by these brethren in their eighth reason. The Synod of 1856, in which their representatives were present, contained a totally different opinion. Let the one opinion weigh against the other.

W. FINDLEY,
M. McKINSTRY, } Committee.

The Moderator hoped that the last clause in the answer to the Sixth reason would be amended in some way.

Gen. A. C. Navin expressed his wish that the answers would remain and be published to the world, just as it was drawn up, for all understood what the sneer meant.

Several members said that it might be effaced from the report, but never could be from the memories of those whom it was intended to reflect upon.

The answers were adopted with the exception of the obnoxious clause of the sixth answer, (printed in italics,) which was stricken out.

Upon motion it was resolved that Rev. Mr. Millen be appointed as alternate to the moderator, and preach the opening sermon at the next meeting of General Synod; also, that Rev. Dr. J. B. Dales be invited to preach a sermon on the "Conversion of the Jews."

The thanks of Synod were returned to their friends in New-York and vicinity who had so kindly entertained them during their sojourn.

The Committee on Education presented their report, which was adopted.

The Treasurer's report was read and approved.

No other business being before the meeting, they adjourned after singing, prayer and the benediction, to meet again in Allegany in May, 1858.

Baptist Free Mission Convention.

The Fourteenth Annual Meeting of the Baptist Free Mission Society commenced its session yesterday in Macdougal-street Baptist Church, between Spring and Prince streets. The Board of Managers held a private meeting in the basement of the Church previous to the assembling of the Convention, for the purpose of arranging business.

The Convention opened at 20 minutes past 10 o'clock by Rev. Hiram Hutchings, of Roxbury, Mass., (Moderator,) giving out the 319th hymn from Watts & Ritson's collection, which was sung by the members present.

Rev. W. S. Hall, of Phœnixville, Penn., was appointed Recording Secretary. Mr. Hall occasionally ministers to a colored congregation of Methodists, but no objection was raised on this account to his sitting as a delegate.

Rev. A. L. Post, of Montrose, Pa., read the report of the Board of Trustees:

The Hayden Mission, early established at Port-au-Prince, and continued from the beginning in charge of Rev. W. L. Judd, has had numerous obstacles to contend with, and has been sustained in existence by dint of great sacrifices on the part of their devoted missionary, and its friends. Yet the Board still hopes for success, and will persevere in sustaining the mission. The society has no mission at present in Africa, but one is proposed at Sierra Leone, and a missionary is ready to enter that field.

Brothers Bacon and Belcher have come over to the mission, the latter has embarked for Burmah with his wife, and the former is engaged as one of the editors of the Baptist.

The mission among the refugees in Canada West has been continued and enlarged with great success. The missionary has suffered from an inadequate salary, and sickness in his family. At Toronto he baptised 20, and at Dresden 11 converts. Other missionaries have been appointed, who report favorably of the Canadian field. This report concludes by stating that the friends of the Mission should not forget the 40,000 refugees who have felt the iron of Slavery in their souls.

The Kansas, Oregon, and Minnesota Missions were favorably referred to. The Kansas Mission should be strengthened.

Rev. Edward Matthews was laboring in England, preaching and lecturing upon Slavery. The common people heard him gladly.

The expenditures have been much increased on account of the removal and other matters; the receipts have also increased in an equal ratio, but not in proportion to their wants. The death of Moses Bartholomew, who bequeathed half of his estate to the Society, was alluded to, and the prospects of the Society were encouraging.

The Republican movement was considered favorable to Freedom. The failure of the Missionary Union to come up to their expectations was spoken of as having discouraging effects upon the cause.

The report was accepted, and that portion of it which referred to the Haytien Mission was given to a Committee.

Rev. Mr. Warden then led in prayer, and the meeting adjourned till 3 o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The services were opened by singing, and prayer by Rev. A. Wait, after which the Nominating Committee made their report, and the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year:

Rev. Hiram Hutchings, of Mass., President; F. W. Tuerey, Recording Secretary; N. L. Post, Corresponding Secretary; George Curtis, Asa Freeman and N. Brown, Treasurers; and a large list of Vice Presidents and Trustees.

The Committee of Arrangements reported, recommending that the Board appoint the next place of meeting, and that Joseph W. Sawyer and John Duke be the preachers for next year.

The Committee on Enrollment reported that there were twenty seven delegates in attendance, representing societies and missions from the following States: New York, Vermont, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New-Jersey, Indiana and Ohio. There were also present Rev. W. L. Judd, from Port au Prince, and M. D. Kempsey, from Madison University. Three of the delegates were ladies.

The Free Baptist Church of Indiana, it was stated, has passed resolutions that the Church was the enemy of all sin, among which it ranked Slavery, war, intemperance, licentiousness, secret societies, Sabbath breaking and profanity—any of which should subject the offender to non-fellowship—and a committee was appointed to commune with this Church, as they were evidently of the right spirit. A free church was defined to mean a church which had no fellowship, direct or indirect, with Slavery.

Rev. Thomas Cravens said the Church of Christ should hold no fellowship with crime. Slavery being a sin, the church should clear itself of all connection with it; every branch of the church could elect its own officers, and have its own discipline, but as independent bodies they should all cease any connection with those who held fellowship with sin, and he considered the Union Churches were indirectly connected with slaveholding.

Deacon James Howe, of Jersey City, said he had tried for more than twenty years to have an Anti-Slavery Free Baptist Church; he had mixed with Anti-Slavery men very much, and loved to be with those who sought the emancipation of the Slave. He was, however, a poor man, and having a large family could not raise an Anti-Slavery Church himself. Then what should he do with his children on the Sabbath day? He could not call them away from the Union Church, of which himself, his wife, and six children, and his three sons were members, and while his pastor remained in it, how could he advise his family to leave? If he were alone he might do as he pleased, but as he loved to see his children go to church, he could not advise them to leave the Union. Two of his children had gone to Kansas, and would no doubt do all in their power for the good of the Slave, and for a Free Mission Church.

Rev. Wm. Tellinghuest, (Vermont,) after a few remarks, asked Brother Cravens if he were invited to become pastor of a church which is of Anti-Slavery faith, but has some indirect connection with somebody that is not free from Slavery, what should he do? He wanted light on the subject.

Rev. Mr. Cravens replied that he would become the pastor of such a church provided it would become independent, and have no fellowship with those churches which countenanced Slavery. With regard to the remarks of Brother Howe, he thought that if was not altogether a matter of necessity for him to belong to the church to which he and his family did belong. He and them, and four others, could easily join together, and worship God, as an independent church. The same course taken in raising the Indiana Free Church. You could never change the constitution of these churches; it must either be secession or revolution.

Elder Simon Aaron (Norristown, Pa.,) believed that what was right should be done. The great object in the Church organization, was to "come out."

Rev. W. Goodell (N. Y. Free Congregationalist) said that it seemed self-evident that the mission of a Christian Church was to do Christ's work, and oppose all sin, such as intemperance, licentiousness, and slavery in all their forms. The Christian Church should be first pure in its own character and then call all sinners to repentance, to show that nothing was of any avail till they should plead the cause of the oppressed, the fatherless and the widow. As to the position of the Church, he said, not many years ago, it was not considered a sin to partake moderately of intoxicating liquors, but when the light burst forth, this was found to be wrong, so with slavery, "the times of this ignorance God winked at," but now it was shown to be a sin. The difficult question was to know how long we should remain with churches which countenanced Slavery. He thought twenty years ought to bring things to a crisis. He had felt great interest in this Free Mission, and in the Pedo Baptist Missions also. Many would not send out missionaries with Pro Slavery principles, but would put their contributions into the other mission boxes, and thus send out Anti Slavery missionaries. He might associate with single members of a Church, while he could not associate with all the members of the same; wherever he found a true Christian he could "fellowship" him.

After a few words from Mr. Cravens, the subject was laid on the table till the Committee made their report, and after prayer by Rev. Samuel Aaron, the Convention adjourned to 8 o'clock P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

The exercises opened by singing a part of the 891st hymn, reading of the Scriptures by Rev. Eugenio Kincaid, of Burmah Mission, and prayer by Rev. W. S. Hall. A second hymn—"All hail to the power of Jesus' name"—was sung, and Rev E. Kincaid preached from Acts xvi. 10.

The first day's proceedings were closed by the usual devotional exercises, and the meeting adjourned to 10½ o'clock this morning.

New School General Assembly—Fourth Day.

At Cleveland, on Monday, the following business was accomplished by the New School Assembly:

Rev. Geo. Duffield, Jr., from the Committee on the Digest, read a report stating an outline of a Book of over 400 pages, but not ready for publication. The report states that the difficulty of separating the digest from the miscellaneous history before and since the division, alludes to the forms, &c., and the Committee submit to the General Assembly the manuscript containing the results of their labors. The Digest consists of twelve chapters: 1. Of the Church; 2. Officers of the Church; 3. Candidates; 4. The Sacraments; 5. Course of the Church; 6. Discipline; 7. Moral Questions (Decisions;) 8. Decisions on Doctrine; 9 Moral Questions, (Deliverances;) 10. Correspondence; 11 Modes of Benevolent Action, Missions, &c.; 12 Miscellaneous.

Dr De Witt presented a communication from Rev. Mr. Dickey, President of Ashmun Institute. The Institute is designed for the education of colored youths, and pious colored youths for the ministry, and is under the care of the New Castle, Pa., Old School Presbytery. The Institution asks for co-operation and aid from this Assembly. Communication referred to Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Dr De Witt, delegate to the General Association of Massachusetts, made a report of his visit to the annual meeting. The report states that the most exciting debate was on the resolution not to send delegates hereafter to the General Assembly on account of its complicity of that body with Slavery. The matter was finally referred to the District Association, and two delegates were appointed to this General Assembly.

Dr Wisner made a report of his visit as delegate to the General Association of New-York. That Association refused to continue to send delegates to the General Assembly. Report accepted, and after discussion subject postponed till to-morrow.

The Western Unitarians on Slavery.

The following is the Report, in relation to Slavery, adopted by the Western Unitarian Conference, at Alton, Ill., last week. It was presented by Rev. Mr. Heywood, of Louisville, Ky.:

"The question—'What opinion does the Conference hold in regard to Slavery, and what course of action is to reference to Slavery will it prescribe to the churches connected with it?'—having been referred, your Committee would respectfully answer:

That, as far as they are acquainted with the opinions of the members of the Conference here assembled, as made known in public discussions and private conversation, there is entire unanimity in regarding the system of Slavery as evil and wrong, doomed by God to pass away through the influence of the truths proclaimed by His Son—of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and of that all-powerful spirit of piety and love, of gratitude and humanity, born of the Spirit of God, and which rejoices in rendering hearty obedience to the divine injunction, 'to do unto others, all others, as we would have them do unto us.'

That as to prescribing a course of action to the Churches here represented, the Conference has no such power. It is not a Presbytery or Synod, it is not an association or consociation, invested with ecclesiastical power, but simply a conference; a meeting of members of Congregational Churches, which most scrupulously cherish the congregational independence; of brothers and sisters, of Christian friends, who come together as their hearts prompt, and with as little formality as possible, to confer together upon the great Christian interests which are inestimably dear to their souls, and by meditation, prayer, free interchange of thought and feeling to quicken their piety, to make clearer and more effective their sense of duty, to increase their moral and spiritual power, that they may return to their several homes to work with earnestness and single-mindedness, to do all within their ability in their respective spheres to Christianize society, and make the kingdoms of this world in deed and truth, as well as in name, the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ.

This statement your Committee respectfully submit to the Conference for its adoption.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

MURDER ON THE HIGH SEAS.

Trial of John Smith, John De Costa, John Brown and John Nedz for the Murder of Captain Lawson.

UNITED STATES COURT—Wednesday, May 27.

Before Judge Ingersoll.

The Court set at 10 o'clock, when the trial of the four Portuguese and Spanish sailors, charged with murdering Captain Lawson, of the brig General Pierce, was proceeded with.

Mr. Nash asked leave to retire with one of the prisoners (De Costa) and an interpreter, for a few minutes, to take an affidavit of some facts which were suppressed by the chief mate in his examination yesterday, as he intended to use it in a motion which he would submit at the close of the evidence for the prosecution. The application was allowed.

Christian Petrus, the first mate, recalled, and cross-examined by Mr. Nash: The captain had a watch, which was given to me by the second mate, and afterwards delivered to the American Consul at St. Thomas; I do not know who took it out of the pocket before he was thrown overboard; I saw Brown have the chain; I did not put a hand on the captain when he was shove overboard, nor did I take his watch; I was then six or eight feet from the captain; I was four or five feet from him when he was struck by De Costa.

Q.—Was there not a kettle housed up and concealed, to be used for the purpose of cooking food for slaves? A.—There were two kettles on board, which the Captain said were to boil oil in; I was never on board a slaver; the kettles were not concealed; could not say how much the kettles would hold; the kettle was not filled up with coils of rope, so as to be hid; there was no partition in the kettles; they had not been used on board, to my knowledge; they were filled up with trash, thrown aside into them; the kettles were close together, but whether they were fastened together or not I could not say; I could not swear what they would hold, for I never measured; I did not look for the axe after the Captain was dead; it was not brought to me.

Q.—Do you know whether any manacles or handcuffs were on board? All I saw was one pair of handcuffs; did not know what was in the casks.

Re-direct—The kettles were in the house on deck, in the same place that they were when we sailed from here.

John E. Toole, a clerk in the Custom-House of Baltimore, was examined to prove by the Registry Books, the registry of the brig General Pierce, at the Custom-House of Baltimore, on the 15th of April, 1853; and again on the 19th of November, 1853; the bond, on the 19th of November, 1853, was sworn to by James Hall, as owner and master; he swore that he was a citizen of the United States.

George W. S Hall, examined by Mr. McKeon—I reside in Baltimore; am a merchant; owned the brig General Pierce; purchased her of James Hall; he is an American citizen, and I am also; James Hall is my father; I purchased her last November; she was then lying at Atlantic Dock, in this harbor. [Witness identified his own signature, the signature of his father, and of Captain Lawson, to the papers made out at the Custom-House.] The General Pierce was cleared by me for the Coast of Africa; one is now on a voyage to the Coast of Africa.

Henry Kirby sworn: Examined by Mr. McKeon—I was born in London, England; was on board of the brig General Pierce; shipped in New York; when I shipped there was only Morris and I in the office; din not see the crew until Sunday; left this port on the 21st January; I saw all the prisoners on board then; recollect what occurred on the 10th of February; Morris, Smith and I were on forenoon watch—the mate's watch; Morris went to the wheel, Smith to the fore top, and the Captain sent me to scrape the panels in the cabin; at ten o'clock Smith was sent to the wheel; about eleven o'clock I heard a noise aft; I looked out of the cabin, and I saw the Captain strike Smith in the face; I do not know what Smith said, but he said something I could not understand; then the Captain came into the cabin and spoke to me; at twelve o'clock Brown relieved Smith at the wheel; Morris, Juan De Costa, Brown and Ned went with me to dinner; Smith said to me in the forecastle, that the Captain had called him a son of a b—h; I made no reply; then then spoke together in their own language, which I did not understand; I saw John Ned then go to the chest and take a dirk-knife out; he and De Costa then went on deck; Smith then took a dirk-knife and went on deck; I afterwards went on deck; I saw the Captain lying on the deck, in the fore-rigging, bleeding at the head, and saw De Costa strike him several times with the beaver; the Captain asked if they were going to kill him; Ned said "No;" the Captain got up and stood upon the spare, with his back to the long-boat; he asked if he had any officers on board; the first mate came up and said "Yes, I am your first officer;" the Captain then went to leeward, and I saw an axe in his hand; Morris was not on deck, he kept below; I called him and he came on deck; Ned sent him to the wheel; the Captain said to Morris, "Look at me now;" I saw Ned take the axe from the Captain; the Captain was very weak from loss of blood; the Captain and two mates tried to get into the cabin; Morris relieved Brown at the wheel; the prisoner Ned, De Costa, and Smith, stopped the Captain from getting into the cabin; the Captain then came to the starboard side of the ship, and spoke to the men, and told them they had charge of the ship, and might sail on the rocks or where they liked; Smith told me to get the Captain's pistols out of the cabin, and throw them overboard; I said I would not; the men replied to the Captain that they knew nothing about taking charge of the ship; Brown came up and joined the rest; he had a sheath-knife in his sheath, behind; Smith came out of the cabin with a dirk-knife; he spoke to the other men in their own language, and then De Costa struck the Captain with the beaver; Brown then took his sheath knife, and tried to stick the Captain, but it would not cut; Smith then handed him a dirk knife, and he then stabbed the Captain in the breast; the Captain cried out for help; the mate went up to him, and Brown darted at the mate's breast with the knife, and said he would kill him, too, if he interfered; he said, "Suppose you come on, me kill you, too;" Ned sung out, "All hands to throw him overboard;" the four prisoners laid hold and did so; I was standing near the long-boat; the Captain was bleeding at a great rate; when Brown first attempted to strike with the knife, the Captain was standing; when he struck him with the dirk-knife, he was falling gradually, and he was down when he stabbed him last; the prisoners washed the blood off the deck after the Captain was thrown overboard; I helped to wash the blood off the deck; Smith and Ned came forward and asked me if I could read English; Ned spoke to the mate, told him he was Captain, and that he should take them to St. Thomas; they brought me to the cabin, and made me look at the log-book to see that the mate made the entries they told him in the log book; Ned told the mate to put it in the log-book that the Captain and cook had died, and told me that, if I did not see he put it in right, they would kill me if they found it out; both Ned and Smith said this; they told me if I said anything when I went ashore, they would kill me, and if they did not, their countrymen would; Smith said this, and Ned was by.

Mr. Nash objected to any conversations subsequent to throwing the Captain overboard. Objection overruled.

Examination resumed—The clothes Ned and Brown had on when the Captain was killed they threw overboard; after Ned got the axe out of the Captain's hands, the Captain and officers tried to get into the cabin, but the men prevented them; Brown, Ned, DeCosta and Smith threw the Captain overboard; I was examined before the Consul at St. Thomas; after the Captain was killed, Brown wanted to kill the mates, but Ned would not let him do it.

Cross examined: We were about ten minutes forward, eating dinner, before the men went on deck; we ate with sheath knives and spoons; John Ned was the first to go on deck; he had the clasp knife; I did not see what occurred when De Costa went up on deck; they told me that the Captain caught him by the throat.

The District-Attorney objected to evidence of the prisoner's declarations to the witness of what occurred. Objection sustained.

Cross examination resumed: I heard a scuffle on deck, and that brought me up; when I came up I saw De Costa strike the Captain; it was about a minute after the men went on deck that I heard the scuffle; when I went up I saw the Captain first lying on deck, and De Costa alongside of him; Brown was at the wheel; Ned was standing by; I did not see the axe until I saw it in the Captain's hand; Ned took the axe from the Captain; I do not know what became of it afterwards; I heard the men tell the Captain to heave his pistols overboard, and they would make no more row; Ned and Smith said so; he would not do so; this was after they took the axe from him; from the time they took the axe until they killed the Captain might be about twenty minutes; the Captain never told me that he was going as a slaver; never saw him strike any man at the wheel but Smith; saw him shove Morris once; we had as good living on board that ship as on any other; there was bread and salt mackerel, that they could take when they wanted.

Q.—Do you not know that, after these men told the Captain they would not go on a slave voyage, that he put them on short allowance? A.—No, I know no such thing, and I do not believe it was so; I did not ship for a slave voyage; the Captain said the kettles were to boil palm oil; Ned took the clasp knife out of his chest; Smith took his out of De Costa's chest; the chests were always open; after they took the axe from the Captain, I heard him charge them with mutiny, and tell them that they might run the ship on the rocks or ashore if they thought fit; Ned said they would not take charge of it—that the mate should bring them to St. Thomas; the Captain said that neither he nor the mate would have anything to do with it; the men did not say anything about not wanting to go as a slaver; did not know why they wanted to go to St. Thomas; when I called Morris on deck, Ned told him to go to the wheel.

[The Court here took a recess for twenty minutes.]

Mr. Nash called Mr. Charles H Edwards, to prove by the signatures of Mr. James Hall and Mr. George W. S. Hall, that they were educated in the Portuguese literature. The witness stated that he could tell by the writing whether the persons were educated in a Portuguese or American school. In looking at the signatures he thought they appeared more like the English style of writing.

Cross-Examination of Kirby resumed—Brown took the watch from the Captain; it was afterwards given to the mate; when witness came up on deck he did not see Smith at first; the Captain said he would take the ship to St. Thomas and give them their discharge if they would attend to their duty, but they called upon him to give up his pistols; from the time witness first came on deck until the Captain got the axe, was about five minutes; it was about twenty minutes before they asked for his pistols, and ten minutes more before he was killed; believed the reason for the Captain's striking Smith at the wheel was because he did not steer to his liking; only saw him strike Smith once; Smith held on to the wheel; heard that the Captain had struck Brown; did not hear he knocked Brown down; witness was an Englishman, and was never naturalized; saw the first mate's protection papers; did not see protection papers with the other men.

To a Juror—Did not hear the Captain talk about mutiny, until after they took the axe from the Captain; the Captain had no pistols about him; supposed they were afraid he would go and get his pistols and shoot them, and that was the reason they wanted to have the pistols thrown overboard.

Re-direct—John Smith had the dagger with the sheath on it.

George Mundy, sworn and examined by Mr. McKeon—I am seafaring man; was born in this State; shipped on board the General Pierce; it was his watch below at eleven o'clock on the 10th of February; heard a blow given to the man at the wheel; went on deck, and saw the skin off the side of Smith's face and nose; went to the foretop; John Morris was in the foretop; it struck eight bells while he was there; heard the mate tell the men to go to dinner; came down, and went to make a cleet to lash the water barrel to; the Captain came over while there John Ned came up, and coming up to the Captain asked him, "What for you strike every one on board?" I looked up surprised; saw John Smith and De Costa; John De Costa then struck the Captain with a beaver; John Ned rushed past me; I caught him, pulled him back and asked him what he was going to do; Ned pulled out a dirk knife, and said: "No, you take hold of me;" and on witness letting him go, he (Ned) ran towards the Captain and struck him with the back of the knife; the Captain got up and asked where were his officers, and I believe he talked about mutiny; the first mate came forward; they then went aft, and the Captain said "Now is the time," and I handed him the axe; I looked into the long boat for another axe, but could not find one; when I looked towards the Captain again, I saw Ned struggling with him for the axe, which he got from him; I went towards the cabin to get an axe I knew was there, but De Costa met me and said he would strike me with the beaver; I went to John Ned and told him to give me the axe, which he did; the Captain told me to put the axe up; the men appeared pacified then; the Captain commenced speaking to them, and told them they might take the ship under their own charge, that they had mutinied, and neither he nor his mates would have anything to do with her; when I looked again, I saw the Captain falling, and John De Costa strike him with the beaver; Brown then stabbed him, and John Ned was choking him; they then threw him overboard; I think when Brown stabbed the Captain, Smith was amidships, and De Costa at the pump brake, eight or ten feet distant from the Captain; after they threw the Captain overboard, John Ned pointed to first mate and said, "You Captain," and to me, "You mate;" after that, Ned, De Costa and Smith were wrangling with the mate about putting something in the log-book; when they first struck the Captain, the first mate was aft; after they killed the Captain, John De Costa, Brown and Ned started for the first mate and me, but Ned stopped the other two.

Cross-examined—Was born in Cayuga County, in this State; I was sent forward at half-past eleven o'clock; I went aloft; John Morris was aloft at the time; I came down after twelve o'clock; I went to carpenter's chest to get the axe to make a cleet; I did the carpenter-work of the ship; I believe the beaver De Costa had was of hard wood; it was three or four inches thick; I went to sea when seventeen years old; I was never on a slave voyage, and never stopped on the Coast of Africa; I saw the Captain strike John Smith with the back of his hand before that day; I never saw him strike any one else; I heard the blow given to Smith at the wheel that day; I was below, about twelve feet distant; there was one partition between me and him; the carpenter's chest was about 14 feet from me forecastle; De Costa was the first to strike the Captain on the back of the head; the Captain asked if they were going to kill him; Ned said no; the Captain said they had killed him and mutinied; they then went aft; I gave the Captain the axe, and he went aft; Ned took the axe out of the Captain's hands; I tried to get it to the cabin, to get hold of an axe I knew was there; I wanted to defend myself and the brig; I heard them ask the Captain to give up his pistols; he said he had not any, that he only had a musket; could not say who took the watch from the Captain, before throwing him overboard; the men appeared pacified after Ned took the axe from the Captain; the Captain told me to put the axe up; I did so; when I came back they were talking; the Captain told them to do what they liked with the ship,—that they had mutinied and he and his mates would have nothing to do with her; they wanted that the mate should navigate the vessel to St. Thomas and that the Captain should give up his pistols; the next I remember was to see the Captain falling, and De Costa striking him; never advised the prisoners to take possession of the ship; had not drank any liquor that day; the Captain was a large, strong health

Beeves are sold by the estimated dead weight of the four quarters; the so-called "fifth quarter" (hide and tallow) is not reckoned in here as it is in Boston and some other cities. When cattle are weighed or estimated alive, the dead weight is reckoned at a certain number of pounds to the 100 lbs. of live weight, as agreed upon. The general rule in this market: for medium cattle is 56 lbs. to the 100; 44 lbs. being allowed for the "fifth quarter" and offal.

The average prices to-day, as compared with last week, are about 1½c. lower.

REMARKS UPON THE BEEF MARKET.

We have often had to report a "combination" among brokers to raise the prices of beef, but never before a thorough one among butchers to bring prices down, at least not one so successful as that entered into and carried out this week. The buyers have been studying this game for a long time with some dear experience—perhaps they have taken lessons of the Stock Bears on Wall street during the last two or three weeks. However this may be, it leaked out last evening that a general agreement had been entered into among the buyers of this City not to pay the prices current last week. Particular force was given to this effort by a rumored previous combination among the sellers. An attempt was made by the latter during the night and very early this morning to save themselves by hurrying out of the yards several hundred cattle, to give the appearance of a short supply. But it was no go, the butchers held out firmly and as cattle on hand must be sold, the buyers had it pretty much their own way, both as regards prices and estimated weights. We quote the average prices of the day as about 1½c. decline from last week.... The yards were far from being cleared late in the afternoon, and the cattle remaining unsold, together with those drawn out before the morning sales commenced, will leave several hundred for further sales. The demand for beef is falling off materially with the approach, or rather arrival, of hot weather, though there is little prospect of any over supply. It will be noted above that a large number of the animals reported this week were State cattle, which have been hurried in on the strength of the last market. The State distilleries have been pretty well drained, so that there will be unusually small receipts from this source hereafter.... The receipts of Western stock have been comparatively small, and they will continue so, probably, as the fresh grass is starting up finely, and there is no longer the necessity to send animals to market to keep them from starving. It is not good economy to send away the young, half-grown, half fattened stock, no matter how high may be the rates offered. A very little expense for pasturage will double the weight.... Notwithstanding the high rates offered by New-York traders, dealers from the Eastern market were able to buy about 600 Beeves at Albany and Buffalo. Some of our cotemporaries have confidently predicted a continuance of last week's prices, but this is not at all probable, from the simple fact—if no other—that people cannot, and, of course, will not, buy beef for consumption, at prices which butchers have been compelled to ask for the past few days. This fact alone is enough to contradict the predictions made with so much assurance. There is no reason to doubt but a good market for Cattle will exist for some time to come, but nothing higher than to-day's prices can be looked for, as a general thing.

We present, as usual, a few extracts from our copious notes of the transactions of this day:

A. HURD forwarded 74 of his fine Illinois cattle, which were sold by O. HURD, at near 12c. Estimated weight, 825 lbs.

WESSELS, HURD & Co. sold on their own account 100 Illinois steers, of prime quality; estimated 750 lbs., at 12c.@13c. They were purchased at Albany.

WESTHEIMER & BROTHER were selling, on their own account, 74 Illinois still-fed cattle, rated at 700 lbs., and 61 grain steers from the same State, weighing a little more. The former were of medium quality, running out at 10½c. The others were a finer grade, averaging about 11½c.

J. ALEXANDER forwarded 80 Illinois cattle of medium quality, which were selling by J. A. MERRITT at 11½@12c. They were of uneven weight.

SHERMAN & HOAG were selling 42 medium Ohio cattle for E. BURKLEY. They were rated 850 lbs. net, and were averaging about $105 each, or 12½@12¾c. The same parties had, in addition, 56 fair Illinois cattle of their own, which brought $110 each. Estimated net weight 850 lbs.

WM. H. HARRIS had 39 good heavy Illinois cattle, which he estimated at 875 lbs. net. He was trying to get 12c.@13c. ₱ lbs., but it was no hill work.

J. H. WILLIAMS was selling two lots, one of 80 common Ohio cattle, for EDWARD WILLIAMS, at near 12½c.; and another lot of 100 fair Illinois bullocks, rated 725 lbs. net, at 12c.@12½c. The latter were on his own account.

S. M. BAKER contributed two lots—one of 112 common Iowa cattle, weighing at home 1,306 lbs., were selling by B. BARNUM at 11c @12c. The others were 51 head of Col. SHELBY'S large Kentucky cattle, rated 1,100 lbs. net, which J. A. MERRITT was trying to dispose of at 13c @14c. They were too large and fat to suit a high market and above purchasers, as very few butchers would be able under the above prices to handle such beef in warm weather. It did not appear at a late hour in the afternoon that any of them would be sold. G. BARNARD took four at $650, and two others brought $300.

ALEXANDER & VIRGIN forwarded 104 good Illinois Cattle, estimated 750 lbs. net, which were bringing, by ULERY & MURRAY, 11c.@12½c. ₱ lb.

D. MOORE contributed 136 New York Cattle, 96 of which were from distilleries. They were common grades, many of them rough and thin, running out by MILLER, HARING & GURNEY, at 10½c.@11c ₱ lb.

HAYDEN & DAVIS sent on 140 distillery Cattle, fed by JOHNSON, COOK & Co., of Onondaga County, New-York. They were of fair quality but much affected by the warm weather and their journey here. TEED & WHEELER were selling them at 11c.@13c. J. HARRIS took 76 at $92 each,—or, as he called it, 13c. ₱ lb. Estimated weight of the drove 800 lbs.

VALENTINE & MARTIN had 112 good cattle, from the distillery of CONKLIN & HITHCOCK, of Chemung County, New-York, which they were disposing of, as owners, at 11c.@12½c. Estimated to draw 700 lbs.

M. BUDLONG contributed 80 good Illinois steers, of 800 lbs. net, which were sold by J. BUDLONG, at $99 each, or 12c.@12½c. S. WILLIAMS took 12 of the finest, at $112 50 each.

MILCH COWS WITH CALVES.

Milch Cows are sold at each of the above yards, usually with their Calves at their sides. The prices vary somewhat with the supply and demand, and very greatly, of course, upon the milking value. The particular fancy of the buyer has also considerable to do with the price. Not unfrequently a Cow is sold at $90@$100, or even $120. The general prices throughout the year for ordinary Cows is $30 to $40 or $50. Quite a number sell above $50, and more, perhaps, below $30. We often see apologies for Cows go at $20 @$25. The weekly reports from the different yards will give the weekly fluctuations.

No change during this week worth noting. There is a good demand for fresh cows, which is just met by the supply.

ALLERTON reports 87 Milch Cows received during the week, selling at $30@$35 for common, $40@$50 for good, and $50@$60 for extras. A few as high as $75. Very little change since last week. Good fresh cows sell at high prices, and are in demand.

BROWNING reports receipts of 31 Milch cows, selling at $25@$30 for common, $40@$50 for good, and $60@$70 for extras. No variation in prices, with only a moderate demand.

CHAMBERLIN reports 109 Milch Cows, selling at $25@$35 for common; $40@$50 for good; and $60@$70 for extras. Demand fully equal to the supply.

O'BRIEN reports 143 Milch Cows, selling, at $30@$40 for common, $40@$50 for good, and a few at $60@$70. Market unchanged, with a fair supply.

VEAL CALVES.

Veal Calves are sold by live weight, each animal being weighed alive at the time of sale. "Bobs"—that is, Calves a few days old—are usually sold by the head at such prices as can be agreed upon, sometimes for but little more than the skin is worth. The principal places of sale are ALLERTON'S, BROWNING'S, CHAMBERLIN'S and O'BRIEN'S.

The receipts of the past week show a falling off in numbers. Prices are no more than maintained.

ALLERTON reports receipts of 525 Veal Calves, selling for 5c @6½c. A few at 7c.@7½c. ₱ lb., live weight. Stock generally good, although a few "Kittens" are on hand for fancy customers.

BROWNING reports receipts of 58 Veal Calves, selling generally at 5c.@7c. ₱ lb. live weight. A few choice ones at 7½c.

CHAMBERLIN reports receipts of 143 Veal Calves, selling at 5c@7c. ₱ lb. live weight. Market well supplied with good Calves. Sales are not as brisk.

O'BRIEN reports 118 Veal Calves, selling at 5¾c.@ 6¾c. ₱ lb., and a very few at 7c. ₱ lb. Quality good, but prices have fallen during the warm weather.

SHEEP AND LAMBS.

These are chiefly sold at ALLERTON'S, BROWNING'S, and CHAMBERLIN'S, at so much ₱ head for a particular lot of Sheep or Lambs, or of the two together. They are also frequently sold by live weight, as this is readily ascertained. The actual prices at the different yards seldom vary greatly. The difference in reputed prices is generally due to variation in the quality. When they are sold by weight, it is usually the net weight, which is ordinarily one-half what they weigh when alive, the pelt and offal making the other half. If fat and small-boned, they will dress 55 lbs., and in some cases 60 lbs., ₱ hundred. The average run is about one-half the live weight.

Receipts do not vary from the previous week. Prices have fallen a little. Arrivals are mostly of clipped sheep. Lambs are coming in more freely.

ALLERTON reports receipts of 250 Sheep and Lambs, which brought 18c.@15c. ₱ lb., dressed weight. Arrivals continue very light, but prices have declined slightly. Lambs are in good demand at high rates. One lot of common sheared Sheep brought 6½c., live weight, this morning.

BROWNING reports receipts of 2,136 Sheep and Lambs, selling with wool on at 11c.@15c.; sheared at 10c.@13c., net. Lambs are bringing $4@$6 each, or 18c @20c. ₱ lb Only 250 on sale this morning, including 161 which just came in. One lot of 59 were purchased by MEAD & VALENTINE for the Bermuda market. Receipts are from New-York, New Jersey and Ohio, and are mostly sheared. Prices are a trifle lower than last week.

CHAMBERLIN reports receipts of 1,943 Sheep and Lambs, selling at $4 50@$8 ₱ head, or 10½@14c. ₱ lb., dressed weight. No material change in the market. Supply not equal to the demand.

REPORTS OF BROKERS' SALES AT BROWNING'S FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 26, 1857.

JAS. MCCARTY reports sales of 888 Sheep and Lambs at $6 18 ₱ head.

SWINE.

These are sold alive at so much ₱ lb., gross or live weight. Considerable numbers are sold at ALLERTON'S, Forty-fourth-street, and at various other yards, while large droves are sold direct from the cars or boats, and driven immediately to the various slaughter-houses.

The receipts have not been quite as large, and prices incline upwards. Stock Hogs are still cheap.

ALLERTON reports receipts of 3,205 hogs during the past week. Prices for live hogs ranged during the week at 6¾c.@6¾c. ₱ lb., with an upward tendency to day. Stock Hogs are dull at any price. Some of last week still remain on hand.

VAN BRUNT & WATSONS, Pork-Packers, No. 200 Chambers-street, report prices as follows:

CORN-FED.

Live..... 6¾c @6¾c. | Dressed..... 8¾c.@8¾c.

No distillery Hogs in market.

Philadelphia Cattle Market.

PHILADELPHIA, Wednesday, May 27.

The supply of Beef Cattle was better yesterday and to day than the week previous, though the number in market was not sufficient to have any effect in reducing the present high rate.

BEEF CATTLE—The number of Beef Cattle at all the yards amounted to 950 head, all of which were sold at from $11@$12 50 and $13 50@$14 ₱ 100 lbs. But few were sold at the lowest figure. The complaint is very general among the butchers that prices are much too high, and they intend to hold a meeting on Monday next to take steps for a reduction in price.

SHEEP—The demand for Sheep and Lambs continues active, and 4,050 head were soon disposed of at from $5 75@$7 50, gross.

HOGS—Sales at this market are quite brisk, the demand continuing good. The sales this week amounted to 1,800 head, at prices ranging from $5 25@$9 and $9 50, as in quality.

COWS AND CALVES—This market remains about the same; sales of 375 head were made at from $20@$30 for Dry Cows, and from $40@$60 for Milch Cows with Calves by their side.

Wholesale Produce Markets.

Reported exclusively for the New-York Daily Times.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, May 27, 1857.

The prices given in our report from week to week are the average wholesale prices obtained by producers, and not those at which produce is sold from the market. The variations in prices refer chiefly to the qualities of the articles.

With the hot sun of the present week, new vegetables have rapidly advanced in growth and are now much more abundant and cheaper than one week ago. Sweet Potatoes from the West Indies have arrived and are now selling at $5 ₱ bbl. Tomatoes are in pretty good supply from Bermuda, and sell at 62c.@ 75c. ₱ box.

Old Potatoes are rather dull, the new from Bermuda taking their place. About 4,000 bbls. of Bermudas arrived yesterday.

Strawberries are more abundant and much cheaper, though the quality after a sea voyage is not to be compared with fresh berries from the vicinity of New-York.

Rhubarb is very abundant, and is early becoming a drug in consequence of the high prices of sugars.

Butter is more active, especially good new yellow in firkins for shipping. Grass Butter is coming in slowly.

Eggs are more plentiful, 450 bbls. arriving from Philadelphia on the 25th. Ohio and Canada are also sending in, and a decline is noted.

New-York Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, MAY 28, 1857.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

By the arrival of the Empire City at New-Orleans we receive telegraphic summary of two weeks later news from California, Nicaragua and New-Granada. The amonnt of specie en route for New-York is stated to be $2,000,000.

The war in Nicaragua is at an end, and General WALKER and Staff are now in New-Orlesns. They came passengers by the Empire City. On the 1st of May, onr report states, General WALKER snrrendered to Captain DAVIES, of the United States sloop-of-war St. Mory's. His Staff and 260 men, the remains of his army, were brought by that vessel from San Joan del Sur to Panama. We shall probably receive full details of this important intelligence by the Illon is, now dne at this port.

The news from California has no feature of importance. From New-Granada we lenrn that the difficulty with Great Britain is settled. The New-Granadian Government has ceded to England an island in the Bay of Panama, in liquidation of the McIntosh claim.

The national Cincinnati Society met at Boston yestarday—delegates being present from every State, except Sonth Carolina. Hon. HAMILTON FISH, of this State, was reëlected President of the Society.

The Massachnsetts Senate yesterday refused to pass the Hoosic Tunnel bill over the veto of Governor GARDNER.

The bullocks as well as "bulls" at the Cattle Market were under the control of the butcher "bears" yesterday. A strong and successful combination among the City buyers, brought down prices of beef cattls nearly or quite 1¼ cents per pound. An effort to lessen the apparent supply hy removing a large nnmber of animals from the yard early yesterday morning, was of no avail to the sellers. Large aumbers of cattle were left unsold last evening. Meat consumers as well as producers will be particularly interested in the Cattle Market Report given in another colnmn.

Capt. TURNBULL, of the Eighth Ward Police, sent in his daily return yesterday, to Depnty CARPENTER, at the office in White-street. Officer ROBERT W. BOWYER, the detective, was ordered yesterday, by the Commissioners, to report himself for special duty at the office of the General Superintendent, and he complied with the order at once. The Metropolitan Commissioners decided, at their meeting yesterday, the style of uniform to be worn by the Police under the new act, and adopted the emblem—a shield, bearing the coat of arms and motto of the State—drafted by Mr. BREVOORT, a description of which was given in yesterday's TIMES. Mayor WOOD and City Judge RUSSELL did not hold a formal meeting as Police Commissioners yesterday, bnt they, with several Democratic Aldermen and Chief MATSELL, had a long private consultation. The Brooklyn Police are gradually giving in their adhesion to the law. Yesterday, the force of two Wards—the Ninth and Fourteenth—heretofore opposed, declared their intention to hereafter obey the Depnty Superintendent of Police. It was only last Saturday that an officer of the Ninth Ward was severely beaten by his associates for expressing his determination to obey the new law.

The contract for the construction of the Pier and Lat Seguine's Point was yesterday executed with Mr. WM. WELDEN, of this City. ROBERT C. VOORHIES has been appointed Superintendent of the work. The Commissioners of Emigration were yesterday notified by the Commissioners of Quarantine that the temporary buildings at Seguine's Point for the reception of patients, will be ready on the first day of July, at which time they will be delivered to them according to established regulations. The Commissioners also passed a resolntion making a requisition upon the Police Commissioners for 25 Policemen to accompany the workmen to Seguine's Point, and to remain there for the protection of the property of the State as long as necessary.

The Special Committee on the removal of the Crystal Palace, met on Wednesday, when Mr. WHITE, the Receiver, was heard at length, and made a few strong points. He was met by several property owners and other gentlemen, hnt little that is new on the subject was elicited. It is expected that the Committee will report in a pamphlet. The Committee on Steamboat Landings met also, but made little progress.

The Mayor and City Inspector have agreed to give notice to several of the contractors for the street cleaning, that nnless their agreements to clean the streets are executed within twenty-four honrs they will be annulled. What next?

The Free Baptist Mission Society, composed of churches which acknowledge no fellowship with slaveholders in their church or missionary operations, was in session yesterday in the Macdougal-street Baptist Church, between Spring and Prince streets. Delegates from the New-England, Middle, and Western States, and two foreign missionaries of the Society, were present. Officers were elected for the ensuing year, and the exercises were concluded by a sermon from Mr. EUGENIO KINCAID, their Burmah Missionary. The Convention resumes its session at 10 o'clock this morning.

The General Synod of the Associate Presbyterian Church closed its deliberations last evening. Protests were received from the dissentients to the articles in the basis of union which was adopted by the majority on the preceding day. Much other business of a rontine nature was transacted, and the Synod adjourned to meet at Allegheny in May, 1858.

A mutiny and fight occurred yesterday on board of a brig lying in the North River, and bound to Africa. All the crew were carried before the U. S. Marshal, but no witnesses appearing, they were discharged. The second mate was badly injured. A row also occurred on board the ship Emerald Isle from Liverpool.

The examination of the principal witnesses in the case of the alleged brutality on board the ship Middlesex, was again postponed yesterday by Mr. JOACHIMSSEN, because the counsel for Mr. LYMAN, the mate, was not present. It looks a little doubtful if the defendants are quite anxious to fetch the trial on.

The trial of JOHN SMITH, JOHN DE COSTA, JOHN BROWN, and JOHN NEDZ, for the murder of Capt. LAWSON on board the brig General Pierce was concluded yesterday. The Jury, after an absence of 3¼ honrs, returned a verdict of manslaughter against each. Sentence was reserved.

There were 3,447 emigrants arrived at this port on Tnesday.

ANOTHER MEMBER OF THE OLD POLICE GONE OVER TO THE NEW COMMISSIONERS.—Officer BOWYER, of the Chief's office, was yesterday notified by the Metropolitan Commissioners to send his returns to the office of Superintendent TALLMADGE, and promptly signified his intentions to obey the order. Mr. BOWYER is one of the oldest, most experienced, and efficient officers belonging to the department, and his example will doubtless be followed by many others, so that His Honor, the Mayor, will hardly have a corporal's guard left to keep him in countenance hy the time the police question gets before the Court of Appeals. We understand that Officer BOWYER stated that he would have obeyed the order of this new Commissioners sooner if it had been sooner served upon him.

Return Home of General Walker.

After two years of unprofitable fillibustering in Central America, our notorious countryman, General WILLIAM WALKER, has returned home, safe and sound, with a small remnant of his army, and a repntation considerably the worse for wear. He has ingloriously abandoned the field of his operations, after sacrificing a large amonnt of property and hundreds of lives; he has done a vast deal of mischief, without any compensating benefits to the country he has ravaged, or to those who trusted in his conrage and sagacity. Considering the opportunities he enjoyed, the readiness of the people among whom he intruded himself to be governed by any one who had the ability to govern them, the aid that was lavishly extended to him, and the good fortune that followed his career, his utter failure as a fillihuster is altogether disgraceful to him. There is one thing in which he has exhibited great tact, wonderful energy, and a discretion which amounts to genius, and that is in taking good care of himself. Though the greater part of his deluded followers have fallen victims to disease, to starvation and the balls of the enemy, yet the General returns safe and sound, and in a good condition to undertake another expedition. Bnt the great difficulty will be for him to find followers hereafter; his career has not developed the qualities of a great leader, and, even though another such an opportunity should present itself as was opened to him in Nicaragua, he will never again find an army willing to enlist under his command.

The Telegraphic dispatch announcing his arrival in New-Orleans, gives so meagre an account of the "Capitulation" of General WALKER, that we can know nothing of the condition on which he snrrendered himself, nor why he should have capitulated to the Commander of a United States man-of-war. Bnt the important fact is that with this fizzle of Gen. WALKER ends the last fillibustering expedition in which our countrymen have been engaged. We donht if there be another until General WALKER shall be forgotten, which will not be very long.

A Practical Lesson in Consular Reform.

The remarkable case of VAN CAMP and JENKINS presented in our Washington correspondence yesterday, affords a text from which the National Administration may draw some practical and useful lessons. Within a few days or weeks at most, the appointments of some two hundred Consuls and Commercial Agents are to be decided npon and announced. These consular officers, though clothed with no diplomatic powers, become marked representatives of American character in every part of the world, and should be selected therefore with reference to their general ability to ropresent the nation with credit. To them must our countrymen residing or traveling abroad freqnently look for protection from imposition, and for snch aid, advice and instruction as shall enable them to pursue their trade or travels with success, comfort or pleasnre. Although by law merely commercial officers, they of necessity and by custom, become a sort of living guide-posts to wandering Americans, and are reasonably expected, on that acconnt, to be intelligent and honorable gentlemen.

That American Consuls in the past, have freqnently proved quite destitute of these moral qualifications, is unfortunately too true,—and the keenest suffering and grossest injustice have been the consequence. An ignorant Consul blunders into the perpetration of outrages most ruinous to his victims; and a dishonest one who happens to be posted in an out-of-the-way locality often holds unlimited power of oppression. Rightfully or not, he is supposed for the time to bear the dignity, wield the power, and execute the laws of his country. The latter, especially, he is presumed to be familiar with as a part of his official duty; and, accordingly, however unjust or illegal his acts really are, the citizen oppressed by him is not often prepared to resist, lest after all he should unwittingly resist legal authority, and so make himself amenable to punishment.

It is thus easy to perceive that the Consul, far removed from the sources of his authority, has opportunity to perpetrate remediless wrongs, possessed by scarcely any other officer of the Government. The outrage perpetrated upon Dr. VAN CAMP is a striking case in illustration. JENKINS, in his absence, stripped him entirely of his property and left him penniless. The process by which he accomplished this result is scarcely equalled for its audacity. He assumed to establish a Court, constituted himself a Judge, appointed Associate Justices, and a "Depnty United States Marshal," tried his predecessor in office for piracy, convicted him upon ex parte evidence, confiscated his property, and sold nearly $200,000 worth of it for about $16,000! And even when the Court of his manufacture happen to render a judgment not in accordance with this enterprising Consul's wishes, behold he sets it aside, and enters a different verdict upon his individual responsibility!

It seems scarcely possible that all this could have been ventured without even the shadow or semblance of law: yet such is the fact,—for the acts of JENKINS were as utterly usurpative and illegal as though he had professed to be a Pirate rather than a Commercial Agent. It is difficult to see how he can offer even the plea of stupid error in abatement of the charge of crime—for there is no law expressly or impliedly conferring any such power as that he exercised, nor any part of it. His whole course was that of an outlaw; and VAN CAMP'S agent and attorney would have been justified entirely, had he resisted it, even to death. And so he would have resisted, we must believe, had JENKINS not displayed his commission as Commercial Agent of the United States, and claimed to act by authority. The very audacity of his act stifled effectual dispute and he was permitted to work his will unchecked. He may now be punished for his wrong-doing; bnt, meantime, where is the remedy for the citizen whom he has ruined. At law the latter has none, for his despoiler is a panper; and legally the United States Government is not responsible for his act. That he has an equitable claim from Congress for relief would seem to be clear; bnt experience proves that snch a remedy, by reason of its uncertainty and vexatious delays, is nearly as bad as the disease.

In view of such facts as these, the selection of proper persons to fill our Consulates and Commercial Agencies, becomes matter of far greater importance than their simple rontine of positive duties would seem to suggest; and it is to be hoped that from among the thousands who seek these places Mr. BUCHANAN will succeed in filling them with men of discretion, intelligence and sterling integrity. Let there be no more Jenkinses to ruin citizens, and saddle Government with bills for snch extraordinary frolics. Surely there can be no necessity for perpetnating the species. If better men cannot be found to take the places, it is at least doubtful whether our citizens abroad would not fare better in the hands of the savages themselves, than when enjoying the "protection" of their civilized countryman arrayed in the gilt and tinsel of a consular office.

A word or two on another point. VAN CAMP'S misfortunes began in his removal from office by the late administration upon ex parte evidence, and without the least opportunity for defence. Such a defence he has since made,—and it would seem to have been entirely satisfactory. This verdict, however, is poor consolation for all that the victim of malice, perjury and robbery has suffered, in character and pocket, in consequence of the ill-considered act of his Government; and the anticipation of such a reward for faithful service is not calculated to encourage others in well doing. The course pursued by the British and French Governments towards the same class of officers affords a striking and favorable contrast. With them the stronger the complaints against an officer, the firmer do they hold fast to him until full and fair opportunity is given to ascertain the facts. They vindicate the maxim which holds a man innocent until proved to be guilty, realizing the truth that it is against the faithful officer—who is rigid in the discharge of his duty, and exacts from others strict obedience to law—that complaints are most likely to be made.

Our Government would do well to emulate this course of procedure in all respects; or, if a special case presents an imminent necessity for more summary action, let the offending officer be suspended only, until the facts have been properly elucidated. Let there be careful selections of Consular officers in the beginning, and then let the appointees be as certain of energetic indorsement and support by their Government, while faithful, as of removal and punishment if guilty of criminal or stupid errors. Under such an administration, our Consular system may become a credit to the country and a benefit to its citizens, instead of a reproach and a means of oppression; as is now too much and too often the case.

The Tehuantepec Route—Its History and Importance to the Country.

The necessities for a communication between those parts of our whole country which lie respectively on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts have impelled our Government, as well as many of our citizens, to various efforts to that end. Some have been consummated—as the Panama Railroad and the transit line by Nicaragua—while to all the rest a greater or less degree of attention and labor have been given. On some routes a mere reconnoissance has been made—for instance on that explored by Lieut. STRAIN, which, though rejected by him as impracticable, is still adhered to by others, or at least that in that region a good route may be found,—while on either side of the line that he explored means of communication exist which may yet be opened to the commerce of the world. The Nicaragua route and all that relates to it is too familiar, from recent events, to be dwelt upon; its principal importance is prospective, and comes from the fact that of all others it is best adapted to a ship canal; in other respects, it has no advantages. The Honduras route, projected by Mr. SQUIER, has been reconnoitred and is now being surveyed by American engineers acting for an English Company. The route by Tehuantepec seems to be at present attracting most attention, from the circumstance that a wagon road has been recently completed, and that the owners of the right are seeking Government patronage in the transportation of the mails. This is the most northerly of all the Isthmus routes, and, excepting the overland continental routes within our own territory, is the most available, as well for our commercial as for our governmental purposes. Its peculiar advantages are found in its being so much nearer than any other, and that in time of war we can command it. The distance from Tehuantepec to Panama is as great as from Lake Superior to the Gulf of Mexico, that is, the whole breadth of the United States along the valley of the Mississippi; and the Atlantic terminus of the Tehuantepec route lies within the Gulf of Mexico. Of this we possess half the coast, and in time of peril can command the whole, while the termini of all the other Isthmus routes, Panama, Nicaragua and Honduras, are equally commanded by England. The Caribbean Sea, on which lie the Atlantic termini of the Nicaragua, Panama and other projected routes further south, is completely surrounded by British possessions; from Jamaica, lying right in front, through the whole chain of the Leeward and Windward Islands—all this without considering the further advantages of the claimed protectorate of the Mosquito coast, which flanks that sea, and her influence at Greytown, which lies at the mouth of the St. Juan River, where the Nicaragua route begins. A reference to any map will exhibit this at a glance.

We may now readily understand why it was that when our capitalists, for simple commercial benefits, projected various routes to the Pacific, they could count confidently on English assistance for all except Tehuantepec; whereas, in regard to this, there has always been English opposition, unless the terms of the grant and the holders of it were both inimical to our national purposes. It is unquestionably from this cause, in conjunction with the adverse efforts of parties at home having pecuniary interests in rival routes, that every attempt to open the Tehuantepec route on terms favorable to American interests had been baffled. It is even now doubtful, notwithstanding the progress made towards it, if a Railroad will ever be built there, or, if built, we can ever get such use of it as we desire and require. When Mr. TRIST was sent to negotiate peace with Mexico, he was instructed to acquire by purchase, not only California, but the right of way to it via Tehuantepec, this last being considered necessary to the secure possession of the first, because it was a route that we could control, and the only one. He was authorized to tender fifteen millions of dollars for the mere right of way, and from this we may judge how important it was considered by the American statesmen of that day. The answer made to his proposition by the Mexican Commissioners, who spoke in the name and with the full authority of their Government, was, however, an absolute check, and made it impossible for him to urge the object further. This answer was:

"That Mexico could not treat on the subject, as she had made the grant to a Mexican citizen, (GARAY,) who had transferred his privileges, with the consent of his Government, to English subjects, of whose rights Mexico could not dispose."

Long subsequently to this, and after peace had been for some time established, an American citizen, PETER H. HARGOUS, became, in the regular course of his business, the possessor of all these privileges, Mexican as well as English, and announced that if his rights therein could be secured under sanction of a treaty between the two Governments, our Government would by that obtain without the cost of a dollar, all that had ever been asked for or desired, and for which we had offered Mexico, through Mr. TRIST, the sum of fifteen millions.

This proposition of Mr. HARGOUS was joyfully acceded to, and our minister in Mexico, Governor LETCHER, negotiated a treaty without difficulty, which our Senate ratified. Had the Mexican Congress also ratified it, it would have been complete, and there was no reason to fear that she would not do so, as up to this time not a whisper had been raised against it. Unfortunately, however, a false rumor found its way to Mexico that our Senate had refused ratification, and, under the excitement and confusion of feeling which this rumor caused, an opposition arose, stimulated by interested parties, of astonishing strength, which from that day increased until it became a real mania. Under this influence the Congress declared the grant null even before the treaty had been presented for ratification, and when presented ratification was refused. This position Mexico ever afterwards obstinately maintained, notwithstanding the indignant remonstrances of our Government, expressed through the Secretary of State, Mr. WEBSTER, in the strongest protests, and notwithstanding such a demonstration as was made by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, when it reported unanimously that the grant should be sustained, and recommended the suspension of all treaty relations with Mexico. After declaring the Garay grant null, Mexico went still further and advertised the privilege to be let out anew to the best bidders, attaching certain conditions, however, by which any grant made under them would be comparatively valueless for American purposes. There were many bidders under this call, Mexican, English and American, and after much delay it was declared off, not to any one, but to a combination of all, adding thereto, besides, three of the State Governments of the Mexican Confederation as parties! One of the successful bidders was an American, Colonel SLOO, whence the grant is popularly called the "Sloo Grant," though the influence of Col. SLOO was by no means dominant. Operations were organized under this grant which have gone to the extent of the construction of a wagon road as a preliminary to a railroad, but it is an important fact that the persons operating are not the undisputed possessors of even this last grant, under which they profess to be acting. A condition of the grant was the payment of a sum of money to the Mexican Government, which was obtained from an Englishman, Mr. FALCONNER, by mortgaging the privileges to him. As the money was not repaid, he foreclosed, and became possessor of the privilege, and is acknowledged to be such by the Mexican Government. He in turn assigned to the holders of the Garay grant, so that these last claim to be now in possession of every right! How the rival claims will be settled, and what good can come to this country from anything that may be done under these complicated circumstances, it is hard to tell, unless our Government finds means to compromise all rival claims for its own use and advantage, and this, it is presumed, will be the event. One thing cannot be denied—that the great object which Mr. TRIST sought so assidnously to obtain, and for which he was authorised to give so large a sum, would have been completely stopped, and the whole matter closed, but for the sagacity and persevering effort of the American holders of the Garay grant; for, had it not been for the justice and strength of their claim, no grant whatever would have been made to the "Sloo" parties, and the Isthmus would have remained sealed against all but the English and the Mexicans themselves.

It is curious that when Mexico declared the Garay grant null, she did it on the plea that the time for beginning the construction of the work had expired, as indeed would have been the case but for an extension granted in 1846, but which Mexico claimed to have been done without due authority; and yet it is certain that when the Mexican Commissioners stated to Mr. TRIST, on refusing him the right of way that he sought, that this right was in existence, it could only have existed by an acknowledgment of the very authority that gave the extension. It is true, by a subsequent quibble, an excuse was sought for the discrepancy, by asserting that the Garay Grant gave two separate and independent privileges, one, the right of way by canal or railroad, and the other a grant of lands; and that the first was forfeited, but that the other remained and still remains, the claim being strengthened by this very argument. Though this is regarded as but a mere cavil, it happens from an outside circumstance to carry with it a consequence of some moment. In 1856 the representatives in Washington of Mexico, the several Central American States, and of New-Granada, Venezuela and Equador, entered into a Convention by which the United States were to be forever debarred from obtaining any privileges or any lands in all the extent of the dominion of the parties to the Convention. But, by the argument resorted to by the Mexican apologizers for the nullifying of the Garay grant, the holders of that grant, all American citizens, have already large rights to lands, with the privilege of colonizing, and if these rights be exercised, the region may be filled with American adventurers, the extension of whose settlements it will be hard to resist.

It is one of the most unfortunate circumstances of Mr. PIERCE'S administration that he yielded the point of the right of American citizens, holders of the Garay Grant, to construct a road across this isthmus, which they undoubtedly held by every claim of law and equity, and which a sound national policy required should be secured to them for the general good. With far less claim of right, or rather with no claim whatever, Great Britain refused to cede Malta to NAPOLEON, therein violating the treaty of Amiens and plunging Europe in war, giving no better justification for the refusal than the national necessity requiring that this island, lying in the course to her colonies in India, should be retained. Tehuantepec lies between the eastern and western portions of our integral country, and is of the last importance to its preservation as a united whole—an importance far beyond that of Malta to England. When DANIEL WEBSTER was Secretary of State, his acts show that he was fully sensible of this, and was well convinced of the rights of our citizens. In his official communications to the Mexican Government he indorsed their claims fully, demonstrated their validity, quoted the several acknowledgments of Mexico to the same effect, and finally solemnly declared, in the name of his Government, that "the maintenance of the rights of the grantees should in no event be abandoned." Subsequently, however, after his death, and under another Administration, other counsels prevailed, and now we present the anomaly to the world of one country in two parts separated by the width of an unsettled continent, and with an ordinary communication over an isthmus (that of Panama) unnecessarily distant in time of peace, and in time of war at the absolute command of our most potent and jealous rival—Great Britain. It is still not impossible that this may be corrected; may we not hope for it from Mr. BUCHANAN'S Administration?

WHAT PARTISAN NEWSPAPERS ARE COMPELLED TO DO.—We find a striking illustration of the ignoble service required of thorough-going partisan journalists, by the supposed interests of the party they serve, in the Albany Atlas and Argus. A few days since, in the course of an editorial article upon political partisanship, we said:

"The tendency of party is always to excess, and, therefore to evil. It is checked and restrained by hostile pressure. What the Democratic Party would be and do, but for the resistance and restraint of the Republican Party, may be inferred from what it is now doing in this City, where its relative strength almost nullifies the opposition. What the Republican party might do if it had complete and undisputed sway, may be inferred from some things which it did at Albany last Winter."

The Albany Atlas and Argus quotes this from our columns as follows:

"The tendency of party is always to excess, and, therefore, to evil. It is checked and restrained by hostile pressure. What the Republican Party might do if it had complete and undisputed sway, may be inferred from some things which it did at Albany last Winter."

The sentence in italics in our article is carefully erased. Special pains are taken to suppress part of what the TIMES says, in order to give undue weight and importance to the rest. This is according to the usual custom of partisan prints, though it differs very little, if at all, morally from simple falsehood and misrepresentation.

THE POOR MEN OF BALTIMORE.—According to the published list of tax-payers in Baltimore there is not one millionaire in the whole city. The wealthiest inhabitant is it is rated at only $730,000; while the next to him in wealth is the possessor of but $480,000. Baltimore has been so long a great commercial city that we must confess we were rather surprised to find that it contains so few wealthy men. Bnt the truth of the matter probably is that millionaires are not half so numerous as they are supposed to be, anywhere.

The Troubles in Dr. Cheever's Church.

The troubles in Dr. CHEEVER'S Church produce an excitement that extends far beyond the circle of the congregation that worships in the fine Church of the Puritans on Union-square. We have already reported that on Tnesday night steps were taken towards so altering the by-laws that hereafter seven shall be the number of deacons, instead of four, as heretofore. There are at present but three deacons, Messrs. WOODS, KINGSLEY, and JOHNSON, the fourth, Mr. LEWIS, having gone into Dr. ADAMS' Church some six months ago, and these three all signed the letter that invited the Doctor to resign. The intention is still further to amend the by-laws concerning the deacons, so that henceforth they shall be elected each to serve three years, and then for the next year to be ineligible to office.

On Monday evening there was at the house of one of the members a crowded company of the Doctor's friends, who talked matters over, and agreed that they only did justice to themselves by heartily supporting him.

Lately some of the young men of this congregation have presented the Doctor with their compliments and assurances of sympathy in the shape of a hand some gold-headed cane. The following correspondence grew out of the occasion:

NEW-YORK, Monday, May 11, 1857.

Rev. GEORGE B. CHEEVER, D. D.—Very Dear Sir: Please accept from the undersigned, young men of your congregation, the accompanying token of our affection, confidence and gratitude to you as our beloved Pastor.

Permit us also to add that we highly appreciate the ability and cordially approve the faithfulness with which you have wielded "the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God" against the glaring perversions of justice and judgment in our land.

With many hopes and prayers that we may long enjoy the benefits of your pastoral labors, we remain, with much affection, your friends and parishioners,

EDWIN WEST,
J. F. WHIPPLE,
GERARDUS C KING,
EDWIN FERRIS,
and 48 others.

DR. CHEEVER'S REPLY.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, May 21, 1857.

My Dear Young Brethren and Friends:

I have great pleasure in thanking you from my heart for the very beautiful and gratifying testimonial of your affection and esteem. It is the more grateful to me, because I am permitted to receive it not only as a proof of your sympathy in my theoretical views of the freedom of the pulpit, but your willingness and desire to have me put those views into practice, in regard to the great reigning iniquity of our nation. I knew I was not mistaken. The young men are with me in their enthusiasm for freedom, and their hatred for Slavery, for Christ's sake who makes us free.

I dedicated my discourses on the sin of Slavery to the young men of my own congregation, for I was sure they would stand by me. They do. I thank them for it, and seeing them firm, I thank God and take courage.

May the blessing of the God of Israel rest upon you all! And may your hearts' desire in the freedom of our whole country, and of all races in it, in God's good time be accomplished.

With grateful and affectionate regard, your obliged friend and Pastor, GEORGE B. CHEEVER.

To Messrs. Edwin West, M. D., J. F. Whipple, Gerardus C. King, Edwin Ferris, and others.

THE GREAT HOTEL MEETING.—The Herald had the exclusive news yesterday of a great meeting of the hotel-proprietors, at which "all the leading hotels were represented." They transacted important business, it said, and adjourned to some time in June. The meeting really was in this wise: Three gentlemen, the proprietors of the Astor House, New-York, and Clarendon, finding themselves together at the St. Nicholas, sat down with its proprietor to a bottle of the best wine and a bundle of the finest cigars in the house. As they sat they naturally talked not only of the Burdell reward and the Police Commissioners, but the price of butter, and eggs, and beef too. One suggested facetiously that they unite and buy a farm, raise their own pigs and chickens, and lay their own eggs; but the majority urged that at the present prices of farms they would have to put the price of board at $5 a day to pay for the economy. When the bottle was empty they put on their hats, but did not adjourn to some time in June.

FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.—The annual meeting of the Hicksite branch of the Society of Friends began in this City on Saturday last, in their new meeting-house in Twenty-seventh-street, between the Sixth and Seventh avenues. This is a neat edifice, constructed of brick and brown stone, for the use of the Rose and Downing street Societies, who have united, and was opened for services on last New-Year's day. On Sunday there was a large attendance, and among the speakers were JOSEPH FAULKS, of Philadelphia; SAMUEL TOWNSEND, of Baltimore, and W. W. DORAN, of Mount Holly, N. J. The business meeting commenced on Monday, and will last most of the week.

☞ The proprietors of the Collins' Line of European Steamers have chartered the new steamship Columbia, Capt. BERRY, for a trip to Liverpool and back, sailing hence Saturday, June 6, supplying the place of the Baltic, which has been temporarily withdrawn for alteration and repairs.

Broadway Theatre.

An interesting experiment was made here on Monday, and repeated last night, namely, the illumination of the house by an electro galvanic apparatus, recently patented by Mr. GARDINER. The process is simple; two wires connected with a battery are attached to each separate burner; one of the wires is tipped with platina, which, by the action of the electric fluid, becomes red hot, and thus ignites the gas. When the invention has been perfected it will be of great practical utility. Whole cities can be lighted instantaneously, and all the danger and trouble attending the illuminating process in public places of amusement entirely avoided. At present, however, it is defective. It fails to ignite all the burners, with absolute certainty, and is far from being instantaneous in its operation. This may arise from an insufficient battery, but whatever the cause the invention can make no decided impression on the common sense of the public until it is remedied. The escape of gas which occurred before the majority of the burners were lighted last night, created anything but a pleasant sensation.

An experiment similar to the present (except in the arrangement of the wires) was made with far more instantaneous effect at the Polytechnic Institution, London, many years ago, by Dr. BACHOFFNER or Prof. ILKIN. The principle is not new. Mr. GARDINER'S patent probably depends on its application for practical purposes, and as such is worthy of examination by the scientific.

Personal.

We have received from Dr. GUILMETTE the following note in correction of certain statements of the Boston Bee, copied into our columns. It sets forth the facts of the much-talked-of difficulty:

At the commencement of my engagement with the Pyne & Harrison Company, Miss LOUISA PYNE was suffering from dimination of general volume of the voice, and a total loss of three notes of its upper register, consequent upon a highly scrofulous condition of the body. It was an affection of long standing, which had been variously and unsuccessfully treated, both in Europe and this country. Miss PYNE, without any personal solicitation on my part, placed herself entirely under my charge for vocal hygiene, and received, as was necessary, daily visits for the space of nearly four months.

Mr. HARRISON'S difficulty was also chronic—of nine years duration, and consisted in partial paralysis of the nerves of sensibility of the veil of the palate and a portion of the pharynx. He also placed himself formally under my medical care, and remedies somewhat more costly than "a box of lozenges and a friendly gargle," were lavishly applied to him for many weeks, almost at the end of every operatic act. By these unremitting attentions to both their cases, was the Theatre actually prevented from being closed on several occasions.

To such as may desire further evidence of the truth of the foregoing statements, I would commend a perusal of the New York Musical World of the present week.

Yours, truly,
CHAS. GUILMETTE, M. D.

On the last trip of the Cunarder Niagara from Boston, there was a liberal emptying of passengers' purses. Among the company were Bishop SMITH and wife, of Kentucky, whose expenses were defrayed by the parishioners of their diocese, but fellow-passengers who made friends with the Bishop, thinking a few more dollars wouldn't injure him materially, made up a purse of $500 for him before landing. The Bishop immediately instituted devotional exercises. In the second cabin of the steamer, meanwhile, there was a widow whose husband was lost at the burning of the Indiana on Lake Erie, and who was returning to her husband's mother in England. The passengers made up another purse for her, which amounted to $200.

A small youth, of light mulatto hue, flattered himself one day last week with the hope of running away from the Old Dominion and coming to New-York, and to this end concealed himself on board the Roanoke, but was summarily fished out and sent ashore. He was only 12 years old, but had been sharp enough to provide himself with a day's provisions, and pens, paper and postage stamps, the latter with the view of making a little statement of the result of his adventure, for the benefit of friends at home.

THOMAS H. HUBBARD died at Utica on the 22d instant. He was the son of Rev. BELA HOWARD, and was educated at Yale College, where he graduated in the class of 1799. As soon as he was admitted to the bar he settled in the practice of his profession at Hamilton, Madison County, where he continued to reside until 1823, when he removed to Utica. While Mr. HUBBARD was in Madison he was Surrogate for ten years. He was a member of the House of Representatives of the United States during the Fifteenth and Seventeenth Congresses.

Letters from England state the sculptor CRAWFORD had been in London a week, under the care of Dr. FELL. Mr CRAWFORD had endured great pain during his journey from Paris, but his family are encouraged by the assurances of the physician that, without promising a cure, he should not have recommended Mr. C.'s coming to London unless he had good reason to hope for one. A few weeks will decide the case.

A Colony of New-Englanders, headed by a Congregational clergyman of Massachusetts, are preparing to emigrate to Iowa the present season, after the old Plymouth fashion. They have chosen and purchased a tract in the southwestern part of the State, in Adams and Adair Counties, and intend to have a settlement with schools, churches, libraries, lyceums, presses and other social, literary and religious advantages.

Friend JOHN HUNT, a Quaker preacher, held forth in Philadelphia one evening last week, for the special benefit of the butchers and victuallers. He told them he had a mission of love to them, having been, in a manner, raised amongst them, for his father was an extensive grazier, fed many cattle, and had much dealing with the butchers.

A cabinet factory was burned down recently in the town of Palmyra, N.Y.; but a number of the leading business men of the village, taking into consideration the injuries that the stoppage of the establishment would inflict upon the prosperity of the place, have united and raised the sum of $2,500, which they propose to advance to the firm in order to reëstablish it.

Massachusetts clergymen seem to be in a bad way. The Boston Bee states that a committee appointed by the New England Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, report that the Rev. D. L. GEAR, of Lynn, has, in their opinion, been proved guilty of lying, fornication and forgery.

In a few days the corner-stone of an elegant Episcopal Church will be laid at South Amboy, on the property given for the purpose by the late JOHN C. STEVENS. The cost of the building will be $12,000, and Mr. STEVENS provided in his will for a payment of $600 annually to sustain the rector in charge.

Rev. HENRY M. WOOD, of New-Hampshire, late United States Consul at Beirut, Syria, returned home by the last steamer from Europe, having left Beirut April 4. Obituary.

Hon. ANDREW P. BUTLER, United States Senator from South Carolina, died at his residence in that State on Monday last, at an advanced age, and after a long illness. His disease was dropsy of the abdomen. Mr. BUTLER was appointed United States Senator by the Executive of South Carolina, in 1847, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. McDUFFIE, and continued in that office un il his death. His term would have expired in 1851. Before his appointment to the Senate, Mr. BUTLER occupied a seat on the South Carolina Bench, and fulfilled the duties of that station with honor. On entering the Senate, Mr. BUTLER was made Chairman of the Judiciary Committee of that body. In politics he claimed to be an Old Federalist, but his public course while in the National Legislature, marked with the vehemence and lack of prudence which marked his character, partook of the peculiarities of the "fire-eaters" and South Carolina had no occasion to complain of his want of devotion to her interests. Personally, Mr. BUTLER was a man of fine presence, and his genial manners and kindly disposition secured him many friends. The unhappy position in which Senator BUTLER was placed by the assault, ostensibly in his defence, made by his nephew BROOKS upon Senator SUMNER, is supposed to have contributed towards the fatal termination of his disorder.

The late ORSON PRATT, one of the leading men among the Mormons, was the right hand man of BRIGHAM YOUNG, and ranked next to that individual in tact and ability. He was killed at Van Buren, Arkansas, last week, by a man whose wife he had seduced, and with whom and her children he was on his way to Utah when overtaken by the husband. PRATT was an "original" Mormon, having been one of the first to join JOSEPH SMITH, but subsequently went to California, where he became a member of the Vigilance Committee. He had traveled extensively in Great Britain, Denmark, Sweden, Germany and elsewhere, and made the best of the opportunities afforded him for proselyting.

Mr. HENRY PRATTEN, of Indiana, who died recently at Mt. Vernon, in that State, was engaged in making a geological survey of Illinois, in connection with Dr. NORWOOD. Mr. PRATTEN resided in Mount Vernon many years, supporting himself by shoemaking, and pursuing his scientific studies during his leisure hours.

MARINE MATTERS.

THE UNITED STATES FRIGATE MINNESOTA—This vessel, which is to carry Mr. REED, the newly-appointed Minister to China, will probably set sail from Philadelphia to-day. She stops at Norfolk, in order to take on board a number of cannon now lying in the Gosport Navy Yard. Her entire battery will weigh 180 tons, not including two brass howitzers, mounted on wheels, which are adapted for use in the ship's boats, in cutting out expeditions, and similar service. She is a three-decked ship, pierced for sixty guns: she will carry on this cruise forty-two, as follows: 26 nine-inch guns, 14 eight-inch, and 2 ten-inch pivot guns. Those upon the upper deck are of recent invention. They are called Dalgrene's guns, after Captain DALGRENE, the head of the Ordnance Department, by whom they were designed. The two pivot guns are of immense size, each of them, with their carriage and slide, weighing 2,160 pounds. The slide is a stupendous frame-work mounted on wheels, which, by running upon brass swedes enables the gun to be fired in four different directions without changing the position of the ship. Eighteen men are required to work this huge instrument of devastation.

The apartments to be occupied by Hon. WM. B. REED, U. S. Minister to China, are upon the after part of the spar-deck, in the immediate stern of the ship. The windows give an ample view on either side the rudder. The entire accommodations, consisting of four rooms, comprise an area of 59 by 43 feet, the principal saloon or cabin being 25 feet by 22; the others are the library and two sleeping rooms. All are painted in white, with gilt mouldings. The furniture is of black walnut, consisting of sofas, tables, bedsteads, bookcases, etc., all of which were made at the Navy-Yard.

A new cabin is being erected on the upper deck for Capt. DUPONT, which will correspond in everything with that occupied by the Minister.

The following is the list of officers:

Captain, SAMUEL F. DUPONT; First Lieutenant, Wm. B. Renshaw; Second Lieutenant, A. G. Clay; Third Lieutenants, James M. Duncan, C. C. Simms, Colville Territ; Purser, Robert Pettel; Surgeon, Robert T. Barry; Passed Assistant Surgeon, Charles Martin; Assistant Surgeon, H. L. Snelden; Acting Master, J. O. Chaplin; Chief Engineer, Michael Quinn; First Assistant Engineer, Jas. H. Warner; Second Assistant Engineer, F. B. C. Stump; Third Assistant Engineers, Wm. Frick, Jr., Charles Shroeder, A. J. Kunsted, Wm. H. Hunt; Boatswain, Geo. Smith; Gunner, Jonathan M. Ballard; Carpenter, John Southwick; Sailmaker, George T. Lozier; Marine Officers, Brevet Major G. H. Terrett, Lieut. Edward Jones.

The whole crew will number about 700.

Owing to her heavy draft of water, the Minnesota cannot approach nearer than within 18 miles of Canton, while the same cause will keep her 60 miles off the port of Pekin, and 40 miles off that of Shanghae.

The Board of Naval Engineers, which has been in session for the past two weeks at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, has adjourned. The following gentlemen have been admitted into the Navy, as third assistant engineers: Wm. P. Deganne, E. A. D. Duplain, Thos. Crenin, Samuel Savage, Jos. H. Warrington, of Pennsylvania; Francis J. Levering, N. B. Hitting, Wm. R. Sehley, of Maryland; Chas. C. Kid, Benjamin C. Crampton, of New-York; J. B. Houston, George S. Bright, Wm. L. Walter, George T. Houston, of the District of Columbia; Eben Hoyt, of Massachusetts; William H. Ring, of Virginia; and John Johnson, of Delaware.

MUTINY ON BOARD OF VESSELS.—Last night a mutiny occurred on board of the brig Vino, lying in the North River, bound to the Coast of Africa. Information was sent this morning to Capt. M. MURRAY of the First Ward Police, who immediately dispatched Lieut. DALTON and five men, who arrested the whole of the crew and took them before the U. S. Marshal, but no witnesses appearing, they were all acquitted. The Second Mate is badly injured. A new crew has been shipped.

A telegraphic dispatch to ELWOOD WALTER, from Halifax, dated Monday, states that the ship Robert L. Lane, at Shelburne, N. S., is out of danger the water being reduced below the keelson. The Underwriters have dispatched the steam-tug Wm. H. Webb to bring the ship to New-York. She left yesterday.

The clipper bark White Squall, built at New-York, three years old, was sold to-day, at the Merchants' Exchange, by THOMAS VETCH, per order of United States Marshal, for $10,300—purchased by WM. TYSON.

A fight occurred among the sailors of the ship Emerald Isle, which arrived from Liverpool yesterday morning.

Advance Wages to Seamen.

NEW-YORK, Monday, May 25, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In an editorial article in your paper this morning, on the subject of "Advance Wages to Seamen," you state that the merchants had anticipated the movements of the Chamber of Commerce in this matter.

In this statement you overlook the fact, that the meeting of merchants was called by the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, who are coöperating with the merchants in this movement.

Very truly, your obedient servant,

P. PERIT,

Chairman of the Com. of the Chamber of Commerce.

The Paterson Gas Company.

PATERSON, May 22d, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR,—A communication having appeared in your issue of the 16th inst., over the signature "JOHN CARTWRIGHT, Superintendant Paterson Gas Company," to which my attention has just been directed, and deeming a few brief remarks to be proper, I take the liberty of asking a small space in your columns for that purpose. The circumstance referred to in Mr. C's note was the rendition of a verdict in my favor for twenty-five dollars damages against the Gas Company, in one of our justices' courts. The cause of action was the refusal by the Company to supply me with necessary gas, on the ground that an account, due by the previous occupants of the house remained unpaid. Mr. CARTWRIGHT takee occasion to indulge in a very ill-timed sneer as regards the jury in question. He says: with juries of gas consumers, there is no difficulty in gaining such a verdict." Does he mean to infer that a jury of twelve respectable men are to be found capable of committing perjury by finding a false or partial verdict, simply because they happen to be gas consumers. Does not Mr. C. know that most of the jurors so sneered at were respectable citizens of Paterson and the neighborhood, for years before we were favored with his august presence amongst us. But still more: it happened that it was not a jury of gas consumers, there being only three upon the jury. "But no doubt the Court ou the appeal of the Gas Company will reverse the judgment." Well, we shall see in proper time whether such will be the case or not; but Mr. CARTWRIGHT will remember that the appeal, if tried at all, will be before a jury, the vast majority of whom will be gas consumers. Again he must remember that a second judgment for forty dollars has been rendered against the company, by another justice, and without the intervention of any jury at all. Is that magistrate also a gas consumer, and consequently a prejudiced and corrupt judge? If so, I should like to be enlightened, as he is one who will sit on the hearing of the appeal.

As to the statement that the former bill was paid before turning the gas on my premises, I am loath to contradict the assertion, although I have abundant reason to doubt its veracity. Be that as it may, however, I do know, that it was not paid either by me or by any person on my behalf or with my knowledge or consent.

I am Sir, your ob'd'nt serv't.

JOHN BRADY.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

The Brown and Robinson Difficulty.

The Lawrence Herald of Freedom of May 16, has an attack upon Gov. ROBINSON of Kansas, growing out of the difficulty which lately occurred between that gentleman and G. W. BROWN, the editor of the Herald. BROWN, in reply to Gov. ROBINSON'S assertion that he (BROWN,) while a prisoner at Lecompton, proposed to sell out the Free-State Party, says:

"If we had done as ROBINSON alleges, we should have been guilty of precisely the same act ROBINSON was guilty of the year previous when Shawnour's Militia was surrounding Lawrence. The difference was, he claims that LANE made SHANNON drunk, then he agreed to be subservient to the laws, and Mr JONES declares, even pledged himself to furnish JONES a posse whenever he wished to execute a process against the people of Kansas, and all for the purpose of inducing the Missourians to withdraw their forces from before the town, and not destroy it. If any man in Kansas has been guilty of a more open and direct effort in that direction he deserves hooting from the Territory. This subject is an unpleasant one to us, and one we have no desire to follow. Because we thought ROBINSON had no right to voluntarily assume an office which he had resigned, has all this falsehood and scandal been heaped upon us. If the Free-State Party shall suffer by the exposures which shall follow, let the censure rest on him and him only who commenced the assault."

A spicy correspondence has passed between the same Mr. G. W. BROWN and Mr. G. DOUGLAS BREWERTON, in reference to the same subject. Mr. BROWN writes to BREWERTON from Lawrence, under date of May 13, requesting him to observe that a severe fight has sprung up between Governor ROBINSON and the editor of the Herald of Freedom, and asking a testimony from BREWERTON to BROWN's firmness, courage, and inclination to show up ROBINSON, BROWN's letter says ROBINSON "stands convicted of being an unmitigated liar," and desires BREWERTON to "watch the development." Mr. BREWERTON replies in a long letter, declining to hunt up or publish statements derogatory to the personal character of Governor ROBINSON, but expressing an ardent desire to pitch into him politically. In conclusion, Mr. BROWN, himself, is chidden for stirring up bad blood and reviving hateful memories, by the publication of a history of the past difficulties. And so ends the correspondence.

Character of the Spring Emigration to Kansas.

An Ossawatomie correspondent of the St. Louis Democrat says of the Spring emigration:

"For three months past emigration has been flowing in upon us in an unceasing tide. Every quarter section within many miles has its claimant, and in most instances its occupant. Where the quarter is not really occupied, it is because the claimant is off at work at a neighbor's, endeavoring to accumulate the means for its preemption. This being the case, it gives a male population of great proportionate strength, and, of consequence, of great working capacity; in fact, I do not believe there can be found another country on the face of the globe of the same relative working capacity. The natural results of this will be that we can accomplish more labor and push forward more improvements than any community of the same number under the sun. I think the result will prove the theory correct.

The character of the population we are receiving this Spring ranges far above the level of frontier settlers. Instead of a poor, thriftless crew, floating off here to find homes and a shelter from advancing civilization, we have a continuel influx of men of the highest mental, moral and physical worth. The thriftless horde that are commonly found on the border, appear to realize that Kansas was no place for them, and have stayed away, while in their stead we have men of willing muscle and noble daring—men who have resolved to hew out for themselves homes amid the unusual peril that surrounds our position and to plant the institutions of a high civilization around their at the start.

Never has there been such a rush for any new country as there has been this Spring for Kansas. Many, undoubtedly, will not stay; many came as mere adventurers and to 'look,' while the great mass design to remain. Speaking about adventurers, or speculators, or the common land shark, this is a poor paradise for them. Most of the land, thus far, has been thrown open for preemption, instead of being offered at public sale. The effect of this is, to secure all the choice lands to the actual settlers, who are rapidly securing their claims by a United States duplicate. Nearly all have brought more or less money with them, which makes the market easier here than in many places in the States. In fact, money is abundant with us, and likely to continue so, though Uncle Sam may fleich a large amount from us as a guarantee for our future homes.

One very noticeable difference in our way of improvement of the country, as compared with our near neighbors, is the amount of labor-saving machinery that we have already among us. Ordinarily the frontiersman has had to put up his cabin of rough logs, and wait many years for the saw-mill to come to his assistance; but in Kansas it is the first thing thought of, and scarcely does the woodman's axe resound in the forest, before the buzzing of the circular saw is also heard. The lathe and planing machines soon follow, while some ingenious yankee comes along, and not even satisfied that the steam should escape freely after accomplishing all this labor, constructs a shingle machine, puts a steam-box over the exhaust-pipe, steams his blocks, and with his machine cuts out shingles at the rate of a thousand an hour.

Intense Excitement at Palermo, Kansas.

Correspondence St. Louis Republican.

Our little sister, after an existence of nearly two years in quiet and prosperity, was shocked by a serious and unexpected disturbance on Saturday, the the 9th inst., and her whole community were thrown into a state of most intense excitement. ALEXANDER and SAMUEL JAMIESON, who had obtained some notoriety as aids of Gen. LANE, in his Northern invasion of Kansas, during the wars, went to Palmyra, on Saturday morning, in a peaceable way. In a little while, a dispute arose between SAMUEL JAMIESON and WM. PALMER. That was adjusted. Then there was an altercation between SAMUEL JAMIESON and ED. PALMER. FRANK MAHAN interposed for the purpose of making peace, when SAMUEL JAMIESON drew a revolver and fired at him. MAHAN then went into his store, and as ED. PALMER was following, SAMUEL JAMIESON fired two shots at him, one of which struck just above his right knee, in the hind part of the leg, and passed around the bone to the front, and lodged just above the knee-cap. Ed. PALMER limped into the store-room, seized a double-barrelled gun and shot SAMUEL JAMIESON in the breast and shoulder. JAMIESON fell and fainted. ALEX. JAMIESON then drew two revolvers and shot at those who were in the store, but the doors were immediately closed, and he was soon arrested by Sheriff NEWMAN, but on trial was acquitted.

The South Ungrateful to its Kansas Friends.

From the Atchison Squatter Sovereign, May 9.

The office of the Squatter Sovereign has passed into the hands of other publishers. In making this transfer we experience no inconsiderable degree of reluctance, but we are thoroughly convinced that it is the only step we could take to save ourselves from great pecuniary sacrifice. This we would be unable to sustain and publish a paper. We have repeatedly called upon the South for aid, and our response has been a moneyless one. We were at last reduced to one of two alternatives—to surrender upon advantageous terms, or to be carried by storm, and our arms and equipments become the properties of war. We have chosen the former, believing that no just reason existed why we should longer expose ourselves as an emaciated specimen of the ingratitude of the South.

Miscellaneous News.

The County Courts will appoint the Judges of the Election in the places where they have determined that elections shall be held. The County Courts "did not remain in session from the 10th of April till the 1st of May," inclusive, to purge the lists. In some places the Court had short and irregular sessions, in other places they had none. In only one or two cases were the lists of the census so taken, posted up for inspection until after the time in which corrections were to be made. In no precinct was there "three notices in public places."

Acting Governor STANTON sometimes talks about enforcing the laws, and collecting the taxes. At other times he speaks in a more conservative manner, and wishes to avoid all causes of difficulty until Gen. WALKER arrives. He talks very largely of what Mr. WALKER will do when he comes; that he will do so and so, regardless of all consequences. The people of Kansas have heard a good deal of such threats before. Governor WALKER has not yet arrived, but is looked for.

A force of dragoons, with artillery, went from Fort Leavenwurth, a few days ago, to fight the Cheyenne Indians. The latter were reported to be between the Republican fork of Kansas and the Blue, and armed for a fight. Fresh troops have been arriving in the Territory and are stationed at Forts Leavenworth and Riley.

Mr. STANTON has just returned from Lawrence, where he has been for two days. Several other Pro-Slavery men and persons calling themselves "Democrats," went with him. Their design was to induce the Free-State men to participate in the election and to discover what line of policy the Free-State men are pursuing.

The reward of $1,000, offered by the Mayor of Brunswick, Ga., for the arrest of CHARLES MOORE, the murderer of J. R. WOON, keeper of the Oglethorpe House, in Brunswick, has resulted in his capture at Centerville, Ga. The reward was at once paid to his captors, and the culprit lodged in jail.

ANOTHER STARTLING TRAGEDY.

Elder Pratt, the Mormon, Killed—Seduction of a Wife in California—She Deserts her Husband—Steals Away her Children, and is Sealed as the Ninth Concubine to her Debaucher.

From the St. Louis Democrat, 25th.

We have to record to-day another painful narrative of Mormon iniquity, seduction and villainy, followed up in this instance, however, as it will be seen, by a summary vengeance from the injured husband. The account which we publish below is taken from the Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer, and gives in brief the facts of the case pretty much as they have occurred. From the Fort Smith Herald and the New-Orleans Bulletin we also have confirmation of the whole story, up to the last act in the drama, the tragic death of Elder PRATT, the Mormon apostle. Thus it will be seen what utter ruin and devastation have been wrought in a virtuous family by the designing arts of an saintly scoundrel and the lures of a false and licentious faith. Here is what the Van Buren Intelligencer records of the termination of this affair:

TRAGICAL.—It is with regret that we have to chronicle the homicide, committed in our vicinity on Wednesday last, by Mr. HEBER H. MCLEAN, late of San Francisco, California, upon the person of a Mormon Preacher. More than all do we deplore the melancholy affair that lead to its commission. The deceased, whose name was PARLEY PARKER PRATT, was a man of note among the Mormons, and judging from his diary and his letter to Mrs. MCLEAN, he was a man of more than ordinary intelligence and ability. He had been a Preacher and Missionary of the Mormons at San Francisco, California, where he made the acquaintance of Mrs. MCLEAN, whom he induced to embrace the Mormon faith.

She was at that time living with her husband, HEBER H. MCLEAN; they were happy and prosperous until she made the acquaintance of PRATT, and embraced the Mormon faith. She is the mother of three children by MCLEAN, two boys and a girl, and seems to be an intelligent and interesting lady; converses fluently, and with more grace and ease than most ladies. About two years ago, and soon after she became a convert to Mormonism, she made an attempt to abduct two of her children to Utah, but was detected and prevented by her brother, who was then in California, and residing with his brother in-law, Mr. MCLEAN. She soon after, however, found means to elope with said PRATT to Salt Lake, where it is said that she became his ninth wife.

After the elopement of Mrs. MCLEAN, her parents, who reside near New-Orleans, wrote to Mr. MCLEAN, in California, to send the children to them. He did so. Several months after this Mr. MCLEAN received news that his wife had been to her father, in New-Orleans, and eloped with the two young children. He immediately left San Francisco for New Orleans, and, on arriving at the house of his father-in-law, he learned from them that Mrs. MCLEAN had been there, and, after an ineffectual effort to convert her father and mother to Mormonism, she pretended to abandon it herself, and so far obtained the confidence of her parents as to induce them to entrust her in the City of New Orleans with the children; but they soon found she had betrayed their confidence, and eloped with the children.

They then wrote to MCLEAN, in San Francisco, who, upon the receipt of their letter, went to New-Orleans, and learning from them the above facts in relation to the affair, immediately started in pursuit of his children. He went to New York and then to St. Louis. While in St. Louis he learned that the woman and children were in Houston, TEXAS. On his arrival in Houston, he found that his wife had left some time before his arrival to join a large party of Mormons en route for Utah. He then returned to New-Orleans, and from there to Fort Gibson, in the Cherokee nation, with the expectation of intercepting his wife and children at that point.

On arriving at Fort Gibson, and while there, he found letters in the Post-Office to his wife from PRATT, some of which were mailed at St. Louis, and others at Flint Post Office, Cherokee nation. We are unable to give the contents of these letters with particularity, but they contained the fact that MCLEAN was on the look-out for her and the children, and that they were betrayed by the apostates and gentiles, and advising her to be cautious in her movements, and not to let herself be known only to a few of the saints and elders. MCLEAN then, upon affidavit made by himself, obtained a writ from the United States Commissioner at this place for their arrest, and succeeded in getting them arrested by the United States Marshal. They were brought to this place for trial, and after an examination before the Commissioner, were discharged.

PRATT, as soon as released, mounted his horse and left the city. MCLEAN soon after obtained a horse and started in pursuit, and overtook PRATT about eight miles from the city, and shot him. PRATT died in about two hours after receiving the wound. This is a plain narrative of the facts as we heard them from the most reliable resources, which we give to our readers without comment, as we feel that we are unable to do so with justice to all parties. But deeply do we sympathize with MCLEAN in the unfortunate condition in which Mormon villainy and fanaticism has placed him.

In addition to the foregoing, we have been placed in the possession of some of the letters from Elder PRATT to his victim after she had returned from Salt Lake, in order to get the children from their custody in New-Orleans. She had succeeded in so doing, and had fled to TEXAS. The letter is addressed "Mrs. LUCY R. PARKER, by P. PARKER PRATT, from near Fort Gibson, Cherokee nation," dated April 14, 1857.

"DEAR ELEANOR—M'LEAN is in St. Louis; he has offered a reward for your discovery, or your children or me. The apostates have betrayed me and you. I had to get away on foot, and leave all to save myself. If you come to Fort Gibson, you can hire a messenger and send him to RILEY PERRYMAN'S mill; and let him inquire for WASHINGTON N. COOK, Mormon missionary, and when he has found him he will soon tell where Elder PRATT—PARKER is. Do not let your children or any friend know that I am in this region, or anywhere else on the earth; except it is an elder from Texas who is in your confidence, and even him under the strictest charge of keep you it

"If you send a messenger to Perryman's mill for Elder COOK in order to find me, send a note addressed to WASHINGTON N. COOK. Everybody knows the place. He may live a few miles distant, but the folks at Riley Perryman's mill know where he is. And if they can be made sensible that it requires immediate action, some of them can go and find him. Your messenger can leave the note at RILEY PERRYMAN'S, or with Elder GEORGE BRIGGS, there, and return, but you must state in the note where you can be found, and Elder COOK will probably call on you before he can have time to see me, as I may be some days' journey away, for I don't much expect you at Fort Gibson, as I don't believe you received my last letter mailed at St. Louis, March 4th, and addressed as usual to the usual place. Elder COOK knows all, and you can trust him with all necessary information. When I know that you and the children are safe and your circumstances, I will know what to do.

Be sure not to let the Texas company know anything, for all the frontiers are watched, and some of them may betray you there. I must hide you or pass you some other way.

Pray much. Be still and wise. I have made use of some of the late alterations in the alphabet. I am well, And your own ——————"

Other letters we may, perhaps, publish to morrow, together with some further particulars as the lateness of the hour and the want of space compels us to withhold them at present.

The Last Mormon Hegira—Departure of Mormons from Illinois.

From the Alton Courier, May 21.

The Mormons of Alton have about all left, "bags and baggage," for the Upper Missouri, thence to take their weary march across the Plains. The most of them intend to go to a new region of the Salt Lake country, some 200 miles from the Great City—to "the wilderness," as they term it—and there found a new town. A small number, only, go to the city of BRIGHAM YOUNG. The latter band started from here one month later than the former. At New-Florence, a town near St. Joseph, they are to be organized into companies, each two or three persons to one hand-cart, and with some ox-teams following, to carry the heavy luggage, and the aged and feeble; they set off upon their march as soon as the Spring weather permits. We are unable to state precisely how many persons or families have thus left our city, but have heard them estimated at 120 souls, and some 25 families. There is a large Mormon emigration, this Spring, of people who have lived in the various States during the Winter past, and whose eyes should have been opened somewhat to the real state of things in Utah.

The Peru Chronicle says that one day last week over 400 Mormons passed through that place on their way to Salt Lake City. We notice by the Rock Island papers that about 300 passed there about the same time, destined for the city of abominations, the "Outpost of Zion" at Cincinnati has been cleaned out by the citizens, and will shortly be on its way to Salt Lake City several hundred strong. The Cleveland Plain Dealer of a recent date says that about 2,500 will leave that city this Spring for the same place.

This infatuated people have left Alton, and forever—and what have our philanthropic citizens done towards enlightening them, and causing them to abandon their perilous enterprise? Nothing, alas? This question is extremely applicable to those of our good folks who make themselves quite uncomfortable about the negro and his "citizenship."

SCENES AT THE MINT.—THE NEW CENT.—The new cent is so attractive that everybody is hoisering the Mint with aume varying from a quarter dollar to fifty dollars, to effect an exchange for the pretty offering of 1857. So great was the jam, that yesterday morning it was found necessary to call in the aid of the police to enforce the good old barber-shop rule, "First come, first served." The Director of the Mint now finds himself unable to keep up the supply—as there are other cities beside Philadelphia to be accommodated, and will, therefore, suspend the further issue for a few days. There are a large quantity already in the hands of our citizens, and they will soon become circulated ubiquitously. The demand for the coin in small quantities yesterday was so lively, that the newsboys dropped their regular avocation and "got up a corner," in selling the new cents to the curious at the rate of three for sixpence. Go ahead inventive, those newsboys.—Philadelphia North American, 27th.

Hon. D. S. Dickinson's Speech at the Washington Serenade.

From the Washington Star.

MY FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: I can make no return for this testimonial of regard for a private citizen but the sincere tribute of a grateful heart.

Upon the expiration of my term as a Senator in Congress, more than six years since, I returned to my home with more pleasing anticipations than I had left it, and have since been devoted to professional and rural pursuits with no intervals of relaxation. Finding that a few days could be borrowed from accustomed avocations, I came with that portion of my household which a Providence that "doeth all things well" has spared to me, and a party of family friends, to revisit the political metropolis, and indulge the train of sad and pleasing memories which the changeful currents of life have presented for our contemplation. We came to see again the place where we had reared our children—where we had formed life-long friendships;—where we had enjoyed a generous hospitality and a sweet social communion;—where we had been associated with those who have gone to their rewards and repose,—the illustrious dead;—where we had so long and so faithfully been sustained and cheered by the valued and confiding friends who have remembered us in our seclusion and come hither to cheer and honor us again with their kindly greetings.

We have seen again that venerated Senate chamber, so redolent of stirring recollections, and bethought us of the once familiar voices which are now hushed forever. We have seen again the ancient Capitol, extending in its mighty magnificence and architectural grandeur to meet the increasing demands of a great and growing people; the early golden sunshine which we loved in other days beams again; the same spacious parks, the familiar walks, the bubbling fountains, the spreading trees, the shaded lawns, the green sunny slopes, the bright blooming flowers, and the glorious Potomac, are all here, and lift up their voices with numerous smiling friends to bid us welcome.

On every hand evidences are rising up, as if by magic, of increased wealth, enterprise, refinement and taste, rendering Washington worthy of the consecrated name it bears; worthy to be the Federal capital of a great family of free and independent States. That it may remain such forever is my ardent prayer; that every State may come here to mingle in the family communion with her sovereign, independent equality of right; that all may meet together like children of a common father, in the true spirit of the Constitution, and prosecute together their benign mission of liberty on earth—the freedom, equality and self-government of man.

In the humble public career to which allusion has been so kindly made, it was my highest ambition to sacrifice upon the altar of my country my choicest offerings. O, would that, in a cause so sacred, I had had other and choicer gifts to bestow. What was that public course, let history tell. I will only add, that were that course upon the absorbing questions of that day to be repeated, it would only be changed by pursuing the same subjects, in the same direction and in the same manner, with such increased force as a more abundant reflection and enlarged experience would ennble me to command.

Our country is enjoying unexampled prosperity, and our people demand repose from causeless agitation, either domestic or foreign. The fires of fanaticism at home are burning themselves out for lack of fuel, and a great, brave and intrepid people are satisfied that they can better advance the blessings of civilization and Christianity by cultivating the arts of peace, than by resorts to the sword.

An executive chief has recently been inaugurated to discharge the most honorable relations on earth, in whose wisdom, and in that of those he has chosen as his constitutional advisers, the great mass of the American people, in every section of the Union, have entire confidence—confidence that justice, firmness and moderation will characterize our intercourse with other nations—that the integrity of the Union will be preserved in the spirit of the Constitution; the rights of sovereign States maintained inviolate, and the people of the Territories maintained in the dearest privileges of the American citizen, good order and the constitutional guarantee of true self government.

No one has ever fully estimated the moral influences of the people of Washington upon the destinies of this country through the social relations of life, nor told how many sectional prejudices have been thus mitigated, how many errors corrected, how many lasting, valued friendships have been formed. And may this gentle, genial influence continue to diffuse its blessings throughout the entire Confederacy, and continue to strengthen the bonds of fraternal feeling which make a multitude one. May every star in the constellation shed its radiance upon every other, and may they vie with one another hereafter only in brightness and glory.

For myself and family and friends, I thank you cordially for the honor extended us, and shall look back upon it hereafter as one of the bright passages upon the page of life's history. We shall return to our home pleased and gratified with our brief visit, remembering that our lines have fallen here in pleasant places, and among each friends as few have ever had.

Excitement at Edwardsville, (Ill.)—Mob Violence Threatened.

From the Alton (Ill.) Courier, May 20.

Upon hearing of the gathering of a mob in Edwardsville, for the purpose of administering summary punishment to the three murderers of BAILO, and of the life-blood that they might be arraigned before the Court of Judge Lynch, we dispatched one of our assistants to the scene of action, for the purpose of gathering all the particulars of events as they occurred.

It appears that several hundred of the citizens of the southeastern part of this County, friends and acquaintances of the deceased, hearing that the prisoners were about to take a change of venue, determined to take them from the jail and hang them, without trial. This body of men was composed principally of Germans, fellow-countrymen of the murdered man, and were led on by two men named SMILEY and SAVAGE.

Between ten and eleven o'clock Monday the mob entered the town from the south on horses, in wagons, and on foot to the number of four hundred. The leaders and some of the other members of the gang bearing red and black flags, with which they marshaled on their blood thirsty companions.

As soon as sheriff JOB received intelligence of their approach, he proceeded to take steps for the protection of the jail. He had placed some twenty or thirty men in and about the jail, and provided them with such arms as could be procured, when the mob made a rush towards the building, headed by the leaders, SMILEY and SAVAGE, who each bore a flag. When the two leaders had approached as near as it was thought proper they should, the officers and some of the citizens who had resolved to sustain the law at all hazards, headed by Sheriff JOB, rushed upon and unhorsed them, taking from them their flags and their arms. Several others of those foremost in the ranks were unhorsed. This determined and bold action appeared to intimidate the remainder to some extent, though threats were still made and continued for a number of hours, the mob neither advancing nor retreating, during which time speeches were made by Messrs. GILLESPIE, METCALF, JOB and others, in English, and Mr. KRAFFT in German.

These speeches appeared to have a good effect, for soon after, the threats of the rioters began to be less frequent and less savage, and in half an hour the whole gang had left town.

From the Alton Courier, 22d.

The trial in the case of the People vs. GIPSON, BARBER and WATSON, for the murder of JACOB BOREK, was closed, and the case given to the Jury, at 8½ o'clock yesterday evening. After being out just forty minutes, the Jury returned, and rendered a verdict of "Guilty!" Mr. SAWYER entered a motion for a new trial, which, after argument, was allowed by the Court. The Germans from Highland and vicinity, and other friends of the deceased, were very much incensed in consequence of the new trial being granted, and the attack from the mob, for the purpose of seizing the prisoners and hanging them, in Judge Lynch's summary manner, was confidently expected last night or to day.

LEEDS, Esq., Auctioneer, New-York—SIR: I have in my possession the original and world-renowned statue of 'Powers' Greek Slave,' which was awarded to me as a prize by the Cosmopolitan Art Association some three years since. Not being able to retain so valuable a work, I have, at the suggestion of several friends, been induced to write you as to the policy of selling the statue by auction. Please inform me what you think of the plan, and whether in your opinion I would realize a good sum from the above mode of disposing of it, and oblige yours, &c., KATE GILLESPIE."

"NEW-YORK, May 10, 1857.

MRS. KATE GILLESPIE—Dear Madam: We have the pleasure of acknowledging yours of the 6th inst., and in reply beg leave to say that if the Statue in your possession is the original Greek Slave, by Hiram Powers, we have no hesitation in saying the —with proper publicity and the facilities enjoyed by ourselves for the sale of works of art—the Statue would realize for you a very satisfactory price. Very respectfully, &c.,

H. H. LEEDS & CO."

"BRADY'S BEND, Pa., May 17, 1857

H. H. LEEDS & Co.—Gentlemen: Your letter of the 10th is at hand. After due consideration I have concluded to risk the sale of the Slave at auction, and have accordingly had it shipped to you in charge of my friend Mr. B., who will call and arrange matters preliminary to the sale, and also place in your possession the proof of the genuineness of the statute over Mr. Powers' own signature. Trusting you will give the sale a wide publicity, and receive a good price for the marble beauty which I so reluctantly part with, I await the result with the greatest anxiety. Yours, truly, KATE GILLESPIE."

The above Statue will be placed on exhibition one week previous to the sale in the Rotunda of the Merchants' Exchange, and sold as above without reserve, presenting probably the only opportunity in a life-time for securing the greatest work of the most celebrated living sculptor.
